Natural resources in America are steadily being depleted as a result of this crisis. For example, in her book EarthRight, H. Patricia Hynes said Americans use 50 million tons of paper every year, which translates into the death of over 850 million trees annually. An aluminum can on the ground will stay there for another 500 years, while a glass bottle might still be littering the area in the year 3000.

Modern, technologically-advanced landfills accept all forms of solid waste; however, we are running out of sites to construct more landfills. In a 1988 survey by Newsday, 2,991 landfills out of this country's 8,802 have closed in the past five years due to environmental or space reasons.

Space is tight so disposal fees have risen. There is also fear of groundwater contamination. Methane, a flammable gas, is an unwelcome by-product of older landfills that do not have proper ventilation. Despite the new monitoring systems and high-tech construction techniques that modern landfills utilize, there is just little space left.

Trash incinerators are a major source of one of the most carcinogenic substances known, dioxin.

Cynthia Pollock wrote in a "Worldwatch" paper entitled Mining Urban Wastes: The Potential for Recycling that such toxic materials "are implicated in weakening the immune system, thereby making the body more susceptible to carcinogens and they have been shown to affect fetal development and cause chloracne, a skin disorder."

Pollack also notes that at this time, the United States has no federal guidelines for permissible dioxin levels. In addition, the toxic ash that incinerators produce still requires proper disposal.

The third method of managing solid waste that is increasingly gaining strong support from both legislators and environmentalists is recycling. This method converts wastes into useful products while reducing related air, land and water pollution. Recycling saves energy and money while

MassPIRG in support of Olver bill

Over 500 professors back Greenhouse Reduction bill

By AMY HENRY
Collegian Staff

Some 150 students gathered at the MassPIRG "student action" conference on Saturday for the presentation of over 500 signatures of economics and science professors collected by students for the support of the Greenhouse Reduction bill to a main sponsor, Senator John Olver (D-Amherst).

"With this bill we'll all be able to breathe a little easier as it would be reducing gases that create the greenhouse effect," Olver said.

MassPIRG is a non-profit, student-directed organization that educates and writes legislation on environmental and consumer issues.

Alan Nogee, program director of MassPIRG's energy policy said the academic signatures were collected to show that persons who really understand the bill support it.

According to Dan Sullivan, a member of the MassPIRG board of directors, "The Board of Directors unanimously elected to adopt energy as one of it's key campaigns. These five hundred endorsements are just the first step in a comprehensive campaign plan to increase public awareness, and bring energy issues to the forefront of the Massachusetts legislative agenda."

Students came from 28 MassPIRG chapters statewide to participate in several workshops on skills and issues including "Planning Successful Campaigns," "Pollution Prevention," "Recycling," "Developing leadership skills," and "Building Strong Coalitions."

Nogee said the main tenets of the bill include reducing the sales tax on new cars and light trucks which get above-average fuel efficiency to as low as zero percent, while raising the tax on gas-guzzlers.

According to Olver, the tax on gas guzzler's is the most controversial part of the bill. "Car dealers are worried that there will be a decrease in the sales of domestic cars. A requirement of the tax is that it stay in the 0-10 percent range."

"The bill would also provide developers of large new energy efficient buildings with bonuses, financed by assessments in inefficient new buildings," Nogee said.

"Energy security is best obtained from increased efficiency, and reduced dependance on oil imports, not from increased drilling, which temporarily feeds our addiction,

By AMY HENRY
Collegian Staff

Student leader Guy Glodis will host a talk show featuring University of Massachussetts student leaders from the "right" and "left" of politics tomorrow night.

According to Glodis, topics of discussion will include the removal of the Lesbian, Bisexual, and Gay Alliance seats from the Board of Governors, the Persian Gulf war and the restructuring of the Student Government Association.

Glodis said he is a Democrat despite his conservative stance on many issues and membership in the Republican club and Minuteman. Formerly a senator in the Student Government Association, Glodis is currently a Governor on the Board of Governors.

Glodis said, he wanted to have the talk show to have a place for students to discuss pertinent issues facing the student body.

"I believe since I've been at UMass the SGA has greatly deteriorated. I believe student leaders are ona seat on the commission.

There were allowances made for a possible conflict of interest, including having committee members leave the room when their applications were being discussed.

"There was open discussion on each application then a vote was taken, no member of coordinating was given special privileges. I think that the process was as fair as it could have been and I feel that the senate will approve the six appointments."

However, they did have the opportunity to vote for themselves and no allowances were made for that, according to Turco.

A Coordinating Committee member who wished to remain anonymous said that the committee was supposed to vote on the basis of the applications and nothing else.

"This, of course, did not happen because we elected people to this commission who had horrible applications," the source said. "[Applicant's name], who's application was filled out quickly and hardly and had little information to say that [the applicant] was qualified. [The applicant] kind of took it as a joke. I think that [the applicant] knew he was going to get on this commission ahead of time."

contributing to a cleaner environment.

On the average, it costs $30 per ton to recycle, $50 per ton to landfill waste and $65 to $75 per ton to incinerate. The bottom line is that recycling is the most cost-effective and productive means of handling waste. "Whereas raw materials are usually imported, recycling promotes local economic development," Pollack wrote.

If a recycling ethos replaces America's throwaway mentality, recycling may become an accepted, regular part of our everyday lives promoting a new environmental consciousness.

According to a Worldwatch Institute Report estimate, the United States spent $303 billion in 1990 protecting the country from military threats compared to $14 billion in protecting it from environmental threats.

Tens of billions of dollars are spent every year disposing solid wastes and cleaning up the environment which has been damaged by abusive consumption habits in the United States. Pollack said "in a capital-short world, faced with increasingly apparent natural limits, recycling provides immediate benefits and offers far greater potential."

She continues "the countries that successfully make the transition to a recycling society will have the healthiest environments and the strongest economies. Linking these national efforts will help to curb the processes now threatening the earth."

but leaves permanent scars on our environment," Olver said.

He added, "Electric utilities understand this, business understands this, and environmentalists certainly understand this. The million dollar question facing us today is why doesn't the White House understand this as well."

Olver said that the money being saved by the bill could be used for social programs that are currently being cut. "I have high hopes about getting the bill on the governor's desk this year to sign," he said.

ly concerned about their own personal agenda, " he said. "I'm trying to show that students not the SGA leaders will have control of their University."

According to Glodis, the talk show will allow the "silent majority that's been supressed by radical, one-sided leaders to have a voice."

"I don't think the majority of students care about the Lesbian, Bisexual and Gay seats and the Radical Student Union agenda," he said. "I think that what people do in their bedroom should be private but I think that elected leaders such as Barney Frank and Gerry Studds have proven that gays can get elected and don't need appointed seats."

In addition another purpose of the show is to highlight candidates for the fall SGA elections, Glodis said.

Featured guests on the show will include Student Trustee Angus McQuilken, Gov. Ted Maravelias, former Gov. Laura Silver, Gov. Edward Corrigan, Gov. Danny Cohen, Senator Jeff Turco and many others.

Glodis said he plans to divide up students from the "right" and "left" to discuss the three issues.

"There will be different opinions, all walks of life, for a showdown which could result in pandemonium," he said. "This has the potential to be more fun than Monster Trucks."

The talk show will take place at 7 p.m. in the Campus Center Auditorium.

EDITORIAL/OPINION

The opinions on this page are those of the individual writer or cartoonist and do not necessarily reflect the views of the Collegian or the University unless otherwise noted.

A victory for the American people

We murdered 200,000 Iraqi people.

Now, what?

Rally, protest, hold a vigil, have a teach-in, or write an editorial? None of it made a difference. Was it supposed to make a difference?

Maybe some of us are so full of ourselves that we thought we could make a difference by having an "intellectual" discussion of the facts, by criticizing the media, President Bush and the Pentagon. In the end it was all double-speak. We are hypocrites.

How does participating in the "right to dissent" in our system of democracy change anything? The system inherently stays the same. It fact we actually helped the system to work because we proved that dissent is tolerated by protesting, having teach-ins and writing editorials.

Are those of us who dissented somehow morally superior to everyone else?

Enough is enough.

Let's leave Bush, the Pentagon and the media alone. In the end we believe in and support their principles anyway.

Saddam Hussein is a dictator and deserves to die, right?

Third World people do not know what is best for their countries and themselves, right?

The United Nations should solve all international conflict, right?

Minu Sebastian

All Third World countries should be disarmed, right?

President Bush has served the interests of the American people. He has destroyed the military of our enemy. He has shown the rest of the world that if anyone dares to challenge the status quo, they will be destroyed. Now we can peacefully drive our cars, turn up our heat and "intellectualize" about the rest of the world.

One of the most revealing aspects of the war is that there is no distinction between the corporate executive, professor, student, media critic, and the rest of the "non-military" masses. We are all American citizens who benefit and support the system by participating in it.

Take the example of advertising executives and professors.

Advertising executives are sometimes criticized because they supposedly are ruthless and spend their time manipulating people.

On the other hand professors are intellectuals who teach us to look at ourselves critically. We learn to read, write and think through these people. What is different about these two types of people?

Nothing. Neither threaten the system. The advertising executive spends his/her time thinking of ways to outmanouver competitors. The professor thinks of ways to critically analyze the world.

In the larger scheme of things, both people are the same because neither one has the power to stop anything this country decides to do. In fact it would not be in the interest of professors or advertising executives to alter the system too much because then they de-legitimize themselves.

Soldiers and military officers are different because they risk their lives for us.

Some us supported the soldiers by wearing yellow ribbons.

Some of us supported the soldiers by whining about how terrible the system is.

Some of us supported the soldiers without doing or saying anything.

In the end we all believe in our country and stand by its principles.

It's time for all Americans everywhere to recognize who they are, stand with pride and remember that we can and will destroy anyone who challenges us.

We won the war.

Dozens of hot babes ON SALE NOW!!

Picture this: A shapely woman in a tinfoil minidress – so short that the hemline just grazes her chin. She's jumping in the air, I guess out of joy for something.

Picture this: A man opens up a bottle in the desert. A pool, an umbrella, and a babe in a thin strip of lycra appear.

Picture this: A man talks to his friend about what a great deal his new car is as they see a woman in a skintight minidress and spike heels swing her way to the car.

These are advertisements. One is for vodka, the other is for beer, and the last one is for a car.

These are advertisements. Advertisements are supposed to sell an object. But that's not all they sell.

Every time I see an ad, there's a good chance it will use a scantily-dressed woman in it to sell something. When she is fully clothed, she is still supposed to be seductive, no matter what the product may be.

Pamela McCarthy

We are not objects. We are not things. We are people, not ornaments. But it seems that advertisers, and the morons who advocate and make excuses for such ads, don't believe this one, simple fact. We are the trim and decoration for ads. We are the trophies for men in these ads. We are works of art for men to gaze at, admire, and own. But we are not people.

Every time someone complains about it, she is told one of several things: "Hey, it's what sells. It's terrible and I don't agree with it, but it works." "Just because some ads have women wear next to nothing doesn't mean they are sexist." "Come on, what's your problem? Where's your sense of humor?" And of course, my favorite, (simply because you need the IQ of a dead frog to come up with it): "You're just jealous because you don't measure up to the women in these ads."

Give me a break. First of all, the reason why I get ready to pummel Madison Avenue and the slime that makes these ads so successful (sorry guys, I'm not going to put all of the blame on corporate America) is that this is all I ever see. Magazines, billboards, television, and newspapers are infested with this crap. Hasn't it ever occurred to anyone that some women are fed up with it? It's not just a few ads. It's everywhere.

Women are consumers too. We drink beer. We like vodka. We drive cars. Yet, the ads for these products used us as ornaments, and assumed that only men would want to buy any of this stuff. Only men matter. Men are the only people that advertisers want to reach. This is strange, if advertisers want to make money. If they reached women, they may sell more. It can't just be the system, as messed up as it is. It's more than just that. It's attitudes.

When all you see are women in skimpy clothes and seductive poses, something is wrong. You can't tell me it's not sexist and expect me not to laugh in your face. Any system controlled by men, and made for men, showing women as ditzy bimbos is sexist. There is nothing funny or appealing about it to many of us. But I suppose that doesn't matter. This is, after all a man's world. It shouldn't matter to us that after fighting to get where we are today (second-instead of third-class citizenship) we are yet again slapped in the face. Ads like this tell me that it doesn't matter what I've done, how hard I work, or how smart I am. All I could ever amount to is that ornament in the ad.

I have one thing to say to the mental giants who believe that most of us are just jealous of the models in ads: Give it up. Dream on. There is nothing I want to do more than starve myself, pile on ten tons of makeup, and attain a pathological worry about my appearance. Please. Don't flatter yourselves.

Ads are supposed to give you a reason to buy the product. They are supposed to tell you why the product is worth your money. They sell, and it's not just products that are sold.

Women are sold, also.

Administration goofs

The new security system is for our own protection - according to the administration and Housing Services. Those annoying noises that I hear in at 8 a.m around Orchard Hill are warnings that persons are illegally exiting their dorms. Posted on these doors are small insignificant red signs which warn any possible wrong-doer that he or she will be dealt with through the Student Code of Conduct after exiting through the door. I understand that the administration is looking out for out welfare and is trying to do so by what they believe is best. I, too, was concerned that so many unlocked doors might increase the potential for someone to commit a grievous act. Someone might feel obliged to steal the computer which I'm using right now.

My major complaint is that while the administration enforces this policy of conventional lock-out which disables many would-be thieves and attackers from entering the dorm, they neglect to put security on, or lock the main entrance of Webster dorm. Is it not just as easy to steal, rape or maim from the unlocked front door as it is from locked back-door which someone left open?

Of course I've gotten used to the alarms going off at any time of the day. Why would a criminal want to disrupt anyone by sounding the alarm when he or she could just waltz through the front door at 9 p.m. or any time during a weekday.

I don't mind actions as long as there is reason and intelligence behind it. I believe that the administration has come up short of both. While the alarms still blare at all times of the day, criminals come through the front door, I'll be thinking of my future. There's an interesting possibility here for a job.

Paying for Israeli brutality

I watched CNN today and my heart was relieved to see an end to the insane bombing of Arab civilians — led by the US and its proxy allies. For most Americans, a cease-fire is declared and the war is supposedly over. For Arabs, another war has just begun, war against humiliation, occupation, and imposition of economic and cultural Western hegemony.

The new world order is clearly established in the Middle East; an order dictated by the West, where any signs of protest are suppressed. It is an order of unjust internal policy centered around national debt to the American controlled World Bank. The only reliable, independent ally of the US must be of European heritage. The US needed to destroy Iraq's military capability because Arabs cannot be trusted. The U.S. also wanted to "sit" on the oil.

Eyad Kishawi

While the U.S. is working ambitiously to reestablish its domination of the region, there is another country working for the same goals. It is Israel. Throughout its young history, Israel has been nourished by projecting itself into the image of the victim. I do not have to go into historical details to show who the victim is and who the aggressor is, but bear in mind the Israeli-led massacres, occupations and invasions of surrounding countries over the past three decades.

Since the war broke out, all media and international attention have been focused on the Gulf and on the Scud missiles landing on Israel. About 15 Scuds landed there. Apparently, for every Scud, Israel receives one billion dollars in economic and military aid to continue its brutal occupation of Palestine and Southern Lebanon. The U.S. even sent one billion for the Scud that landed on Palestinians in the West Bank. (It was no coincidence that this Scud was not intercepted with a Patriot. In fact, no Patriots were fired on that day.)

While attention was diverted, Israel's brutality and racism has also been nourished. One day before the war, a curfew of 23 hours per day was imposed. According to the Red Crescent society, there have been reports of Israeli soldiers opening fire on civilians without warning, shooting tear gas even into homes under curfew, beatings and torture, random arrests, collective punishment, and more use of WWII-style concentration camps. The object of this curfew was two-fold: firstly, to start a systematic campaign of starvation of the Palestinians as a means of punishment for resistance, and secondly to destroy the Intifadah. There are further reports that Israel had raised the fine for breaking curfew to $15,000, even in dire emergencies. There is a shortage of staple items such as flour, sugar, salt, vegetables and baby milk.

It is clearly evident that the $15 billion given to Israel was to support its starvation campaign against the Palestinians. This tactic is part of a greater strategy using coercion and intimidation in order to achieve the final goal of expulsion. The money given will be used to establish more settlements to support the influx of Soviet Jewry into the country, and the displacement of more Palestinians.

While the Palestinians are forgotten, and the Iraqis are massacred, Israel's supporters are holding a "humanitarian raffle," – not to aid the families of the 112,000 Iraqi civilians killed, 60 percent of whom were children, nor to aid the Palestinians in their strive toward survival under the Israeli regime — but to support Israel's "Quest for Hope" (the name of the Scud relief campaign). In reality they are raising money for Operation Exodus (Soviet Jewry immigration), under the pretext of rebuilding several homes destroyed by Scuds.

So remember that Israel's supporters are working hard to relieve Israel from peace. The country is still shifting to the right. Advocates of Palestinian expulsion are being appointed to the Knesset, and Shamir's "peace plan" still states that there is no need for a Palestinian state, self-determination, or even talks with the Palestinian Liberation Organization. Meanwhile, Hillel is trying to funnel support for Israeli and American policy in the Middle East through the innocently raising of money for peaceful rebuilding of an obscure neighborhood in Israel. This neighborhood happens to be "clean" of Arabs. It was built on top of a Palestinian village whose people had been expelled or killed.

ARTS & LIVING

Strong family ties and a passion for traditional art

By STEVE CLARK
Collegian Correspondent

Margaret Mead Film Festival
Herter Hall, Room 227
Thursday, Feb. 28

An important and moving series of films concluded Thursday night in Herter Hall. Art and Artisans: A Celebration of the Margaret Mead Film Festival finished off with three short, effective documentaries that focused on women and their crafts.

The first, Sabina Sanchez: The Art of Embroidery, examines a Mexican woman's lifestyle, so much of which involves her embroidery craft. The richness of the embroidery itself is essential to the tone of the film. The final shot of the artist picking flowers is a recreation of the embroideries' visual power.

Tradition plays an important role in this film. Sanchez fears that "If I die, who will do this quality work . . . there is no one left!" As related in the film, Sanchez learned her craft from her grandmother at the age of seven, and she is now the only one in the village who can embroider this way. There is a feeling that the traditions are wearing down, and that the embroidered blouses of Sanchez's younger years will soon be outdated.

In Munni: Childhood and Art in Mithila, tradition is far from extinct in northeastern India. The subject of the film is Munni, an eleven year-old girl from the village of Jitwarpur. Her young aunt teaches her painting, which is a variation on the older tradition of painting ceremonial designs on walls and floors. This has always been a craft for the women.

The central scene in the film shows Munni and her elder female relatives creating a giant ceremonial design in preparation for the festival of Sama-Chakeba. The designs are made with ground rice and water, and small amounts of red-powder. Munni is allowed to learn more about her culture and future craft by participating in the actual design. Her grandmother snaps when she doesn't apply the red-powder correctly to the giant design on the floor, but shows patience in a more general sense, aware that Munni will carry on the cultural tradition.

The first two films show how strong family ties are in the two cultures; Sabina Sanchez has learned her life's work from her grandmother, just as Munni was doing. The relationship between family and survival of tradition is strong.

This point is made further in Quilts in Women's Lives: Six Portraits, in which six American women describe how quilts have made their lives meanigful, some so important that they have a near-religious meaning.

Several of these women mention their grandmothers who are indeed responsible for the continuing the tradition of quilt making in many cases. Two older women, Christine and Hortense Miller, carry on the tradition together. Their bond as sisters is an incredibly close one. It is the final act in a series of vignettes emphasizing the importance of close relationships.

In each documentary, the viewer gets a sense that the artists on the screen are trying to create a meaning or a design in their works. The most profound images in this film come from the bonds between people, and the art that comes from that bond.

The people in these films are brought to life. When the lights come up, you feel like you're old friends with the gifted artists.

Kokigami: The Intimate Art of the Little Paper Costume
Burton Silver
Ten Speed Press

With Valentine's day a mere 347 days away, it is a good thing that Ten Speed Press sent us a copy of Burton Silver's charming, artfully illustrated sex toy book for our review. This will give you plenty of time to send away for your very own copy.

Kokigami: The Intimate Art of the Little Paper Costume is the first definitive instructional guide to the practice of dressing up the male organ in the Japanese tradition of Tsutsumi. According to Ten Speed Press, upper-class Japanese men of the eighth century would spend "much time with fine silks and ribbons, wrapping their organs before retiring. The present would be later unwrapped with much time and pleasure taken in the undoing."

Silver and his partner, Heather Busch, both from New Zealand, have compiled this ready-to-use guide with the aim "to change the way the male relates to the dominant physicality of his organ."

The pages are made of heavy stock, each featuring a different character which can be cut out, assembled and used. Basically a Koki is a hybrid of origami, condoms and paper dolls.

Each Koki comes with a little poetic, spicy dialogue to help readers get the hand of this liberating tradition. Ika, the inky squid "gentle, graceful and quick," for example, says, "Come to me little fishy. Let my strong sensitive tentacles gently stroke and enfold your quivering body!"

The suggested reply: "Your tentacles dance most beautifully but they have many suckers and I wonder what they are for."

Silver goes on to describe "the play" or the dance which the wearer of the little paper costume should perform. It involves waving fingers and pulsating hips.

Buta, the pig costume, calls, "Oink! Oink! How about a bit of juicy swill?"

Fishing through Green Mind to find its gems

By SAAD HOPKINS

Dinosaur Jr.
Green Mind
Sire/ Blanco Y Negro

Upon reading the liner notes I couldn't help but notice that J. Mascis played virtually all the instruments, including most of the drums, on the album's ten tracks. Occasionally guest musicians such as Jay Spiegel, and Don Fleming (big surprise!) amongst others, contribute a guitar lick here, or a tambourine solo there. Murph, who has until now been a key figure in the Dinosaur Jr. experience, only drums on three songs this time around.

In all honesty, I'm surprised that this album even got finished in the first place. After all, J. has had the worst luck getting a band together since he ousted Lou Barlow a year or so ago. We all know about J's rather lackadaisical attitude towards everything, but when he eventually gets in a studio to put out a product, he usually doesn't slack off too much.

But Green Mind is a bit too lackadaisical. It's certainly not as heavy as their three previous albums, but I expected that. What I didn't expect was not being able to listen to the whole thing in one sitting. Usually their albums have a hypnotic flow to keep you interested for 40 minutes straight. I suppose under the circumstances it's not as half-assed as it could've been, however it is uneven, notably over produced, and at times quite boring. But at the same time if you try really hard you can fish what is good out rubble, which makes it worth lending an ear.

"The Wagon," remixed better than on the original Sub Pop seven inch, generates enough enthusiasm to suggest a more interesting shift from the "same old shit" formula. It's just as vivacious and poppy as "Freak Scene" off of Bug in 1988, in fact in some ways even a bit better. Although when "Puke And Cry" kicks off suddenly something goes wrong. J's playing is unique, and his talent to arrange songs, is better than what most people are dishing out to the public on the "College radio" circuit. However here it sounds like he's an amature fresh off the Bachman Turner Overdrive school of "brave new world" guitar playing in a failed and lame attempt to sound like themselves. It's a bit harsh, but true indeed. The evidence is in your ear.

"How'd You Pin That One On Me" is also pretty dull. Apart from it's clever, going nowhere lyrics ("My move or do I chuck it?/ Stare it in the face or duck it?"), the musical content doesn't match up to the overall mood of the song. "Thumb" is even worse. The last thing I anticipated was to hear a flute on a Dinosaur record, and here it's awful! It doesn't work, and is happens to be the most generic song he's ever written. On the same note, "Muck" is a disco attempt of sorts, with vocals so sleepyheaded that I thought maybe Kenny Rogers has sung it. Sadly the songs were flat out embarrassing, and their addition to an otherwise passible product just makes it all the more unexciting.

Not all is lost. "Water" is a rippin' tune that echoes older Dinosaur. "Blowing It," and "I Live For That Look" are impressive. They blend accoustics with distorted electronics sucessfully enough to carry the song through. And I really got into the title cut, "Green Mind," the second time around, mostly because of the mesmorizing thrash bass line.

What makes this album different from Dinosaur records past is he's not turning the sound levels up. Not that he shouldn't attempt something different than what was done on say their classic You're Living All Over Me, but perhaps extra volume would make it all the more convincing. Each album gets better in musical quality, but with each LP also comes a more belittled product. Rolling Stone should love this! It caters to the perfect harmless indie-pop sound that "older hip rockers" waste ink on.

Undoubtedly J. is a whizz at what he does, but this is just a bit too subtle. Everything on this album seems like it has been conveniently toned down to conform to daytime MTV (sub)standards. He's the only one who can use such blatant simplicity and pass it off as being intricate. Maybe if Lou were still in the band their arguments would spawn enough tension to allow Green Mind the kind of effect it seems to scream out for, which is the least we could've expected from these guys. But J. has ditched so much all in the name of change that he seems to have lost it all together. You'll notice he's traded a significant amount of electronics for accoustics, and he's done away with the wah-wah peddle all together. Where have all of those neat little sound bites and noises gone that made his material so good?

This LP is good, but not what I would expect of J, and Murph. This major label debut is marginally recommendable to old Dinosaur fans. It makes a nice introduction if you've never heard them before. But all in all, suffice it to say that this record is weird . . . really weird!

The reply: "Here Piggy Wiggy! Lots of lovely warm slops just for you!"

Silver does not indicate whether the translations of the dialogue are taken from traditional Japanese scripts or if he made them up himself. He does say that "it was natural that in male-dominated Japanese society the gift [of the penis] was perceived to be the most important of all, the giver of life."

The gift giving ceremony was infused with restrained elegance. The switch of emphasis from purely physical pleasures is attributed to the advent of Buddhism in the sixth century. Shinto priests, "strongly influenced by Buddhism . . . sought ways of transcending the physical center of their being by exploring it in greater depth." This transcendence of the physical, carnal might just bring the experience to unbelievable new heights. Or maybe you might find yourself wearing a piece of paper on your peter with your partner in hysterics.

This critique really isn't tongue-in-cheek enough to match the subject but space is limited and so's my patience so let me end with one last dialogue and be done with it.

The call: "Come fuzzy bee and taste my pearly nectar! Feel my soft petals against your tiny cheeks!"

The reply: "Buzzzz, hold still sweet-scented beauty and let my long tongue probe your honey hole."

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Your charm is a great asset now. Nurture your personal relationships and clear up any misunderstandings. Romance will improve when you tone down your language. Follow through on an investment hunch.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): The impulsive purchase of a luxury item could cause a misunderstanding with a loved one. Put work before pleasure. Realize that certain social activities are more trouble than they are worth.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Take off those rose-colored glasses and see things as they really are. Paperwork and business errands could leave you feeling pressured. Discuss mutual concerns with potential allies.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Your determination helps you find challenging new work assignments. You feel encouraged by a change in personnel. Be more open to intuitive hunches. A friendship could turn romantic.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Proceed with caution where financial ventures involving your friends are concerned. Find out more about the possible mutual benefits. Your mate encourages you to look beyond surface appearances.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): You gain new insights from a heart-to-heart talk with your partner. A budget revision will reduce domestic tension. Your patience is richly rewarded by a loved one's change in attitude.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Refuse to go along with the crowd today. Afternoon is the best time for social activities, humanitarian endeavors and shopping. Catch up on your reading this evening.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Travel prospects are excellent if you personally check all details. "Final sale" merchandise deserves careful scrutiny. A neighborly gesture puts you in a contented mood.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Look for changes in the views of your friends and allies. You may not know someone as well as you think you do. Stick to talking about things you know.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Volunteer to help your mate or partner with a difficult task. Joining forces with other people can be a smart move this week. Someone you admire shows interest in your efforts.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Long-term arrangements are in the spotlight. You could become the favorite of someone in authority. A new agreement brings peace of mind. Your humility impresses those who really count.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Act quickly and decisively in financial affairs. What you buy for someone could seal an alliance. A secret meeting takes place. Express your views with authority.

McCoy entered yesterday's A-10 quarterfinal against George Washington 26 points shy of breaking Lorenzo Sutton's all-time UMass scoring record.

The Colonials will play Temple at 7 p.m. tonight at the Palestra.

Through the first three minutes, the Minutemen picked up where they left off last week while demolishing Rhode Island. UMass put the Colonials in a 10-2 hole as McCoy hit a pair of jumpers and Williams and Herndon had a block apiece.

The game then took a disasterous turn against the Minutemen.

Holland posted up for a 10-foot jumper, raced up court to block Williams, then wheeled for an identical jumper to draw the Colonials within 22-21.

A Rodney Paterson three-pointer gave the Colonials its first lead at 24-22, and after a Brown-to-Herndon alley-oop, GW built a 33-26 lead with a six-point trip up the court.

On a Patteron jumper, referee Murph Shapiro whistled Barbee, who was jostling for position under the hoop. When Barbee slammed the ball in protest, Shapiro called a technical foul.

McKennie hit four of six freethrows and suddenly the Minutemen were in a seven-point hole at 33-26.

By halftime the Minutemen had been called for 18 fouls, including two technicals.

Atlantic 10 Tournament Notes McCoy, hospitalized by a virus in November, was one of three University of Massachusetts mens' basketball players named to the Atlantic 10 All-Conference Team Friday.

This was the second consecutive year McCoy was named first-team All-Atlantic 10. Barbee was named to the A-10 second team and Williams was a third-team honoree.

The junior guard got off to a slow start this season and seemed a long shot to repeat as an all-league pick as recently as late January. However, he returned to all-conference form in early February. In UMass' last five games he has averaged 24.8 points per game.

He finished third in the league in scoring (15.5) and ninth in field goal percentage. Williams led the league in blocked shots (2.5 per game) and was fourth in rebounding at 8.1 per game. Both Barbee and Williams were A-10 All-Freshman Team picks last year.

Named with McCoy to the A-10 first team: Keith Hughes (Rutgers), Chris Brooks (West Virginia), Mark Macon (Temple) and DeRon Hayes (Penn State).

■ remembering Gathers tournament, before falling to the eventual national champion, Nevada-Las Vegas.

But for me it was different.

I was already a diehard Loyola fan and Gathers was my favorite college player. I admit that as of two years ago I couldn't even tell you where Loyola-Marymount was, but after watching Loyola score 130 points on an ESPN midnight game, I fell in love with the team.

That year Gathers led the nation in scoring and rebounding, he was truly incredible. I soon was given more incentive to root for them.

Out in California, my cousin became a member of the Loyola cheerleading squad last year, as I became the most diehard Loyola fan this side of the Rocky Mountains. Now, a year later, Gathers is gone.

According to my cousin, the campus is tight lipped about the Gathers incident. Rather than remembering Gathers as a gifted athlete, all that remains is lawsuits.

The Gathers family filed a $32 million wrongful death suit against former coach Paul Westhead and 11 others, and this suit is still going on.

But it gets worse.

Hank had collapsed three months earlier in a game and was found to have an irregular heartbeat. The doctors prescribed medication but Gathers claimed it slowed him down. Team doctors cut the dosage of the medication at Gathers' request and the Gathers family has placed the blame for his death on Westhead.

The Gathers' attorney, Bruce Fagel, said in a press conference held Jan. 8, "but for the actions of Paul Westhead, in a week before Hank Gathers' death, Hank would be alive today."

This led Westhead, now the coach of the NBA's Denver Nuggets, to file an $11 million defamation suit against Fagel. These suits may go on for years.

The aftershock of playing ball without Gathers has struck everyone on last year's team. Bo Kimble, who dedicated the rest of his basketball life to his best friend, rarely gets off the bench for the bottom-rung L.A. Clippers.

Westhead's Nuggets are mired near the bottom of the NBA as they try to incorporate the Loyola offense in the pros.

One day I hope to announce big time college games — I'm glad I had the opportunity to watch Gathers and I will be able to look back and reflect on what he did for the game, and what he meant to me as a hard-working role model.

I will never forget you: Loyola-Marymount Lions' -44 — Hank the Bank. Thanks for the memories.

Women lose season final to URI, face postseason play

By GREG SUKIENNIK
Collegian Staff

Having finished their regular season with a 66-54 loss to Rhode Island on Saturday afternoon at Curry Hicks Cage, the University of Massachusetts women's basketball team will visit St. Bonaventure University tonight in the first round of the Atlantic-10 Conference tournament in Olean, N.Y.

The Minutewomen, who finished the regular campaign with an 0-26 overall, 0-18 A-10 record, come into tonight's game as the 10th seed in the A-10 tournament.

The Bonnies, 13-14 overall and 6-12 in the A-10, are seeded seventh. [All first and second-round games are played at the home site of the higher-seeded team.]

Saturday, in senior Keyburn McCusker's last home game, UMass played nip and tuck with the WRams from Rhode Island in the first 10 minutes of the contest.

The Minutewomen were dealing well with Rhody's constant full-court defensive pressure, and had the score tied 10-10 with 11 minutes to go in the first half.

At that point, URI's pressure began to take its toll, as the WRams built a 32-20 lead resulting from efficient half-court offense as well as points resulting directly from UMass turnovers.

The WRams took a 36-29 lead into halftime. The Minutewomen cut the lead down to nine points (41-32) at the start of the second, but the Minutewomen's height advantage got into collective foul trouble, helping URI pick up the win.

Both Kim Kristofik and Jenny Moran picked up their third foul before the end of the first half, and Lisa Ireland and McCusker both fouled out in the second.

Not only did URI not have to deal with UMass' height advantage, they were able to go to the foul line 29 times, 17 alone in the second.

Ireland led the Minutewomen with 14 points, while Kristofik, McCusker, and Shawna Pemberton added ten points apiece.

While the Minutewomen are winless, there is an historical precident which gives UMass hope against the Bonnies in tonight's A-10 first-round game.

Last year, the Minutewomen went to Olean, N.Y., under similar circumstances and pulled off a big upset, winning 77-72 with only seven available players on their roster.

Senior captain McCusker would like to see history repeat itself.

"We did it last year, maybe we can do it again," offered McCusker. "We can compete with them."

The Bonnies fared well against UMass in the two teams' regular season match-ups, winning 78-53 in the first game at the Cage in January and 83-63 in the second, held Feb. 14 in Olean.

In the second meeting, UMass was down 50-25 at halftime, yet showed their potential by outscoring the Bonnies 38-33 in the second half.

For the Minutewomen to have any hope of winning, they must put together two halves like that second half. Specifically, this means UMass must stop SBU's balanced scoring attack and take good care of the basketball.

Should UMass upset the Bonnies, they would then face Rutgers in New Jersey on Wednesday, March 6.

sophomore Steve Christensen, who was hampered by the flu. Christensen, UMass' top all-around gymnast, said he currently has a 48-hour flu but has been afflicted by an unnammed illness for about two months. Health Service personnel have failed to identify the nature of the illness to either Christensen or his coach Roy Johnson.

However, UMass picked up the slack for Christensen. Freshman Joe Haran finished third in the all-around with 54.5 points, and freshman Jason Braud won the vault with a 9.5 and finished fourth in the floor (9.4).

In addition, three UMass seniors said good-bye to Boyden gymnasium with nice performances. Dave DiNucci's vault (9.0), Mitch Hall's high bar (9.25) and Andy Sullivan's rings (9.2) were responsible for UMass's great showing. The large turnout on a Saturday night made the upperclassmen feel appreciated.

"We did a hell of a job today," DiNucci said. "We set a new school record."

"I think the big motivation was that we had two excellent teams that we wanted to perform up to," Johnson said. "When you meet better teams, you're not always gonna pick up the easy Ws." Johnson added that the 270-point mark might be broken in the New Englands, if Christensen returns.

The Minutemen lost their second-place lead after the rings, but made a strong surge at Syracuse in the final two events. The team beat the Orangemen in the parallel bars, cutting the lead to 1.65 points.

UMass also took advantage of falls by Syracuse on the high bar, beating them 45.95-44.7. It wasn't strong enough to overtake Illinois-Chicago, which won the competition with 47.2 points.

"I had my best score ever," said Braud, happy with his floor exercise. "I hit my set, but they had some guys doing some pretty big tricks, so they beat me out."

Unfortunately, that result was characteristic of UMass' team effort Saturday.

Women's gymnastics surprises

By LYNN FRANKEL
Collegian Correspondent

Despite the loss of the team's only senior, Kristen Turmail (knee), and sophomore powerhouse Tammy Marshall (ankle), the University of Massachusetts women's gymnastics team successfully defeated Rutgers University Saturday 181.60-175.40.

Head coach Alfie Mitchell said he was pleasantly surprised by freshmen performances.

"Those who came up, really came through," said Mitchell referring to the showing his young team made.

He said he was especially impressed by Erika Finkleman's routines on the balance beam (9.25), a personal best, and floor (9.25).

Junior Kim Grady led the team in the all-around scoring 37.15 points. Grady won the vault competition with a 9.35, the floor with a 9.5, and tied teammate Lisa Beth Kronanfor first with on the uneven parallel bars with a 9.1.

Erin Kleir won the balance beam with a 9.5, and tied teammates Margaret Furtado and Ann Klosik for third on the vault with a 9.0.

Freshman Margaret Furtado placed third in the all-around with a 36.4 and third on the uneven bars with a 9.05.

Mitchell said his team was "psyched" with the win. He said the team was tired from the week's hard schedule, and the win was a great boost for team morale.

Mitchell said the team was able to really concentrate on cleaning up problem areas and focusing on individual performances.

The team heads to Durham, N.H., this weekend to take on the arch rivalled New Hampshire squad.

Mitchell said he anticipates a healthy Tammy Marshall and continued consistent performances from his athletes.

Minutemen ushered to early tourney exit

By SAM SILVERSTEIN
Collegian Staff

PHILADELPHIA — For three months, University of Massachusetts men's hoop coach John Calipari has challenged, encouraged and begged his team to step up to the obstacles it faces.

Yesterday, in a bittersweet 84-83 overtime loss to George Washington University in the Atlantic 10 Tournament quarterfinals, Calipari got his wish.

In the face of catastrophic foul trouble — by halftime Tony Barbee, Harper Williams and Will Herndon had three fouls each and John Tate had four — the Minutemen weren't cooked until two potential game-winning shots were blocked by GW center Byron Hopkins in the final seconds of overtime.

"The kids never quit. The way this game was called, they had plenty of chances to just pack in the tents and they didn't," Calipari said. "Every late game situation, we performed. That's what bothers me most about this game and how it was decided."

Twice in the second half and once in overtime the Colonials delivered what appeared to be the knock-out punch, only to see the Minutemen rally in an astonishing fashion.

While Herndon sat on the bench with four fouls and Williams held the court with four, UMass fell behind 66-58 with six minutes left in regulation.

Herdon returned and hit a layup, and McCoy and Barbee combined to hit six consecutive freethrows as the Minutemen drew within two at 70-68 with 4:06 to play.

GW again appeared to wrap it up in the closing minutes of regulation, edging to a 75-71 lead with 2:19 to play on a Glen Sitney drive and a pair of Ellis McKennie freethrows.

Again UMass responded. UMass forced overtime with a 6-1 run centered around a 45-second defensive stand, a McCoy 18-footer and a clutch Anton Brown three-pointer.

In overtime, Sonni Holland drew fifth fouls from Tate and Williams within a 33 second span, and the Colonials lead 84-81 with 1:40 left.

When McCoy drilled a baseline jumper, and Sitney travelled on an inbounds play following a timeout, the Minutemen had one last possession to try and reach today's semifinal round.

Hopkins rejected Barbee in the low post with six seconds left, then smothered McCoy as he tried to launch a last, desperate shot.

"I caught it, [Hopkins] bodied me a little, and I just missed the shot," Barbee said.

UMass' fate now lies in the hands of the National Invitation Tournament selection committee, which will announce its picks next Sunday night.

"We're an NIT team because we're playing good basketball right now . . . These guys deserve it," Cal said of his 17-12 squad.

The good news/bad news afternoon in a nutshell: McCoy finished with 26 points, moving past Lorenzo Sutton into first place on the all-time school scoring list.

"I'd rather not have scored the points and won the game," McCoy said.

Barbee added 18 points and Brown had a season-high 13 points for UMass. Holland scored 22 to lead GW.

Gymnasts drop final home meet

By MICHAEL MORRISSEY
Collegian Correspondent

Ever wonder what it would be like to experience the thrill of victory and the agony of defeat?

The University of Massachusetts mens' gymnastics team found out Saturday night in Boyden, where they set a school record for team points in the team's final home meet, scoring 269.6 points yet losing to both Illinois-Chicago (275.65) and Syracuse University (270).

UIC dominated the match, as they won five of six events. Barry McDonald led the Flames with a first place parallel bars routine (9.55) and tied for first on the floor (9.55). Syracuse's Jason Hebert tied McDonald for first in the floor exercise with a 9.55 score and placed second on the vault (9.45).

McDonald also placed first in the all-around, with a score of 56.05. Dave Heltmach helped out UIC with a first place tie on the pommel horse (9.6) and a second place all-around finish (55.15).

One year ago today, the sports world took a shot of reality when Loyola-Marymount's Hank Gathers collapsed and died following a dunk against the University of Portland.

At the time, Gathers was putting on the kind of show that would make him a certain NBA first round pick. Then, suddenly, he collapsed, going into convulsions before passing out. He died minutes later while being rushed to the hospital.

Rally kicks off Conservative Awareness Week

Conservative students denounce student government leaders

By TAMIR LIPTON
Collegian Staff

A rally on the Student Union steps "denouncing the sell-out of the five student government officers" kicked off Conservative Awareness Week yesterday at noon, in front of a sparse crowd.

In a rally sponsored by the Republican Club and Young Americans for Freedom, Ted Maravelis, founder of the UMass New Americans Club, gave two speeches bashing Student Trustee Angus McQuilken and the UMass administration.

"This man [McQuilken] should be in jail," Maravelis said. "He stole $2 million from us."

On Feb. 12, University administrators created a Commission on Student Governance, which took budgetary powers from the Student Government Association and space allocation powers from the Board of Governors.

McQuilken paraded in front of the podium in the rain holding a sign that read, "You can't defend democracy by acting like a facist [sic]."

"I'd like to see the students have more control of their money but we need to show that we are responsible enough [to have that control]," McQuilken said.

Maravelis said, "We would bring it [$2 million] back under the control of the SGA where it had been for the last 50 years. The students have a right to use their money the way they want to. To deny that use is not only a breach of written contract, but it's also a deprivation of their First Amendment rights.

"It's really sad that [Senate Speaker] Dan Chesnicka, [Treasurer] Karen Talbot and Angus McQuilken have sold-out student government to [President-Chancellor Joseph] Duffey and the administration," Maravelis said.

Chesnicka and Talbot were both impeached Feb. 27 by the Undergraduate Student Senate after they asked the UMass administration to step in and restructure the SGA on Jan. 30.

Edward Corrigan, vice-chairperson of the BOG and editor of the Minuteman said, "Angus, you are perhaps the worst student trustee ever. . .Everything that [you] have worked for is against student rights.

"The only thing that he's worked for is Legal Services [Center], and he's failed miserably. . . Perhaps half of the money you've spent is to promote homosexuality," he said.

Jon Aronson, a writer for the Minuteman said, "Men like you [McQuilken] don't belong on this campus. Angus you are scum."

Maravelis continued his speech in the rain saying, "All you people of Southwest, come find out what's going on with your money. If you didn't have to pay $112 [activities fee] per year, you'd have more drinking money."

Guy Glodis, a member of YAFF, used the rally as an opportunity to promote his "talk show" tonight in the Campus Center Auditorium.

"Pandemonium and chaos at the Guy Glodis talk show, don't miss it," Glodis said. "Radicals, homosexuals, communists and the most powerful student government leaders will be there.

"I'll be giving away a trip to Daytona over Spring break to the hottest looking babe," he said.

'92 election on the horizon

"Focus on domestic issues," Democrats say

BOSTON (AP) — Now that the Persian Gulf War is drawing to a close, America needs to focus its attention to domestic issues and presidential politics, officials from the moderate Democratic Leadership council said yesterday.

"After the concentration and focus on the war has subsided, economic issues will become paramount," said U.S. Rep. David McCurdy, D-Oklahoma. "I don't see 1992 as necessarily a losing effort."

U.S. Sen. Sam Nunn, D-Georgia, told reporters he is not interested in a presidential run, but wants to help shape the 1992 debate.

"I'm not running, I have no plans to run," said one of the most talked about potential Democratic contenders. "I never said that it would be impossible. . .at some point in my career I may catch that disease."

And even as Nunn asserted he wanted to talk issues and not politics, McCurdy and other prominent mainstream Democrats were actively promoting the head of the Senate Armed Services Committee.

"Senator Nunn has a 20-year record in the Senate," said Al From, head of the council. "I don't think there's an American alive who knows more about national security policy."

From said at least five men are considering challenging Bush: Nunn, Texas Sen. Lloyd Bentsen, Missouri Rep. Richard Gephardt, Tennessee Sen. Albert Gore Jr., and Arkansas Gov. William Clinton. From puts Nunn and Bentsen at the top of his short list of contenders, noting they have lengthy resumes and political bases from which to build.

McCurdy, who co-sponsored legislation allowing Bush to use force in the gulf, nevertheless defended Nunn for opposing the bill.

"Sen. Nunn is not vulnerable on questions of national security and defense," said McCurdy, new head of the House Intelligence Committee.

Nunn and the other Democrats who formed the council "out of the rubble of the 1984 debacle," said this series of issues forums around the country will produce a viable candidate.

"Our first task is to take care of the message and the messenger will take care of himself or herself," Nunn said.

Political observers note that this election season lags far behind the 1988 race. By February 1987, several candidates had made their intentions known and were campaigning heavily in Iowa and New Hampshire, home to the first caucuses and primary respectively.

Vote may soften U.S.S.R.'s opposition to Baltic independence

By BRIAN FRIEDMAN
Associated Press Writer

RIGA, U.S.S.R. — The overwhelming vote for independence in the Baltic republics should persuade the Soviet Union to soften its opposition to their secession, the Latvian president said yesterday.

In Sunday's plebiscites in Latvia and Estonia, independence was favored by more than three-fourths of voters. The referendums carry no legal weight but represent a challenge to President Mikhail S. Gorbachev.

Voters in Lithuania voted in favor of secession on Feb. 9.

Anatolijs Gorbunovs, president of the Latvian parliament, said the plebiscite would be an "additional argument" for the Kremlin to "correct its policy on the Baltic issue."

"I would like to express the hope that the presidium of the Supreme Soviet or its president by the end of March or the beginning of April would have a new conception in regard to the Baltic issue," Gorbunovs said.

Ethnic Russians in the two republics joined ethnic Latvians and Estonians in urging secession, despite warnings from Moscow that the non-indigenous population would be second-class citizens if independence were approved.

The votes were little more than a public opinion poll, but officials had hoped for a strong pro-independence vote so the three Baltic republics could march in step away from the Soviet Union.

The Baltics a year ago began their struggle to reverse the Kremlin's forced annexation of Estonia, Latvia and Lithuania in 1940. The three republics were independent between the wars.

The referendums also represented a strong challenge to Gorbachev, who has branded illegal independence declarations last year by the Baltic republics.

Gorbachev has scheduled a nationwide referendum for March 17 on holding together the 15 Soviet republics. Leaders for the Baltics, as well as of the republics of Armenia, Georgia and Moldavia, have said they won't participate.

UM student injured in two-car accident

A UMass junior who was involved in a two-car accident on Route 116 in Amherst Saturday night was listed in critical condition yesterday at Bay State Medical Center in Springfield, police said.

Nancy Anton, 20, of Sudbury, was traveling north on Route 116 just south of Sunderland Road when, according to police, witnesses saw her swerve to avoid an opossum and cross into the southbound lane where she was hit broadside by an oncoming car.

Anton was first taken to Cooley Dickinson Hospital in Northampton and was transferred later to Bay State Medical Center in critical condition.

The driver of the other car, Julie Lehrman, age unknown, of Sunderland, was treated at Cooley Dickinson for minor injuries and released, police said.

Troops welcomed at Westover Air Base

By TRUDY TYNAN
Associated Press Writer

CHICOPEE — They unfurled the American flag and broke out the beer here yesterday as Westover Air Force Base staged the first of what promises to be many "Welcome Home" celebrations for U.S. troops returning from the Persian Gulf.

"It's great to be back," said Sgt. Emilio Rivera, a member of the 11th Air Defense Artillery Brigade out of Fort Bliss, Texas, who was the first of 20 men and women through the door, bedecked with yellow streamers.

Brig. Gen. Frederick Walker offered each soldier a cold beer as they stepped into the hangar.

"We will give everyone returning from the sands a hero's welcome whether the flights come in at 2 a.m. or 5 p.m.," Walker said.

A cheer echoed through the cavernous cargo hangar decked with flags and signs reading "Welcome Home" as the first troops arrived. A line of colonels and other senior officers waved small American flags and Red Cross volunteers pinned small yellow wreaths on each soldier's lapel.

Chief Master Sgt. Charles Fusco, the top enlisted man at the base, flipped hot dogs and hamburgers at a portable barbecue grill and passed out baseball hats from major league teams.

Most of the men and women in this first wave of returnees were sent home early on emergency leave, Walker said.

"And I won't be going back," said Sgt. Stacey Costello of New Washington, Ohio, a big grin splitting her face.

"This sure tastes good after a couple of months," said Costello, 20, who "drove truck" in Saudi Arabia for her National Guard unit based in New Ashland, Ohio, as she swigged from one bottle of wine cooler and clutched a second.

"Some women went out and bought me a four-pack after I said I really don't like beer," she said. "Everyone has been so wonderful."

"This really makes you feel appreciated," said Sgt. Jimmy Jemison of the 7778th Maintenance Unit of the Alabama National Guard, heading for home in Jackson, Ala.

Sgt. Albert Noble from the 1st Cavalry stationed at Fort Hood, Texas, said he flew over the battlefield on his way out. "It was just a blackened jungle of destroyed tanks," he recalled. Now, he said, his thoughts were turning to home and "pizza and popcorn."

"This is just great," said Sgt. Steve Choy, a paratrooper stationed in Fort Bragg, N.C., who said he was stunned by the welcome after traveling for more than 25 hours from his unit in Iraq. And he said it helped ease the difficulty of being called home by a death in the family.

The first thing Choy said he planned to do in when time permitted was "get a Christmas for my kids." He said he has two children, a boy and a girl.

"We are going to have Christmas and Thanksgiving all wrapped into one," he said.

The welcome was hastily assembled on a half-hour's notice after the C-5A cargo jet, originally scheduled to fly into Dover Air Force Base in Delaware, was diverted to Westover, according to pilot David Nelson, of Kelly Air Force Base in San Antonio, Texas.

Handling solid waste is not that easy anymore

By DAVID MASSEY
Collegian Correspondent

Second in a series examining the solid waste crisis

Massachusetts annually produces 6.5 million tons of garbage and buries and burns 90 percent of it, noted Dan Jacobson, the regional coordinator for MassPirg, in a telephone interview.

Considering the fact that 85 percent of all the landfills in the state will close in five to seven years and the toxic byproducts from incineration still must be landfilled, the question of how to handle solid waste is not so simple anymore.

Placing our trash in landfills is no longer a viable alternative because toxic substances can contaminate the ground water, Jacobson said.

"We've had quite a number of towns in the state that have lost their drinking water due to this kind of toxic contamination," he said.

In addition, landfilling trash is a waste of a precious resource, according to Marc Fournier, acting director of solid waste management at UMass.

"We are taking all these extremely valuable resources and throwing them in a hole. Someday, they aren't going to be around anymore. You are going to be wishing that you had used more of those recyclable materials rather than throwing them away," Fournier said.

Burning trash releases toxins in the air, Jacobson said, and leaves behind highly toxic ashes. This ash also must be landfilled in a state where few sites remain for the construction of new landfills and older ones are reaching their full capacity.

"We produce far too much trash and our ways of disposing it cost [Massachusetts] a lot of money and they are just very dangerous for the environment," Jacobson said.

Though many observers view recycling as the only feasible solution to the solid waste crisis in Massachusetts, the state recycles only about 7 to 10 percent of its trash, according to Jacobson. Many environmentalists believe close to 90 percent of our waste can be recycled.

The first step in waste management — reducing the amount of solid waste that enters the waste stream — is the key to handling solid waste in this state, Jacobson said. He cited an MIT study that discovered the optimum method for reducing garbage is to reduce the amount of packaging industries use in their products.

In 1960, there were 24 million tons of packaging in the municipal waste stream, according to Garbage Magazine. In 1990, this figure skyrocketed to 45.4 million and is projected to reach the 50 million mark by the beginning of the 21st century.

One-third of all the solid waste in Massachusetts consists of packaging, much of which is unnecessary, according to MassPirg.

The Recycling Initiative, a bill that is under consideration in the House, states that by 1996 all packaging used in Massachusetts must be re-used or made of recycled or recyclable materials. The aims of the initiative are to create a market for recycled materials, reduce the amount of garbage produced, and save energy and natural resources.

Initiated by MassPirg and written by Massachusetts lobbyists, the Recyling Initiative faces major opposition from the plastics industries, said Bethany Coleman, a junior at UMass who is on internship with MassPirg and is the project coordinator for the Recycling Initiative.

According to MassPirg, these companies make and sell $1.7 billion in packaging each year in the Commonwealth and will put up a tough fight.

Though the exact same initiative was defeated by a large margin in Oregon in November, Coleman said she is hoping "Massachusetts sets the trend."

Tomorrow, the Collegian will analyze what UMass has done to deal with the huge amount of solid waste it produces and what is in store for the future.

EDITORIAL/OPINION

The opinions on this page are those of the individual writer or cartoonist and do not necessarily reflect the views of the Collegian or the University unless otherwise noted.

We must begin to teach ourselves alternatives to violence

Across town and across this state I have noticed huge numbers of adults and children wearing Desert Storm t-shirts. When I inquire about their popularity the general response is, "Why, I never gave it much thought. I just picked one up at the local Quik-Mart."

Just a harmless fad, it would seem, like Batman or Simpsons t-shirts. Upon closer inspection, however, we can find that a dangerous lesson is being laid on our children and reinforced in ourselves. The lesson is violence, that old dear friend we just can't seem to get away from.

Christopher Mattera

Desert Storm t-shirts are just one example of this lesson our kids get every day. It is also reinforced in fairy tales, cartoons, storybooks, movies and the almighty television. G.I. Joe, one of the top selling toys of the 80s, is perhaps my favorite example of my least favorite lesson: violence. Not just a doll any longer, G.I. Joe is a collection of over than 100 action figures with an entire arsenal of weapons, including bomber jets and aircraft carriers. The G.I. Joe cartoon which is seen daily across the country averages 43 acts of violence per hour. Joes routinely fight "communists" and "foreigners" – this at a time when cultural and ideological understanding is of the utmost importance.

Every study done on children and violence, from Bandura three decades ago through the present, concludes that violence is learned, not inherent. War toys, in whatever form and however culturally accepted, lead to increased aggression and violence.

By purchasing our children a Desert Storm t-shirt, or any number of violent toys available on the market, we are teaching them that violence is the answer. . .and that militarism is not only legitimate but desirable. We are teaching them to say, as we have said, to hell with supporting a system where diplomacy and reason settle disputes. The totalitarian rule of the Iron Fist, it seems, is what we wish to instill in our children.

In such a might-makes-right atmosphere, an atmosphere that Desert Storm t-shirts and war toys certainly help foster, I wonder why we send our children to school at all. Intellect and reason, the very goals of education, are of no use to a child in an atmosphere of violence. Six hours a day at Gold's gym, instead of school, would be time better spent. . .because we teach children that it is the muscle behind the clenched fist, and not the transcendental mind, that is the judge, jury and ultimately, the executioner.

If you have children of your own, or younger brothers and sisters, nieces and nephews, or any children special in your life, then I urge you to purchase and share with them the following selections of children's literature. These are big, colorful, and friendly books designed to introduce peace and non-violence as a legitimate problem solver. The past need not keep repeating itself. Teaching peace is as easy as teaching violence. Let's turn the table now before it's too late.

Tools for peace: My Hiroshima by J. Morimoto (Viking, $12.95, ages seven and up) offers the young reader a first hand account of war from a survivor. The Big Book For Peace (Dutton, $15.95, ages nine and up), a collection of poems, stories and illustrations by many of the masters of children's literature. Number The Stars, by L. Lowry (Houghton Mifflin, $12.95, ages 12 and up), an easy and fun fictional look at the Danish resistance to save the Jewish population of Denmark during WWII. The Boy's War: Confederate and Union Soldiers Talk About The Civil War, by J. Murphy (Clarion, $15.95, ages nine-14), first hand accounts of the "homeland war" with photographs and illustrations. Peace and War: A Collection of Poems, edited by M Harrison and C. Stuart-Clark (Oxford Univ. Press, $17.95, ages 12 and up), a cross-cultural view of war and peace and what it means to children and young adults. Peace Begins With You, by K. Scholes (Sierra Club/Little, Brown, $10.95, ages seven and up) illuminates the pure and beautiful philosophy of pacifism and non-violence.

Jumping on the bandwagon: Patriotism and style in the post war era

Have you been down in the dumps because your patriotic duds are old and outdated? Do you feel the overwhelming urge to deck yourself out in those mighty colors of red, white and blue and tell the whole world you're proud to be an American? Is your abode sadly lacking in the area of flags, bumper stickers, yellow ribbons — the general American paraphenalia?

Well you're not alone. Across the country Old Glory has come back into fashion. You can buy almost anything from nylons, leather coats, bath towels, underwear and jewelry with that truly American insignia, the American flag, proudly showing.

Not only that, but those popular yellow ribbons can be found everywhere. You can easily find tons of t-shirts, umbrellas, stickers and pins all proudly displaying that yellow ribbon.

And, lest we forget about those "Desert Storm" t-shirts and pins — soon to be a collector's item — which would bring a hearty smile to any American's face.

Even with this much fashion merchandise available, some may find that this garb doesn't exactly suit their tastes — doesn't fully express how the United States has won the war, how we beat Iraq with our superior air power, superior technology, superior military and superior troops.

Many who don't care to don our noble colors have chosen other ways to express their pride and joy in the great American victory. They've adopted theme songs like, Bette Milder's "From a Distance" and "Voices that Care," performed by Hollywood's notables, as testimony to their hopeful and victorious sentiments. Droves have gone to record stores to buy Tony Orlando's re-release of "Tie a Yellow Ribbon" and Whitney Houston's version of "The Star Spangled Banner" to fill their ears with joy.

Meredith O'Brien

No matter where you go nowadays, you can never escape these ostentatious exhibits of patriotism from fashion and decorations, to music. Nearly every home, store, lamp post and car also tote their own U.S.A. sentiments with dignity and pride.

There are only a few places however, too many for the tastes for true red-blooded Americans, where those distasteful, un-patriotic, heinous, so-called peace protesters lurk, ready to destroy all of our patriotic symbols with their jibberish. You know the kind, the kind espousing peace and wimpy sanctions, the kind who think we should pay to rebuild Iraq's war damages after Saddam Hussein threatened our national security, as well as the freedom of the whole entire world.

While the un-American heathens continue their quest to tarnish everything this country stands for in our moment of victory, in the face of our hot-selling ribbons and flags, I've decided to add to the popular patriotic material and put my two cents worth in by re-writing the words to the Beatles' "Revolution" tune:

You say you want a cease-fir-ire, well, ya know/Old Glory's been unfurled
You tell me that we beat a liar, well, ya know/We're on top of the whole world.
But when you talk about destruction, don't ya know/We really knocked them out —
Ya know it's gonna be all right. . .all right. . .all right.
You say you gotta a real solution, well, ya know/The Iraqis up and ran.
You ask me for a contribution, well, ya know/We already got our plan.
But if they want money to rebuild what we bombed/All I can tell you is brother you're really wrong —
Well, ya know it's gonna be all right. . .all right. . .all right.
You say you'll ditch the Constitution, well, ya know/We don't need it anyhow.
You say just trust the institution, well, ya know/Bush's got the power now.
But if you go carrying pictures of peacenik goons/You better get outta this country really soon —
But ya know it's gonna be all right. . .all right. . .all right.

There are millions of us working to heal a sick world

People are overwhelming. Sometimes, when I begin thinking about all the problems in our world, I try to put my thoughts down on paper. I usually find myself not knowing where to begin — or where to end, or what to discuss. It's all a swirling mess inside my head. There is so much to believe in, to advocate and fight for, yet so much to disagree with, to stand and fight against. This sequence is repeated often; my confusion, my anger, my sadness, and it usually leads me to feeling like I do now — useless.

There are so many things wrong with our society, hundreds more than one could possibly discuss in a single essay. Discussing simply the ones that affect me daily are enough for an entire week of debate. I'm constantly a victim or witness of all types of prejudice: racism, sexism, heterosexism, ableism, classism, ageism. I read in the paper constantly about war and murder, always over issues that have peaceful solutions. I see the poor people on the street, much poorer than I have ever been, lacking a home, or the opportunity to earn enough money to obtain one. These are real problems. They're not just happening in Ethiopia or the Soviet Union, they're happening right here, under all our noses. I'm only one person, though. One plague per century, please! Here's that swirling mess again. I'm feeling overwhelmed, useless. Somehow, though, I know that I must help to defeat all this hate.

One of the easiest ways I found to get involved was by belonging to various organizations that championed the causes that I believed in. I became a member of Amnesty International at my high school. I joined Greenpeace and People for the Ethical Treatment of Animals. I participated in events like "The Dance for Peace" and "The Walk for Hunger." Even with all that I was involved with, I still would often feel that I was not helping as much as I could. But what else could I do? I was giving up close to all of my spare time after school at meetings, and was often spending weekends attending write-a-thons and conventions for the organizations I belonged to. It was then that I began to realize that more important than what I was doing was what I was thinking.

Adam Myerson

My involvement with the organizations I belonged to helped many creatures in many ways. From all the letters I wrote to foreign governments, condemning the torture of their political prisoners, to my careful choice of the things I purchased so as not to support any company that still had ties to South Africa, I'm sure that I have helped to make a difference, in whatever small way. What I came to believe, though, was that above all, the activism I was involved in was not as important as the simple fact that I had these ideas in my head, and that I was sharing them with the people around me. I had come at this point to the realization that society would never overcome all of the social plagues in the world, but by simply thinking I was making a difference; I felt more fulfilled. Simply by sharing my ideas and love for humanity with others, maybe I could help one person to feel the same. This was change, a direct result of my actions, and it was satisfying.

I still feel useless from time to time. Not everyone is interested in how I feel and what I have to say, and the ones who are interested already share many of my opinions. However ineffective I may be on a global scale, I must fight to change what I see around me. All over the Earth, I know that there are others who think as I do. People in Iraq, in South Africa, in Afghanistan, in Northern Ireland, everywhere that there is injustice among men, I know that there will be people who will disagree with what they see around them. There will be people who will rise up and overcome, through education and understanding. I know, and I will do my share.

ARTS & LIVING

A fine introduction to jazz

By BILL ROSENBLATT
Collegian Staff

Branford Marsalis
Fine Arts Center
Thursday, Feb. 28

Last Thursday night's Branford Marsalis show at the Fine Arts Center Concert Hall was an excellent introduction to jazz for well over 1,000 people. The Duke Ellington Committee and the Union Program Council deserve much credit for bringing in an artist who can draw a crowd without compromising his music.

Branford's career progress ought to be the envy of many of his fellow young jazz prodigies — including his even-more-famous younger brother. He plays music that is totally steeped in the jazz tradition, showing unimpeachable technique, impeccable influences, and plenty, plenty soul. At the same time, he has considerable entrepreneurial skills and a "hip" image that makes him seem more vital and relevant than his more didactic peers.

The best thing about Thursday's concert was that the large crowd obviously enjoyed themselves; they gave the band a standing ovation. Hopefully, many of the newcomers to jazz in the audience will now support the music more. Through Branford, they were indirectly introduced to many past masters, such as John Coltrane, Ornette Coleman and Sidney Bechet, and perhaps they will be interested in exploring the music of these giants as well.

The show did have a few problems, most of which related to the fact that the pianist did not show up. That left Branford to carry the show himself, along with the rhythm section of Bob Hurst on bass and Jeff "Tain" Watts on drums. Very few saxophonists in jazz history have been capable of sustaining sufficient interest throughout a set by themselves, and frankly, Branford is not yet among them. Some of his solos meandered and failed to catch fire. Hurst's occasional bass solos would have taken the heat off Branford, but the FAC's sound system made him difficult to hear.

Another disappointing factor was that Branford stuck almost exclusively to soprano sax, picking up his more usual tenor only once. His soprano sound was sweet and clean a la Bechet rather than "dirty" and penetrating like Coltrane. The soprano/bass/drums combination produced a sleek, spare sound that was effective on standards such as "Royal Garden Blues."

The trio format places more responsibility on each musician, but also allows for more experimentation, and all three musicians exploited this opportu ty. Watts was an inventive dynamo on drums; he has taken influences from Max Roach, Art Blakey and Elvin Jones and carved out his own powerful style. Branford himself produced an impromptu version of "Cherokee," which was astounding: he took each note of the melody and replaced it with a rapid arpeggio, resulting in a Coltrane-like "sheets of sound" fusillade. The breakneck tempo eventually proved too fast for him, but he got his message across.

Other tunes in the set included Ornette Coleman's "The Blessing," which was the first tune Coltrane ever recorded on the soprano sax. They also played "Roustabout," a new tune by Hurst dedicated to Charlie Rouse, Thelonious Monk's longtime saxophonist. Tenor players are just beginning to assimilate, Rouse's sly, understated approach into their own styles, and Branford's treatment of the tune evoked Rouse effectively.

Silence chills and thrills

By MEREDITH O'BRIEN
Collegian Staff
and SCOTT WEISS
Collegian Correspondent

The Silence of the Lambs is a chilling suspense thriller about a young FBI agent (Jodie Foster) who seeks the aide of a cannibalistic, incarcerated killer (Anthony Hopkins) to nab a serial murderer.

O'BRIEN: I left the theater with a knot in my stomach after seeing this one. Not your typical slice-and-dice movie, this film scares the hell out of you by playing sophisticated mind games. Hopkins, who plays Dr. Hannibal "The Cannibal" Lecter, is one of the most terrifying characters I've ever seen on film. A psychiatrist who fancies eating his patients, among other tasty people, Lecter is a genius who plays games with young Clarice Starling's mind (Foster).

WEISS: My sentiments exactly. This film succeeds extraordinarily well in a genre where many movies typically fail. This thriller, based on a book by Thomas Harris, is superbly transformed to the screen by director Jonathan Demme. The frequent use of intense close-ups constantly keeps the mind racing and the heart pounding. Especially those close-ups of Dr. Lecter. . . . You can almost feel him toying with your own mind.

O'BRIEN: I know I definitely squirmed every time the camera zoomed in on Lecter's icy blue eyes, but I also think the way the movie deals with the gory details of the plot — tracking down a killer who skins his female victims after keeping them in a hole to starve for three days (while stitching together a garment made out of human skin) — was very clever.

WEISS: Clever is an understatement. I think Harris must either have an incredible imagination or be quite insane himself to come up with this plot. There are so many intricacies and excellent characterizations that you are constantly wondering what will happen next. . . . There are also periods in the movie when I wondered who was actually the real "villain." Virtually all of the characters are concerned with their own self-serving needs. (Some, however, are a little more psychotic than others.) Starling needs to catch the current serial killer Buffalo Bill, to suppress her own insecurities; Dr. Chilton, Lecter's psychological warden, needs to conquer Lecter's mind to feel like the superior intellect; Buffalo Bill needs to kill women for their skin to satisfy his transvestite needs and Lecter, basically, needs to eat human flesh.

O'BRIEN: Why don't you be a little more long-winded. . . . I didn't really think it was that difficult to tell who the real "villain" is, although there are a lot of sick people in this movie. It is pretty clear who the villains are, although before Buffalo Bill's face was shown, I had other thoughts on who the current killer was. But there are several points in this movie (the ones that left my knuckles chalk white from clenching the seat) when you are not sure who is after whom, or who might come "out of the shadow" and seize his next victim.

WEISS: Well, whoever is jumping around in the shadows (besides you, of course) this movie is definitely no slacker. A vigorous thumbs up.

O'BRIEN: I agree. A terrifying thumbs up.

Amherst Delicatessen quells the evening munchies

It's 1 a.m., you're suffering from a chocolate attack, one of your roommates is having a nicotine fit, and the other one really wants a kosher dill pickle. What do you do? Call Amherst Deli, of course.

Until 2 a.m. Thursday, Friday or Saturday night, you can satisfy those late night munchies with the pizza alternative.

Amherst Deli delivers everything from potato knishes, to foot long subs, to pints of Ben and Jerry's, and even cigarettes, to anywhere in the Amherst area.

The Amherst Delicatessen, the 1989 recipient of the Advocate's Best of the Valley Reader's Poll, "Best Place to Order a Sandwich" award, is tucked away in the Carriage Shops adjacent to the Pub. They have been serving high quality deli food for the lowest possible prices since 1975. The atmosphere is casual, quiet and cozy. It's almost like walking into your own kitchen.

The menu is extensive. The Deli offers salads, bagels, all types of deli meats, knishes, delicious deserts, and even features an on premise liquor license. For about $5, you can buy a sizable amount of their gourmet coffee, choosing from flavors like kaluha and cream, and southern pecan. Or you can come in and help yourself to the specialty coffee of the day. Hot cider is also now available.

Starting at 9 a.m. Monday through Saturday, the Deli serves their breakfast egg sandwiches, complete with Black Forest ham and bulkie roll, for only $2. It's as quick as fast food, minus the grease. Breakfast is served from 9 a.m.-11 a.m., and can also be ordered for late night delivery. Subs and sandwiches are available from opening until closing.

The deli is open from 9 a.m.-8 p.m. Monday through Wednesday, 9 a.m.-1 a.m. Thursday through Saturday, and Sunday 11 a.m.-7 p.m. Anything on the menu can be delivered starting at 4 p.m. Monday through Saturday, ending at 8 p.m. Monday through Wednesday and at 2 a.m. Thursday through Saturday. Delivery service is available through business hours on Sunday.

So if your in the mood for a hot reuben sandwich, a fresh from scratch oatmeal fudge brownie, and some rich hazlenut coffee — all for about $5, go visit the Amherst Deli at 233 North Pleasant Street. It's high quality, homestyle deli food, without the attitude.

A feast within reach

What do you mean there's a restaurant on the 11th floor of the Campus Center?

Believe it or not, the Top of the Campus Restaurant is probably the most accessible to students and staff on the UMass campus. Located on the top floor of the Campus Center, the view from the T.O.C. is just one of the appetizing features the T.O.C. offers.

With a brand new menu, the selection and the price range is a feast for the eyes; and for students, the $5 off entrees is a nice safe feeling in the pocket.

[Entrees are made to order, and there is always enough to keep your stomach, as well as your wallet.]

The luncheon menu has a wide variety of sandwiches, and the luncheon buffet is ready to serve the lunch-on-the-go types.

For dinner, the T.O.C. prepares great appetizers (especially the nachos) large portions of stir fry and pastas, as well as succulent cuts of meats for the hearty eaters.

The T.O.C. is a hidden jewel just over the heads of the people who stroll through the Campus Center everyday. The T.O.C. is a pleasant escape for a large group of friends ready to hit the town on a Friday night or for that romantic evening when the transportation is the PVTA or those tired two feet.

The new menu is the reason to try the T.O.C. Try it again, for the first time.

Charlie's: casual charm, cheap eats

Drop the formalities and bring your appetite: Charlie's Tavern stands out from the slew of bars in Amherst center. This bar/restaurant has character — no fancy frozen drink specials or top 40 music, just lots of regulars and lots of beer.

Walk in the front door, and you are surrounded by heirlooms reminiscent of your basic local's bar — pool tables, trophies and a juke box. The walls are scattered with pictures of bearded regulars with drunken smiles. The dress is casual, very casual. And the atmosphere can only be described as comfortable.

Over the past 13 years, Charlie's, located next to the Pub, has become less of a locals hang out and more of a college night spot. Nevertheless, the clientele remains diverse. As one patron put it: "It's a place where yuppies, preppies, and townies all mix."

Charlie's keeps an edge on the competition by offering nightly food specials. On Monday night it's mozzarella sticks, Tuesday night, chicken wings, Thursday night, hotdogs and Sunday night, potato skins. Everything is a dime. Wednesday, homemade pizza is a quarter a slice and nachos are 99 cents. All food is available until midnight.

Starting at 4 p.m., a full menu is offered with munchies, cheeseburgers and sandwiches. Prices are in the $4 range. Late night orders can be taken off the full menu on Friday and Saturday nights. Drafts are $1 every night and there is always a weekly drink special. The food specials bring lines to the door on weekday nights, but business is slower on the weekends.

Charlie's leaves room to be yourself. When asked to describe what makes the tavern stand apart, a smiling bartender replied, "I know most people that come in are on a first name basis, that's nice. It's a nice feeling."

China Garden is delightful

By DANIELLE DOWLING
Collegian Staff

Even George Bush would eat the broccoli at China Garden.

Well maybe not, but at least my friend Dave would. He was my faithful and trusty companion as I ventured forth to sample the cuisine at China Garden.

"You know, most cooked broccoli is mushy and gross," he said, a speck of seaweed hanging from his mouth. He went to stab yet another helpless stalk lying on my plate. "You know, I usually don't eat broccoli but this is really good. It's steamed just right."

I am not one given to feasting on veggies that remind me of trees, so I just trusted Dave's judgement.

"The flowers are nice," Dave said pointing at the flower pots hanging from the ceiling. I had to agree. It added to the cozy ambiance of the place. It was the kind of ambiance that would be nice for a night out with someone you love, or at least lust.

But I neither loved nor lusted after Dave. I just wanted to sample some of his beef with garlic sauce which was just as orgasmic as my chicken with garlic sauce. The food is really good and hell, the prices are reasonable.

The luncheon special, which runs from 11:30 a.m.-3:30 p.m. daily, offers my favorite plate (chicken with garlic sauce) at the low price of $3.75. Your choice of white or brown rice and hot-n-sour, wonton or egg drop soup is included. You can't beat that, not even with a stick.

But that just goes to show that the folks at China Garden are dedicated to the customer. The service is fast and friendly and even the dinner prices are reasonable.

Located on the corner of N. Pleasant Street and Main, the China Garden was once the Lotus Blossom. After seven months of redecorating and installing a new kitchen, China Garden debuted on Feb. 21. Owner George Yeo says that business is slow right now, but he hopes that it will pick up in the near future. As well it should since China Garden will be offering free delivery on Friday, Saturday and Sunday beginning next week.

Righteous burritos at a reasonable price at La Cazuela

By PAMELA McCARTHY
Collegian Staff

La Cazuela managed to make me happy. That in itself is hard, even if I'm eating for free, since I am a card-carrying member of Picky Eaters Anonymous. And when I have to keep cash in mind, forget it — I'm never happy. Well, almost never. But this place did it.

Usually, when I go out to eat (which is almost never, since I am a poor student), I like to eat a lot of food. I mean a lot. I hate restaurants that give you two strips of mystery meat in reddish sauce and a few lettuce leaves for roughage. I especially hate restaurants that charge you for the trendiness of the place.

Don't worry about any of that stuff at La Cazuela. You can stuff your face for a reasonable price. (That in itself is a good reason to go. Have any of you seen the prices at some of the slop shops around here lately?) You won't feel like you're just not trendy enough to eat there. And best of all, the food is good — a rarity for a college area where most of the restaurant owners honestly believe that after dining commons food, students will gratefully pay for toxic waste.

The burritos were pretty righteous, not to mention very filling. This does NOT mean they sat in my stomach like a lead boulder, like some food that claims to be "filling." I was satisfied, and left with a grin on my face.

Szechuan to satisfy at Panda East

By P.P. FORMAN
Collegian Staff

This is an area not particularly renown for its fine dining. There is expensive and lousy (certain downtown inns) cheap and lousy (sleazy roadside establishments) and not much in the median.

And the Chinese restaurants in the area are not much better either. But there is an exception: Panda East.

I live to eat at Panda East. It's just that simple. Friends come to visit, I bring them to the Panda. Younger brother came to visit, took him to the Panda. If I could go to one restaurant in the Happy Valley, it would be Panda East over and over and over again.

Located on North Pleasant Street behind Bart's (which, of course, is where you go for dessert), Panda East has an enormous menu of chicken, seafood, pork, beef and vegetarian dishes. There are also special entrees available every day.

Panda East is not cheap — a two-entree dinner will set you back $20 or more. But like much in life you get what you pay for — and in this case it means a terrific meal.

The best entrees are the ones marked in red — Szechuan, hot and spicy. Like most Chinese restaurants which serve Szechuan, Panda East can make the entree spicy to your taste. If you say nothing, however, you get a meal that won't kill, but definitely will remind you that this is Szechuan.

Perhaps the best chicken dish is the Szechuan-style Chicken in Tea Sauce — delicate strips of chicken in a spicy sauce with Oriental vegetables. The Chicken with Cashews is also very tasty. The Chinese restaurant standard Beef with Broccoli is unusually good with large, fresh spears of the Bush Presidency vegetable of choice.

For those able to imbibe, Panda East has a full liquor license.

Panda East has a sister restaurant in Northampton called Panda Garden.

Good food and cold beer can be found at TJ's

By BRIAN HARRINGTON
Collegian Staff

Okay, now pay attention boys and girls, we're talking about food here. More specifically we're talking about TJ's Restaurant and Sports Bar. Now where the heck is this place you ask? TJ's is located at 1 Bridge Street in beautiful downtown Northampton, but in simpler terms it can be found right next to the big railroad trestle that crosses Main St. as you come into Northampton on Route 9. Why should you care? Because the food is damn good, the beer is cold and the prices are inexpensive.

The first thing one notices upon entering TJ's is the plethora of sports memorabilia hanging about the walls and filling every nook of space. The place itself is divided neatly into a dining area and bar. Make no mistake about it, the theme and focus is on sports in this establishment. The last time this writer counted there were seven or eight color television sets dispersed about the bar and dining area, all tuned into various sports channels that offered a variety of games and events. This is where I went to catch the televised UMass basketball games this year.

The atmosphere is warm, and the bartenders, waitpersons and patrons are always congenial and friendly. This is a place where anyone can feel at ease and groups can enjoy themselves and have a good time.

The menu features traditional American fare along with bar munchies, pizza and calzones, as well as daily luncheon and dinner specials. The munchies consist of wings, mushroom caps, chicken fingers and mozzarella sticks to name just a few and they all generally can be had for under $5. There is an extensive sandwich and burger selection which are all reasonably priced. I recommend the John Boy's Delight or the Pepper Steak Club. Most of the sandwich selections include a heaping pile of french fries. The soups are homemade and my favorite is the clam chowder which is thick and spicy.

TJ's also features a fine menu of dinner entrees which include steak, chicken and seafood selections. Also highly recommended are the daily specials, especially the seafood, which not only vary from the regular menu but are often priced lower than the standard fare. The pizza is tasty and certainly ranks with the best of the other pizza joints in the Valley. What I like most is that the pizza can be ordered by the slice as well.

Did I mention that the portions are generous? You won't leave hungry and if you can't finish they'll wrap it up for you to take home. Dieters and vegetarians take note; I counted eight salad plates on the menu.

TJ's features a full service bar, where you can order from the menu, and they feature occasional drink specials such as the 16oz. glass of cold Carling lager for only 80 cents this month. Now that's worth a visit to TJ's in itself! If you're under age not to worry because you can still enter and enjoy the menu and atmosphere with soft drinks. TJ's is a great place to unwind and grab a bite to eat after a day of shopping in Noho, to include with the club scene or to catch the big game on the color screen. It's accessible from any of the campuses in the Five College area by PVTA bus. They do accept most major credit cards and it's one of the best places around to celebrate the upcoming St. Patrick's Day.

Delano's: food fun found before party begins

By DENA HASELKORN
Collegian Staff

As I sat down for lunch in Delano's, located at 57 North Pleasant Street, downtown Amherst, I have to admit, I was a little skeptical. Although I had enjoyed a Delano's award-winning, "Best in the Valley" hamburger once or twice before, I had not ever experienced a full-fledged Delano's meal.

I was encouraged by my lunch companion, and manager of Delano's, Jason Holland, to start with a variety of appetizers. He assured me that all items are fried in cholesterol free oil.

Our prompt and friendly waitress first served us mozzarella garlic bread, which was baked to perfection.

The kitchen manager, Patrick Berkley, prepared a special platter for us which included mozzarella sticks, potato skins, chicken tenders, and not too spicy and not too mild buffalo wings. All were delicious.

With anticipation, I ordered my entree. I had trouble deciding between the "11-year-old lasagna recipe" dish and the grilled basil chicken with linguine. I wasn't in the mood for pasta, so the chicken it was.

As I was contemplating between the two, I noticed that all the entrees were reasonably priced, ranging from $5.50-$7.25. Each entree includes a vegetable, a starch side, and a house salad with a choice of homemade dressing. I opted for the avocado vinaigrette, which the kitchen manager said, "people travel miles for." After tasting it, I could understand why.

Jason ordered his entree, shrimp scampi, from the specials page. This page changes weekly and includes sandwich specials, such as grilled cajun catfish or stacked roast beef, entree specials, and sinful desserts ranging from ice cream to carrot cake.

Our entrees arrived steaming hot and smelling outrageous. But the taste, how did it taste? Delicious! The chicken was moist and the seasonings just right. My lunch companion smiled as he told me how tasty his lunch was.

Both portions were very generous and topped off nicely with a side of garlic bread.

The extensive menu also includes homemade soups, creative salads, specialty sandwiches, and build your own hamburgers and omeletts with anything from mushrooms to peanut butter.

Many venture into this establishment every evening for a cold beer or a relaxing drink. How about dinner at Delano's before a night uptown, or lunch with a friend in between classes? Whatever you choose, you will definitely agree that Delano's has, as Chick Delano says, "just good food."

Delectable dinners at The Sub

Attention steak and cheese sub fans: satisfy your appetites with the delectable gyro, a tangy alternative to the steak and cheese sub. Gyro (meaning round) is a Greek pita, and softer and puffier than regular pita bread. It was deliciously prepared for me with lots of beef, tomatoes and tzatzaki sauce (cucumber, garlic, sour cream, yogurt, spices and olive oil) and served in five minutes.

The Sub's steak and cheese sub is their biggest seller, drawing customers from Connecticut and faithful regulars from the Amherst area. It is really no surprise, as the Sub is a high quality shop with estimated prices of 75 cents less than leading competitors. In addition, the Sub uses amazingly fresh vegetables and top quality meats that many others do not use.

Mr. Kafides, the owner, cuts the meat himself and won't serve anything but the very best lean meats, top-shelf salads and soups. The Sub's menu is extensive, offering pastrami to eggplant.

Very popular for their quality and service, they have a long-established rapport with the Amherst community. The Sub is located at 33 N. Pleasant St. and open until 2 a.m. For all of you with voracious appetites after a night uptown, the Sub is ready to serve.

MULTICULTURAL AFFAIRS

History department conceals Native American history

Just outside the city of Montreal, a lone Mohawk sentry stands afront a blazing fire. To his right, a C.B. To his left, a spotlight. An arctic breeze blows across the highways, causing the formation of a moving funnel. The Warrior looks up and says: "No, I'm not working. I'm protecting my country from a Quebec invasion."

The only thing inconceivable about Canada starting a war so some of its ruling class can play golf is that it is conceivable. Canada, led by its Prime Sinister, is burrowing upon tyranny as it tries in any way that it can to eliminate its responsibilities which it owes by treaty to its Native people. Canada has 365 land claims cases with the Natives of Quebec. In its history it has tried to force the evaporation of culture from the Native population.

Ric Oliveira

A forced assimilation with the goal being "no more Indians, no more land claims." Since the first shot of tear gas upon Mohawk people by the Quebec police on July 11, the Mohawks have been battling for the survival of their future generations. Canada called the Warriors thugs and stated that the Warriors did not represent legitimate Native land claims. It also denies the recognition of Mohawk sovereignty. Canada is able to perform such a dishonorable rape because most people do not know anything about the Native Nations scattered throughout North America.

This is a perfect sad example of a tactic which can only be looked upon as Historical Genocide. Natives in Canada were heard to say more than once: "Our words have fallen upon deaf ears." The simple reasoning is that we do not include them in our history. We know very little about the first constitution drafted upon this continent. We know little of the significant contributions which the Native Culture influenced upon our Founding Fathers. UMass' own history department has no Native American professor or even a recognized course in the major. From the Bald Eagle to the Albany Pact and in our Constitution there are major signs of the civilizations that inhabited this continent thousands of years before us. How pathetic is it that this University's history department should symbolize how hard Native people will have to fight before they are dealt with in honor? With the world in the middle of a major war, Canada has been able to impose severe Civil Rights violations upon its Native people. Canada on its part has sent 1,400 troops to the Gulf. To deal with the Mohawks, who it calls terrorists, it sent 4,500.

In 1763, Jeffery Amherst, the Northern British commander, asked the Mohawks of Kahnawake for assistance against the French in Montreal. The Mohawks gave it to him and led the British over the Lachine rapids and into the humbled Montreal. Afterward he had this to say: "You will be well advised to infect the Indian with sheets upon which smallpox patients have been lying, or by any other means to exterminate this accursed race."

And presently, as Quebec attempts its final revenge upon the Mohawks who were known as the praying Indians, the UMass/Amherst history department maintains its lip service. A historical perspective of 400 years of hard fact history. One which allows its students to pass through with no understanding of the thousands of years of history of the prior civilizations. One cannot blame any individual for this situation; one can only hope that the system will see its blatant assimilation tactic and make a correction in its programming.

It is such a shame that in a country founded upon native purity and freedom that a history department can exist denying access to information which could benefit all of its students. At the moment there are four courses on campus with an honest depiction of North American History taught. Abusurd as it is, the history department refuses to recognize any of these courses. Next semester Professor Emma Cappelluzzo of Anthropology 270 will retire, leaving exposure to the Native world at UMass crippled. Is it too much to ask the department which is responsible for the future historians to allow its students to learn from the mistakes of the past? Or is this the plan?

So in the next few months and years when you hear the native cries for justice, when you see the Warriors forced to pick up weapons and defend their people, ask yourself why? Then look for a department in this University which is not aiding Historical Genocide and learn about it.

The Massachusetts Commission Against Discrimination (MCAD) has recently proposed to governor Weld that Asian Americans be removed from minority status protection. More information is available at the UMass United Asia Cultural Center, tel. 545-1844.

Hanging out "dirty laundry" divides Asian community

In Alexander Nguyen's effort to attack the Asian American community, he failed to point out numerous things that any educated person should be aware of. One cannot even begin to generalize any component of the Asian American communities on campus. The Asian Americans on this campus are derived from many different backgrounds. Some are international students, some are from adopted families and some are the result of miscegenation.

Kevin McKinney

Mr. Nguyen is kidding himself if he honestly thinks he can attack an entire ethnic group on the basis of ethnic ignorance. True, some of the groups on this campus are politically oriented. But do they have to be? Did someone write into the Resident Student Organization constitution that an Asian American organization had to be political or it would be deemed unjust? I don't think so. If the leaders of these organizations felt the need for more political action to accurately represent the community, then it would be done. If the members of the groups don't agree, then they have the right to remove the leader.

This is what happened within the Asian American Student Association group a while back. The people within the organization did not agree with the president, so he was removed. There's nothing wrong with an Asian organization who just get together to have a good time or do things together. The thing that is missing here is that most of the student organizations don't accurately reflect the entire Asian community on campus, only a small part. Most of the Asians know what AASA and Korean Student Association are all about. That is the reason for the poor membership in these groups.

Most Asian Americans in this country spend half their lives trying to be "American." It's the pressure to fit in, and the effort to break away from the old generational ties. Maybe you never ran into these feelings from your background, but most Asians are aware of the fact that they do look different. Because of this, they will always experience resentment and racism. This effort to escape society's cruelty causes many Asians to disregard their ancestral language and history. This is a fact of growing up in American society. Many Asians try so hard to fit into mainstream society that they are willing to reject their heritage. It's completely normal for people to feel this way early on. When a semblance of awareness appears, it's not that easy for Asians to learn anything about their heritage. Everything taught in the United States is taught from a Eurocentric point of view. There aren't many classes that cater to educating the American people about Black, Latino, or Asian topics. In my high school U.S. history class, which was considered to be among the top 100 in the state, the topic of the Japanese internment took one paragraph in the text. For three years 120,000 Japanese lived in concentration camps; this was not even made a topic to talk about in my high school.

When the focus of classes taught in the United States is primarily the European races, it's relatively easy for the Asian Americans and other ethnicities to become complacent within the White-dominated society. For Asians, this kind of complacency has given rise to the model minority myth. Even at the University, which has prided itself on multiculturalism, does not offer too much in the way of Asian American topics, other than language. In the last 50 years, the United States has been involved militarily with Vietnam and Korea, yet either are not existing courses which cover those eras. It's extremely difficult for an Asian American to recover lost roots in the present education system. The Asians who built this country are just not included in the curriculum. But to think the entire Asian community is guilty of ethnic treachery is harsh and ignorant. there are those who do like to waste their time in three-hour dance parties, and those whose sole purpose in life is to look good — so what?

You cannot disregard those who are aware of their backgrounds, or those who are actively trying to overcome their ignorance. Mr. Nguyen, you are not taking into account the whole population. There are people who have been adopted and only recently have been exposed to their heritage, and there are people who are part Asian. These people have identity crises and are trying to make amends for lost time. What they do not need is someone of their own community to show such blatant disregard and disrespect. This hanging out of "dirty laundry" is not the way to change the thinking of this "Banana Republic" that is supposed to exist. This will only inspire anger and resentment and further divide the Asian community.

YOUR DAILY HOROSCOPE
By JEANE DIXON

ARIES (March 21-April 19) Your social life is on the upswing now. Strengthen the ties of friendship by being more affectionate. Your captivating ways draw admirers from all walks of life. Take a friend to lunch.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) Spending some time alone in pleasant surroundings nourishes your creativity. You have a better head for finance than you realize. Invest in real estate or the stock market. Socialize tonight.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20) Friends or business allies at a distance can help you achieve an important goal. Place more emphasis on interaction and team play; new financial rewards will soon follow.

CANCER (June 21-July 22) A lot is at stake where jointly held funds are concerned. You are in a position to make an impressive and convincing claim. Make sure you have the latest available financial figures.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) Be careful not to get so wrapped up in other people's affairs that you neglect your own. Work the phone lines, write letters and do what must be done. Make new friends.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) Some of the decisions you make today may not be practical; seek more input from your allies. Dress your best when in the public eye. Share the limelight with the deserving.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22) Discuss financial matters with your mate, but rely on your instincts when making final decisions. A conversation with a young person proves illuminating. A friendship is a source of contentment.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21) Working quietly behind the scenes is the best way to gain respect within the community. Call in the experts for assistance in setting up new financial or business procedures.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21) Someone who has been antagonistic in the past may now extend the olive branch. Accept this person's overtures with good grace but keep your guard up. Think things through.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) A romantic relationship could be the source of uncertainty now. Avoid doing anything that might make loved ones doubt your good intentions. Assert yourself when attending a public meeting.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18) You are more alert than usual today. Capitalize on a rare opportunity that involves love as well as money. You are in the right place at the right time! Romance slowly intensifies.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20) Your eating or drinking could affect career advancement. Do not let a lack of will power stand in the way of a promotion. Romance may be influenced by certain financial considerations.

N.Y. Daily News may fold March 15

NEW YORK (AP) — The Daily News plans to cease publication March 15 unless a "binding agreement" to sell the tabloid is reached by that date, publisher James Hoge announced yesterday.

The newspaper's striking unions were notified of the deadline that could mean a shutdown of the 71-year-old newspaper.

Hoge said on Jan. 16 that the News would be sold or closed if agreements could not be reached with its nine striking unions. Federally-required notices sent to employees set an end date of March 20.

Representatives of British media baron Robert Maxwell have been trying to piece together the outline of a deal with financial advisers for the News.

Hoge gave Maxwell the go-ahead to begin negotiating with the striking unions last Thursday and George McDonald, president of the unions' umbrella group, said he hopes to meet soon.

American Express Announces A Great New Travel Program.

Now students can get the Card and get 3 roundtrips on Continental Airlines, for only $129 or $189 each.

There's only one way to cover a lot of territory without spending a lot of money. And that's by getting the American Express® Card. It's the only card that offers an exciting new travel program exclusively for students—including three roundtrip certificates on Continental Airlines.

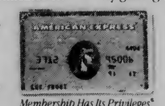
Just look at the map and pick the place you'd like to visit. If it's on your side of the Mississippi River, you can use a certificate to fly for only $129 roundtrip. Or, you can cross the Mississippi for $189 roundtrip.

You have your pick of more than 150 cities in the 48 contiguous states. And you can fly almost anytime—because there are no blackout dates. But you must make your reservations within 14 days of the day you leave. And the maximum stay is 7 days/6 nights and must include a Saturday night.

In addition to this great travel program, you'll also enjoy all the benefits of Cardmembership as well as other exclusive student privileges. They include a quarterly magazine filled with informative articles on summer jobs, careers, campus life. Plus valuable discounts from leading retailers.

But remember, there's only one way to get all this—and that's by getting the American Express Card. Just call us (have your bank address and account number on hand). What's more, with our special student offer, it's easier to get the Card now while you're still in school than it may ever be again.

So get the Card. And get ready to cover new territory on either side of our Great Continental Divide.



Membership Has Its Privileges®

CALL 1-800-942-AMEX

If you're already a Cardmember, there's no need to call. Information about your certificates will be arriving soon.

SPORTS

Track wraps up postseason with pleasant surprises

• Women return scoreless, Johnsons post strong times

By DAN WETZEL
Collegian Staff

Although the University of Massachusetts women's track team did not score any points at the Eastern Collegiate Athletic Conference Championships, coach Julie LaFreniere does not view the trip as a waste of time.

"We got some good performances, and although I would have liked to see us score, the kids did a fine job," LaFreniere said of the team's last meet of the year held in New Haven, Conn.

The main reason UMass stayed off the scoreboard was Lee Ann Ambrose missed the meet due to severe asthma and an infection in her bronchial tube.

"If we had Lee, we would have scored," LaFreniere said. "I just couldn't see anyone beating her in either the 400- or 500-meters. She is just much better than anyone else out there."

Of the athletes that did compete for LaFreniere, Becky Johnson performed the best.

Johnson finished eighth overall in the 800 in two minutes, 15.82 seconds.

"Becky ran a good race," LaFreniere said. "It was a big improvement over last week. I am pleased with her progress since being ill and now we are getting her ready for the outdooors."

Also running well for UMass was Lennice Johnson who, according to LaFreniere, just missed qualifying for the finals in the 500. Johnson finished the race in a time of 1:17.7.

"Lennice went out faster than she ever has," LaFreniere said. "She was not afraid to go for the win."

Kelly Liljeblad ran the mile for UMass in 5:00.0.

"Kelly looked a little tired," LaFreniere said. "She ran well but she was disappointed in her performance, however she was running with some of the best kids in the country.

"I am resting her this week so she will be fresh in the spring," she said.

Mo Meldrim ran the 5,000 for UMass and, according to LaFreniere, "did not run well at all."

In field events Diane Ozzolek threw the 20-pound weight 44 feet, 9½ inches to end up 13th overall.

Samone Marrisua threw the shot put 39'6 1/2".

"Our throwers have been good all year but there was just too much talent out there this weekend," LaFreniere said.

"Overall, the team did well," she said. "Although they may not be happy, I couldn't have asked for much more out of them."

Seniors Jon Corso and Gerry Squires wrapped up successful winter track seasons by finishing eighth and 12th, respectively, for the University of Massachusetts men's track team in the 5,000-meter race at the Intercollegiate Association of Amateur Athletes of America Championships this weekend.

More than 1,200 athletes from 96 schools competed in the meet, which was held at Princeton University.

Corso and Squires were the lone representatives for UMass at the meet and head coach Ken O'Brien said he was very pleased with their performances.

"They both ran very competitive races," O'Brien said. "Going into the meet, neither one of them was seeded as high as they finished. They beat a lot of people who had had better performances than them during the year."

The top six finishers in each event earned All-East honors and O'Brien said that Corso's time of 14 minutes, 47.3 seconds was only three seconds slower than sixth place. Squires completed the race in 15:01.8.

Junior Steve Brown had qualified to compete in the 500-meter race but was unable due to a strained hamstring sustained in the New England Championships.

Late surge leaves McCoy on top

By SAM SILVERSTEIN

Jim McCoy broke Lorenzo Sutton's school scoring record on a trademark 15-foot jumper along the right baseline in the final minute of Sunday's overtime loss to George Washington in the Atlantic 10 Tournament in Philadelphia.

McCoy, who finished with 26 points and has now scored 1,719 in his career, was not in the mood to celebrate immediately after the game.

"Losing took a lot out of it," McCoy said in the Palestra press room Sunday. "I'd rather not have scored the points and won the game."

In the big picture, however, McCoy's weekend was a major success. Friday, McCoy was named first team All-Atlantic 10 for the second season in a row. And Sunday, McCoy was on top of his game in front of some 19 NBA scouts on hand to eye A-10 talent. San Antonio Spurs scout Ed Manning described McCoy as "certainly" a NBA prospect.

McCoy, who has another full year to pad his scoring record, said he knows he must concentrate on other skills — ball handling in particular — if he is going to have a chance to make the enormous leap to the NBA.

In more ways than one, McCoy's career has followed in the footsteps of his father, Jim, who played in the NBA and is currently a probation administrator in Pittsburgh. McCoy is studying criminal law at UMass.

"When you're a freshman, you tend not to have your priorities straight. It was basketball first, then school. Now it's school, then basketball, then life after that. I have to get my degree. That would be an accomplishment."

St. Joseph's upset win over Rutgers Sunday night may have sabotaged UMass' NIT Tournament hopes.

Assuming the Scarlet Knights were a questionable NCAA Tournament team entering the game, and assuming the loss bumped them down to the NIT ranks, and assuming three Atlantic 10 teams at most will be NIT selections, the 17-11 Minutemen may have lost their spot.

But that's assuming a lot.

A year ago UMass finished with a 15-13 regular-season mark, then beat West Virginia and Penn State in the A-10 Tournament and came within three points of upsetting Temple in the Championship game. The late-season run earned UMass its first NIT bid since 1977.

Though the Minutemen won 17 regular-season games this year, and again played their best basketball late in the season, three of UMass' final four games were losses.

The 32-team NIT field we be announced Sunday evening.

Notes from the Palestra Basement: At Friday night's Atlantic 10 awards banquet, Rutgers forward Keith Hughes copped Player of the Year honors, Duquesne's John Carroll was tabbed Coach of the Year, St. Joe's guard Bernard Blunt won Freshman of the Year, and Virginia transfer Brent Dabbs, a senior center at Rutgers, was the Newcomer of the Year honoree.

UMass sophomore Kennard Robinson was a lock for the banquet's mythical best-dressed team. . .Faces in the crowd: "Clown Prince of Baseball" Max Patkin, and Elvis, er, referee Eric Geldart.

Bonnies light up scoreboard, leave UMass winless 91-64

By GREG SUKIENNIK
Collegian Staff

What could best be described as a difficult season for the University of Massachusetts women's basketball team came to a difficult end last night in Olean N.Y., as St. Bonaventure bounced the Minutewomen from the Atlantic-10 Conference Tournament, 91-64.

The Bonnies, now 14-14 overall, were on fire on the offensive end, shooting 51.4 percent from the field and 70 percent from the line in a balanced attack which saw six players reach double figures. If that weren't enough, the Bonnies scored an unheard-of 22 points in five minutes at the start of the second half.

"Their field-goal percentage does not reflect just how well they shot," offered assistant coach Mary Vail. "They just hit everything they put up, and we couldn't get our shots to drop." While SBU scored 27 points in the first part of the second half, UMass scored only six.

UMass also suffered from a glaring disparity at the foul line. While the Bonnies capitalized on 16 of 20 freebies, the Minutewomen only visited the line four times, hitting two.

"We weren't getting any calls all night long," said Vail. "That and the fact we were missing a lot of easy shots hurt us."

The Bonnies jumped out to an early 24-6 lead in the first half and never looked back. That margin was helped by a 13-0 SBU run.

Vail added that while UMass did do a good job overall on offense, the Minutewomen's lack of defense and rebounding were problems for the team.

"Our transition game was working well for us," she said, "but we did not play good team defense, and their rebounding edge hurt us." SBU out-rebounded UMass 42-33, as Sue Shay hauled down 12 boards to lead the way for the Bonnies.

Jodi Urich scored a game-high 20 points to lead the Bonnie onslaught, including 12 in the first half. Shay added 16 for SBU, who advance to the second round to face Rutgers on Wednesday.

UMass was led by Keyburn McCusker, who, playing in her last-ever college game, scored 18 points before fouling out with five minutes to play. Shawna Pemberton, who was seldomly used during the regular season, added 14 points for UMass.

Takaki dispels myth of 'Model Minority'

By ALEXANDER NGUYEN
Collegian Staff
and AMY CHEE
Collegian Correspondent

The celebration of the success of Asian Americans as being the "model minority" is an attack on affirmative action, according to Berkeley professor Ronald Takaki, who lectured last night to a standing room audience at the University of Massachusetts.

In his lecture dispelling the "Myth of the Model Minority," Takaki stated the elevation of Asian Americans to the "model minority" status had nothing to do with their questionable success, rather it has to do with Blacks and Chicanos.

Takaki said that although the myth emerged in the 1980's, historical evidence shows images of "successful Asians" have been used since the 1860's to discipline Blacks and Chicanos by asking why they are not hard working, industrious and so on, like Asians.

"The beginning of the 'model minority myth' is located in the ashes of the Watts riots in 1965 and 1966," Takaki said. "The media has consistantly published Asian American success since Watts. . . One publication attributed Asian American success due to hard work rather than rioting," he said.

Takaki gave a recent example of this by quoting Mike Wallace of CBS's 60 Minutes asking a school teacher, "Why can't Blacks and Chicanos be like Asians?" in reference to Asian American success in education. This comparison, he said, is used as an attack on affirmative action by asserting that if Asians can "make it" without affirmative action so can Blacks and Chicanos.

"The myth suggests that Asians have made it and been accepted [into the mainstream] but the evidence is contradictory," Takaki said. Students still feel left out of the curriculum which is predominantly Eurocentric, he said.

Attributing high family income to the success of Asians, which is measured by the number of workers per family, does not take into account the fact that Asian families have the highest number of workers, he said. He also noted that 25 percent of New York's Chinatown families live below the poverty line.

Takaki noted the rise of anti-Asian racism, most of which is directed towards women. "Statistics show violence against Asian Americans higher than any other ethnic group," Takaki said. It can be seen on walls and in bathrooms of college campuses across the country, he said.

He cited the University of Connecticut's recent racial incident where a White male student spit on an Asian American female student. When she filed complaint to UConn's dean he replied, "Boys will be boys."

Takaki pointed out that Asian Americans are underepresented in the social sciences due to lack of role models in those areas. He urged students to demand, through various means, diversification of the curriculum to include Asian American studies.

Takaki also urged Asian Americans themselves to dispel the "model minority myth" by speaking out against it and not allowing themselves to be used against other ethnic groups.

Controversy-filled 'talk show' debates war, LBG, SGA

By AMY HENRY

"No one said it was fair or objective. It's Guy Glodis.'

Glodis, strutting onto the Campus Center Auditorium's stage to the tune of Van Halen's "Running With the Devil," arm around a blonde-haired woman in a short black dress, announced, "And so the adventure begins."

Glodis said the "talk show" was organized to discuss three issues: the controversial removal of the Lesbian, Bisexual Gay Alliance seats from the Board of Governors, the Persian Gulf War, and the "sellout of the Student Government Association." However, the majority of the discussion dealth with the removal of the LBGA seats.

"Ladies and gentlemen, it's show time," Glodis said to a crowd of about 200.

The lively redhead began the evening by introducing the controversial issue surrounding the removal of the LBGA seats from the Board of Governors in Dec. 1990.

The two LBGA governors, Laura Silver, and Chris Thomas, sat with Student Trustee Angus McQuilken, in opposition of the seats' removal.

Sitting to the right of Glodis were three conservative governors, Ted Maravelis, Edward Corrigan and Bill Hewitt — all of whom had voted for the motion to remove the seats.

Silver said the seats were targeted for removal because the group represents the LGB community, and not because they are appointed instead of elected seats.

"It was a horrendous act of homophobia and it made a lot of people on this campus feel alienated from student government," Silver said.

During the discussion, Glodis referred to Silver as "queen of the jizz-bizz," and commented, "I wouldn't mind spending the night with Laura Silver."

Maravelis, saying "sodomy" was illegal in Massachusetts, said if he were governor we would not have allowed the LGBA to have office space.

"Politically-appointed seats are illegal in the United States," said Maravelis. "We need to return to Judeo-Christian values, and protect the Constitution of the United States."

Smoking several cigarettes, Glodis referred to panelists as "the bad guys on the Left" while telling many to, "Get out of here."

The next issue on Glodis' agenda was the war in the Persian Gulf. He invited Republican Club President Glen Caroline, Brown Senator Jeff Turco, Senator Ken Parker and other student leaders to determine the rights and wrongs of the Gulf war.

Corrigan said Americans should have supported their country during the war, instead of protesting.

Conservative Guy Glodis, flanked by representatives from "the Left," moderates his talk show last night in the Campus Center Auditorium.

"If you don't like it here, get the f— out," Corrigan shouted.

Parker, joined by others in the audience, pointed out that there were a tremendous number of civilians killed during the war, and said Americans should not be proud of the "conquest."

"Now the Pentagon will want to restock their arsenal and no one will say 'no,'" he said.

Glodis, a registered Democrat, said the Democratic party is the best political party because it represents the working class of America. "But the party has been infiltrated by radical Left organizations which started with the nomination of George McGovern in 1969," he said.

"Get out of my party, you liberals," Glodis said. "Go form your own party!"

Guy ended with the show with the SGA "sellout," as McQuilken got up and left because he said he is a student.

"I have homework to do," McQuilken said.

'Coming out' causes work trials

By MARIA SACCHETTI

NORTHAMPTON — In 1973, Ann Gibson graduated from Smith College and decided to make it on her own as an artist.

After 11 years of self-employment, things started sliding and she began looking for a job. But for Gibson, this meant more than sending resumes.

Gibson, who "came out" as a lesbian in 1978, said job hunting meant finding a "safe" place to work. This place took the form of a social services agency. She says she was lucky.

"My immediate boss was about as 'out' a lesbian as you could find," she told about 30 students and staff members yesterday at Smith College. "It was really an eye-opener for me to be in that kind of atmosphere where the whole agency was a celebration of the diversity of the world."

Gibson, 39, was one of three Smith College alumnae and two local professionals who sat on a panel to discuss lesbians' roles in the workplace. The event was part of a Smith College awareness week to educate the community about homosexual issues.

Now a self-employed graphic artist, Gibson said she never had a negative experience in previous jobs, which included serving as executive director of the National Association for Mediation in Education, based at UMass.

But Gibson's case may not reflect reality in Corporate America, cautioned Gail White, a 1978 Smith graduate who works at IDX Corp., a computer software manufacturer in Boston.

"It cannot be until we are completely out in society that lesbians will be able to be completely out at work," White said.

One woman from the audience, who asked that her name not be used, told the panel she was fired because she was a lesbian.

"I think there is a strong reality about people not being safe in the workplace," she said. "I was out and I thought that would be protection, and it wasn't."

To protect themselves in the workplace, the panelists said, lesbians need to carefully choose their confidants and form a network of support among their colleagues. This could mean holding staff development workshops or informing the person in charge in anticipation of harassment, they said.

If harassment occurs, or if a lesbian is fired because of

Gays' image 'ambivalent'

NORTHAMPTON — News of the episode spread quickly throughout the gay community.

The popular NBC television program L.A. Law last month introduced a situation not commonly seen on prime time: a lesbian kissing a heterosexual woman.

The storyline has kept many in the gay community on the edge of their seats, said a group of about 15 people who attended a talk at Smith College yesterday titled, "Beyond 'Positive Images': Theorizing TV's Representation of Lesbians and Gays."

In the episode, a new lawyer named C.J. kisses one of the main characters, Abby, another lawyer. The next day, Abby discusses her feelings about the incident with C.J., and the show ends with them being just friends.

L.A. Law is not alone in its attempt to grapple with issues of homosexuality. Three years ago, ABC aired about 20 episodes of a show called Heartbeat, whose the main character was a lesbian nurse practitioner. ABC also ran an episode of its series thirtysomething last season in which two gay men are shown in bed after having sex.

However, while more television programs have featured lesbian and gay characters in the past few years, producers have maintained an ambivalent attitude toward homosexuals by emphasizing their similarities to heterosexuals and downplaying their differences, according to Sasha Torres, a Smith College professor of American studies.

"To show lesbians on television, you must be able to tell the difference [from heterosexual characters]. The assumption is that lesbian sexuality is so different from heterosexuality as to be unrepresentable," Torres said. "Intimacy is limited to eye contact and an occasional hug."

A Mendenhall Fellow, Torres spoke as part of Gayla Week, a series of lectures sponsored by the Lesbian Bisexual Alliance and the Subcommittee on Lesbian, Gay, and Bisexual Concerns.

Heartbeat, the first show to feature a lesbian as a regular character, was "one of the representations on television which poked the least punches," Torres said.

However, she added the character, Marilyn, depicted a "made-to-order" image of the lesbian lifestyle: an out-of-the-closet woman who is well-liked, happy and good at her job, and in a steady relationship.

While Heartbeat drew little attention from the public, the episode on thirtysomething received attention of a different sort — ABC lost $1.5 million in advertising revenues, and the episode was not shown during summer re-runs.

Torres said viewers who want to see more of these images should call the stations.

Victory rally turns into anti-war debate

By TAMIR LIPTON
Collegian Staff

What started out yesterday as a rally celebrating "America's victory in the Gulf," ended in a heated debate on the Student Union steps between those who supported and protested the Persian Gulf War.

A Vietnam veteran who had been listening to speeches made by conservative students sponsoring the rally, as part of Conservative Awareness Week, approached a student wearing a gas mask and fatigues covered with red paint and shouted, "It's people like you that are the problem."

Approaching the anti-war protester, UMass student Peter Wagner, the veteran continued, "I went through this [expletive] years ago during Vietnam. You don't know [expletive] about being in a war."

Edward Corrigan, vice-chairperson of the Board of Governors and the editor of the Minuteman was confronted by angry onlookers about why a victory rally was held.

"What are we celebrating?" shouted one man from the crowd. "We didn't win anything."

"I think it's important to ask the radicals why they're protesting," Corrigan said to the crowd of nearly 150. "The war is over. This is a victory celebration. Stop protesting."

A man in the audience yelled to Corrigan that he would buy him a ticket to Iraq to "go die."

"That's to be expected at any rally," Corrigan replied. "There are people who are obviously afraid of war, the people who protest probably don't want to do their homework."

Pat Sitaraman, organizer for the Citizens for a Free Kuwait said, "I don't understand why they're wearing gas masks. No one is shooting chemical weapons. Are they afraid to show their faces?

"Anyone who opposes this war would have supported Hitler," he said.

The debate became so intense that Lieutenant Michael Grabiec, of UMass department of Public Safety, stood right next to the two combatants serving as a deterrent so that a fight would not break out.

Ted Maravelis, founder of the UMass New Americans Club, said the Gulf war was the "greatest military victory you can have."

"I personally disagree with President Bush's decision to stop at Kuwait... Go all the way and get rid of that Muslim infidel [Saddam Hussein]," Maravelis said.

As Corrigan retook the microphone, Wagner was lifted by a woman in the audience and placed on his back on the ground, signifying death.

"If morons like that want to lie on the ground and pretend that they're dead, that's fine," Corrigan said "That's what America's all about."

Another person in the crowd asked Corrigan why the Minuteman printed anti-homosexuality articles which he said were offensive.

Paul McGonnigal, a former editor of the Minuteman answered saying, "It's constructive for both sides to exchange ideas without a podium separating them. However, it's almost impossible to change someone's ideas [about such sensitive subjects]."

The rally was sponsored by the Republican Club and Young Americans for Freedom.

Minuteman denied temporary funds

By MARC ELLIOTT
Collegian Staff

The Student Activities Office last week asked the Student Government Association's Finance Committee to reconsider its allocation of $499 which would go to rescue the Minuteman from its budget crisis.

SAO Business Manager Allen Brainard said the request for funds was denied because he wanted to see why the committee was granting the funds before giving them the money for the next Minuteman issue.

"I had some concerns with their [SGA Finance Committee] most recent allocations and some questions about the criteria they were using, especially since it was a brand new committee," he said. "I wanted to make sure I shared those concerns with them."

Brainard also said if the Finance Committee decides to go ahead with the allocation, he will wait to "review what their criteria are" before he decides whether or not to release the funds.

The Minuteman was forced to ask the SGA for student monies after its chief sponsor, the Madison Center for Educational Affairs, delayed its funding. The Madison Center, a conservative think-tank based in Washington D.C. which sponsors such publications such as The Dartmouth Review and the Amherst Spectator, stopped sponsoring the Minuteman because it was frustrated with the paper's inability to operate independently.

The Center will resume sponsoring the Minuteman but the grant will not arrive until after spring break, too late to pay for the next issue which they hope to get out as soon as possible, according to Minuteman business manager Josh Slomich.

Finance Committee Chairperson Sharon Lang said that SAO had no problem with funding other Registered Student Organizations whose funding were judged on the exact same criteria as the Minuteman's.

"SAO said the criteria the committee used was not appropriate," she said. "If this is true, then all the other RSO's that have petitioned Finance for money, such as Students Advocating Financial Aid, the Newman Center Association, and the Fencing Club, should not have been funded, but they were and SAO had no problems with accepting our decisions."

An organization must have attempted to raise funds on their own, have some impact on campus life, and have their paperwork up-to-date to qualify for SGA funding, according to Lang.

Minuteman Editor in Chief Edward T. Corrigan accused SAO of discrimination, despite the fact that the Racquetball Club's request for $468 to cover hotel costs for their trip to Tuscon, Arizona was also denied.

"The only thing that is new is that the Minuteman has never asked for money before," Corrigan said. "Just to look legitimate, the Racquetball Club got it too. Two groups are paying the price for one man's discriminatory actions."

Cancer benefit to be held

'Casino night' to aid brain tumor research

By MARK HENSLEY
Collegian Staff

The second annual Casino Night, being held tomorrow between 8 p.m. and 1 a.m. in the Campus Center Auditorium, is expected to be another successful and "upbeat activity," Director of the Campus Center Bill Harris said yesterday.

Casino Night, which is sponsored by the Board of Governors Programs Council to benefit the Brain Tumor Society of Boston, is a genuine cash casino in which participants play with real cash, Programs Council Coordinator Sean Linnane said.

Last year, Casino Night raised $10,000 to benefit the Brain Tumor Society which Harris said is the most money ever raised by a student organization in one night.

According to Linnane, who organized the event, over 40 students have volunteered as dealers, pit-bosses, and cocktail waiters and waitresses and live big band jazz music will be provided by The Jeff Holmes Band.

Linnane, who is expecting an "extremely" successful night this year, said the event will "provide a fun environment as well as educating students about the seriousness of cancer and the value of cancer research."

Casino Night started last year as a part of the Campuses Against Cancer Program which along with UMass, includes schools such as Harvard, Syracuse, Tufts, Dartmouth, and Wesiyan.

Jeff Glassman who currently coordinates Campuses Against Cancer and who organized last year's event, said Casino Night is different from any other event on campus.

"Casino Night is a chance for students to spend a little money for a good cause while getting their money's worth," Glassman said. "Between the band, the refreshments and the fun and games, everyone has a great time."

The BOG encourages everyone to come down and contribute to a good cause, Linnane said.

There will be a $5 dollar entrance fee which does not include individual wages made at the betting tables, Linnane said.

Accident victim critical

The University of Massachusetts junior who was injured in an accident of Route 116 in Amherst Saturday night remained in critical condition yesterday at Bay State Medical Center in Springfield, hospital officials said.

Nancy Anton, 20, of Sudbury was travelling north on Rt. 116, just south of Sunderland Road, when she swerved to avoid an oppossum and collided with a southbound car, Amherst police said.

Anton was first taken to Cooley Dickinson Hospital in Northampton but was later transferred to Bay State in critical condition.

The driver of the other car, Julie Lehrman, 21, of Sunderland was treated and released for minor injuries at Cooley Dickinson.

Police said that no citations had been issued.

Student leaders give green light to elections for president, trustee

By ALEX DERING
Collegian Staff

Student leaders plan to hold elections for the offices of Student President and Student Trustee on April 9, despite official administrative statements that only the Trustee election will be held this semester.

In a letter released to the "Campus Community," dated Feb. 11, Executive Vice Chancellor Richard O'Brien and Vice Chancellors Dennis Madson and Paul Page said that the administration, responding to a request from the SGA leadership, decided to implement certain procedures "...in order to support the task of restructuring student government in the most timely and effective manner."

Item number seven on the administrations's list of ways to assist student government reads:

"Elections of all Student Government Association officers, except for the Student Trustee position, will be postponed until September. At that time, elections will be held for whatever offices are specified in the new governance structure. The election for the Student Trustee will be held in May in accordance with the laws establishing this position. Current SGA officers will retain their positions through this semester."

Alan Van Tassel, chair of the Government Affairs Committee, which is responsible for running student elections, explained why student government is opposed to item seven.

"After the [student government leadership] asked the administration to take charge, we, the student Senate, voted 30-13 against that decision," he said.

The impeachment of several student government officers took place soon after that action.

"We recalled [Speaker Dan] Chesnicka and [Treasurer Karen] Talbot," said Van Tassel. "And [President Natasha] Diephius managed to hang on by the skin of her teeth."

He also said student government, although willing to comply with some portions of the administration's letter of Feb. 11, is adamant about holding the election for both offices on April 9.

"We sent people to the Commission on Undergraduate Student Governance, which was formed by the Feb. 11 letter, even though we are completely against this restructuring of student government by the administration," said Van Tassel.

He stressed the student government is "definitely in favor of restructuring itself, but by the students, without the administration's interference."

He also said the Senate voted unanimously to hold the Student President/Student Trustee elections on April 9.

"The fact that every person in the Senate agreed to the same thing is unusual enough to show that this is something all of us feel very strongly about," he said.

Citing that the Student Senate is not frozen from all of its powers, Van Tassel said, "[The administration] has no right to stop the election. It is not their decision to make. This election belongs to the students."

Van Tassel voiced concern that the administration could possibly attempt to weaken or completely eliminate student government during the summer.

Irene Carew, director of the Student Activities Office, said, "The decision concerning student elections stands as put forth in the Feb. 11 letter."

As of 4 p.m., March 5, three people had taken out candidate papers for the office of Student Trustee: Manuel Bento, Kevin Newnan, and Ken Parker.

Only one person had taken out nomination papers for the office of Student President: David Gagne.

With a touch of sarcasm, a student expounds upon war

CELEBRATE! Unipolar hegemony has been achieved. We battered the Third World into submission. The United Nations is working now. We no longer need an energy policy. George Bush is not a wimp. Off-shore drilling is beautiful. More nukes are good nukes. Vietnam's a bad dream. Patriotism is "in" again. Our cars are great again. The Pentagon is fat again. Kuwait's "White slaves" are home again. Cheers!

Owen Broadhurst

"SO MUCH FOR THE 'MOTHER OF ALL BATTLES'!"

All of Iraq's oil is Kuwait's now. They should have let it happen in the first place. We can starve her children to death with reason now. We'll just let the great International Monetary Fund demand it. We'll hang Saddam as a war criminal now — but still ignore the case of General Westmoreland. Forget about ending the war — the war's been renamed "reparations".

Take pride in Iraqi war dead. Pol Pot would have been proud. Smile as you beat Iraq's face in. She deserves it, after all. Watch while TV shows the beatings which follow. Strange how the beatings of Palestinians in Kuwait are news now. This is not so new to them, but they're not the spectators. We need a little fun.

The press has never seen these beatings before, but before they were not so public. Never mind how the Palestinians had their passports stolen, were spat on, and forced to work at slave wages. They supported Saddam. They deserve it. Who really needs a face, anyway? Scar tissue will do fine. We can put them beside the charred bodies when we're done watching.

Civilian bunker? No, that's a command and control center. Couldn't you tell by the dead babies? We don't use body bags, they're human remains pouches. Missiles are shields, you know. War paves the path to peace. Night is day. Bad is good. Orwell was only seven years off. Necrophiliacs run the war machine, but we praise them for their humanity. Generals condemn atrocities.

"Support our soldiers" means "kill a commie for mommy." Strike-breakers at Alliant Techsystems (weapons makers) are patriotic. Who cares about a livable wage when there's bombs to be made. Pinko faggots, we need to defend our freedom! Next thing you know, someone will criticize the government — and what will become of democracy then? It might exist!

Sado-sexual imagery has been exploited all throughout the conflict — from the homophobic slurs of homegrown fascists to the homophobic slurs of a president who can't even pronounce a world leader's name right. With the Patriot missile, the proverbial rape of the Third World and its people are for the good of the nation. One can even picture four-star generals masturbating to the growing Iraqi body count, ejaculating over photos of bodies.

Troops are "withdrawn" or "pulled out." Policies are "castrated." Missiles "penetrate." Bombs and sirens "molest" the night. Kuwait is "sodomized." Pundits are wrong to suggest that the New World Order lacks a domestic policy. The New World Order has presented, in especially colorful language, a fabulous domestic policy — the maintenance of a woman-hating, race-baiting, heterosexist reality.

Why should we be forced to kill ourselves and each other so that we might construct a convenient, if false and hypocritical, psychic reality? Cannibalism is not a solution to the world's problems. We do not make them disintegrate by creating more — nor can we re-affirm our humanity by loving life less. Or do you really believe that some lives are worth losing, that humans are basically wicked — especially you?

Zionist organization defends fund-raising

We, Hillel Council, would like to thank Eyad Kishawi for publicizing our project, "Quest for Hope" in a recent Collegian column (March 4, "Paying for Israeli brutality"). The editorial was, of course, based on false, made-up facts, but it was publicity nonetheless. We're not quite sure why Project Hope is so confusing to him. It seems like it should make sense that since Jewish people have historically supported and worked for the benefit of other minority groups, that when Jews are in trouble, they should try and help themselves, too.

Kishawi implies that he knows what Hillel is really doing. It's funny, though, because none of us can remember ever seeing him at a Hillel meeting. In fact, he seems to know so much about the motives of Jewish people that he probably believes that Israel encouraged Saddam Hussein to bomb homes and civilians whenever he felt like it. In fact, let's go all the way with his line of thinking: Israel must have created Saddam Hussein so that he could terrify Israelis with sporadic bombings and the constant threat of war, so that UMass Hillel, and others who believe that a Jewish state should exist, could pretend to send money to the victims of Saddam's terror, all as a front for displacing Palestinians. Okay, as long as your thinking logically.

We're pleased that others are paying so much attention to Hillel's fundraising drive.

Weld is going to destroy higher ed

Here's a couple words I'd like to define for you this week, in case you feel your vocabulary is on the down-swing.

Tuition Increase — This equals 33 percent for next year. That is, according to our esteemed Governor William F. Weld. All students in state higher public education could be paying 33 percent the amount they are paying now. Sounds like fun, huh?

Governor Weld believes people who can pay to come here now can afford this tiny raise. Weld thinks people who go to state institutions can handle this; if they have to take out a loan or something — too bad.

Gayle Long

Let's face it — this man made no commitment to state higher education before he got into office.

Silber was no demi-god by any means, but at least he told us up front what the case was — he wanted everyone to go to Boston University.

Yes-Man — Weld has this super-neat proposal to ditch the Board of Regents. Weld, I think, had this crazy notion the Regents got paid.

They don't. But Weld also probably doesn't like the fact these supporters of higher education don't agree with him on many of his plans to make the state fiscally sound.

Probably because Weld's ideas on higher education would make us the worst state for public higher education in the country.

What Weld would rather do is add an "education czar" to his cabinet. I think — maybe I'm wrong — this person would get paid.

Obviously, Weld cares less about the students in state universities and colleges than he is in giving a political friend a job with a high salary.

Why try to save one course section, the funding for one graduate teaching assistant or one untenured professor, right Billy?

Ol' Billy-Boy wants some nice Republican to sit in an office in the Statehouse, send his/her children to some fancy-schmancy private school in the Harvard Square vicinity, and forget the people in the middle class might want to get an education.

Closing State Schools — Right now, smaller state schools are on the endangered list. Massachusetts Maritime Academy, Worcester State, North Adams State and a few community colleges are being picked apart and Weld is the man with the golden touch.

Imagine telling professors in four state schools their services are no longer needed. "You may go now, James." It's like the butler. Once he's done his job, send him packing. It is, of course, the only civilized way.

"Sorry, your hometown community college has been wiped out? What? Don't have the SAT score to get into the University? I guess you'll have to skip out on the education. Too bad. My daughter goes to Radcliffe — what's it to ya?" says the new education czar to a dazed and crazed high school senior.

"I want to be a teacher. I want to teach English, just like my mom. I love English, and I love school. But the SAT's don't reflect my ability. I can't believe I can't go to college. You work for the state. Why is your daughter in a private school?"

"Because I want her to get a good education — I mean I want her to go to a small school with a lot of private instruction."

"Well, if you ever think of telling Weld that maybe if you and he put some thought into it, higher education could be good. And, instead of tearing it to shreds, your daughter and I could go to school together."

"Hey, he slumped to the floor. HELP!, the education czar has fainted! What did I say?"

Rather than blame, learn a lesson from fire

I would like to comments on the Collegian's recent smoke detector article (Feb. 28, "Deaths lead to questions about smoke detector law").

It is truly unfortunate, although almost certain, that a fatality must occur before a change is made to our state's fire codes and statutes. Following such tragedies, the question "why?" is, understandably, often asked.

Unfortunately, Tamir Lipton's article seems to place the blame on local officials for not enforcing the local option smoke detector statute sooner, thus averting this loss of life.

First, I would like to point out that none of the Commonwealth's "local option" fire laws would be on the books today without the relentless efforts of the fire service. Only as a result of their actions can we lay claim to have the first high-rise sprinkler law in the nation, several residential smoke detector laws, a local option sprinkler law for new multi-family dwellings, and a proven boarding house sprinkler law (also adopted by the town of Amherst) which was enacted only after the deadly Elliot Chamber fire in Beverly which claimed 15 lives.

Until recently, the only requirement for mandating the installation of smoke detectors in existing one and two family dwellings was upon the sale or transfer of property. It is disheartening that the importance of installing a $10 life-safety device has taken a back seat to questions of legal interpretation of this new statute. I believe to lay the blame on the Amherst Fire department for not acting quickly enough in enforcing the law is not only unfounded but serves no purpose other than to stir emotions.

Check your smoke detector. If you don't have one, buy one. The fire service urges their use and maintenance not only during National Fire Prevention Week but throughout the year.

To the credit of Chief Zumbruski and the members of the Amherst Fire department, I commend the town of Amherst for having the insight in adopting this new smoke detector law and, most importantly, both residential sprinkler statutes.

Blood Wedding moves slow, but kicks by the end

By ANGIE LANDRY
Collegian Correspondent

Blood Wedding
Curtain Theatre
Thursday, Feb. 28

Though painfully slow in starting, once the UMass Theater Department of production of Blood Wedding kicks in after intermission, it becomes the heart wrenching tragedy that Garcia Lorca wrote it to be. Directed by Anna Dolan, Blood Wedding is a tale of romance, lust, and revenge set in a village in Spain that will put you at the end of your seat.

Although outstanding performances are put in by Viviana Bianchi as the mother, Marissa Matrone as the maid, and Edward Jewett as the beggar, the truly remarkable part of this play was the visual effect. Ruth Cooke has once again designed an incredible set of costumes. From an elegant black wedding dress to the beggar's hideous robes and features to the moon's mystic garments, Cooke has set the eerie and deathly mood of the action through her costumes.

The lighting enhanced the set, which gave the audience the feeling of chaos and heat during the forest scenes. It almost seemed that if someone were to touch the stone platforms, they would feel the warmth of the Spanish sun radiating on them. The dense vines which dangled precariously above the audience brought the viewers closer to the actors, making them feel as if they were part of the scene.

Blood Wedding runs through March 9, but unfortunately it is completely sold out. For those of you who were lucky enough to get tickets, a bit of advice — be patient and sit through the first half of the show, the second half is more than worth the wait.

Blood Wedding will be performed tonight through Saturday night at UMass in the Curtain Theatre at 8 p.m. Admission is $3 for students and senior citizens and $5 for the general public, but it doesn't really matter because the show is sold out anyway.

Dream on Monkey Mountain
Theatre 14, Smith College
Friday, March 1

Derek Wolcott's mythic dream song, Dream on Monkey Mountain, recounts the journey of a poor black man, a charcoal maker of West India, who is taken by fits on Monkey Mountain and thinks himself the king of Africa. This hero-beggar, bewildered, poetic, epic in proportion, both African lion and Catholic Christ, is ignorant even of his own ignorance, which is no excuse before the "Roman Law" — as the scornful Corporal Lestrade tells him when he is thrown in jail. For the law does not protect "who from what," only "what from who." Yet he alone is able to see again, whether by white mist or wisdom, a passion of self-determination which strikes awe into his enemies and friends alike, even as they plot to turn miracles into money and freedom into depotism.

A week of reflection on women's history

Bands gather for Necessities benefit

By CHRISTINE DUMAS
Collegian Correspondent

In Massachusetts a woman is killed every 22 days. Battering is the leading cause of injury to women in the United States and the leading cause of birth defects in infants. Battered women's programs in Massachusetts receive approximately 60,000 calls a year.

These are the realities which a Northampton women's shelter must deal with daily.

Necessities/Necessidades, a Hampshire county battered women's shelter, like much of the state has been facing difficult financial times. With the help of friends in the Valley, staff members of Necessities hope to bridge a gap in funding this weekend at a benefit concert at 8 p.m. Saturday in the Student Union Ballroom.

Featuring Fugazi, The Brood, and ZuZu's Petals, the concert is sponsored by Progressive Organization for Women's Rights, Union Program Council and the Hampshire College Alternative Music Collective.

Necessities/Necessidades was incorporated in 1979 as a cooperative organization which would serve and support battered women and their children. In 1990 alone, Necessities sheltered 103 women and children, received over 2,000 hotline calls and served over 400 women.

The services Necessities provides include shelter, bilingual counseling, peer support sessions, legal and welfare advocacy as well as community education.

The staff at Necessities consists of four full-time and two part-time members. Working as a collective, none of the staff acts as the director. Instead they all serve as coordinator of a different aspect of the organization.

With only six paid staff members, Necessities relies heavily on volunteers. Over 60 volunteers take part in every aspect of the shelter's services from answering hotline calls to taking the children of battered women out to an occasional movie.

Without the assistance of these volunteers, Necessities could not survive, said Cathie LeBlanc, administrative coordinator.

This Saturday's benefit concert is one of the many fundraising events Necessities will be holding this year. LeBlanc said the shelter hopes to raise $35,000 this year for the shelter. Necessities has been hit hard by the fiscal crisis currently occurring in Massachusetts, she said. Over 60 percent of Necessities' budget comes from the Massachusetts Department of Social Services, the prime sponsor of community action programs in the state.

In the past two years, Necessities has lost almost $17,000 of their operating budget, nearly 10 percent. LeBlanc said this loss of funding has drastically reduced the services Necessities can provide for battered women. Because of the funding crisis, the shelter has had to cut back community education and housing advocacy programs. The group has abandoned plans for a much-needed child advocacy program.

Another crisis facing Necessities this spring is the loss of their house in Northampton. Necessities has been located in a house at 16 Center Street which has been available to them rent free.

The house has served as a safe and comfortable shelter for hundreds of women and children, LeBlanc said. Necessities is now searching for another house that could be donated or rented to them at a discounted rate, so when their June 1 move out date arrives, they may continue to shelter the battered women in the area.

For the past 12 years, Necessities has been a safe haven where battered women and their children could find both support and help. With the decline in funding and the loss of their rent-free house, now more than ever they will have to depend on contributions and fundraising to support their organization, LeBlanc said.

International Women's Week events detailed

By AMY HENRY
Collegian Staff

For poor women who worked in the garment industry and went on strike against squalid working conditions in New York City, March 8, 1909 was a day of protest. Now this day is called International Women's Day — a day to celebrate women's accomplishments all over the globe in the past and to share their hopes for the future.

According to University of Massachusetts history professor Joyce Berkman the day was named by the Socialist Party to honor working women.

Gina Gombar, president of the Progressive Organization for Women's Rights said, International Women's Day is a time for women to come together and "celebrate different experiences and cultures."

Swati Joshi, chairperson of the group said, "I hope the day will create an awareness of what it means to be a woman all over the world. International Women's Day is good for now and hopefully one day we won't need it."

Michelle Rapp, a graduate student in organizational development and an intern in the Student Activities Office, said she planned a poetry reading featuring women reading poems written by women from all over the world.

"International Women's Day is important to draw attention to women's issues, international women and to give women a chance to celebrate," Rapp said.

The reading, which will occur from 9 a.m.-1 p.m. this Friday, will also feature international coffees and teas. The craft shop will provide a muriel of the globe for women to place women symbols and write on, buttons can be made and international women's music will be played from WMUA.

"This even helps people know that it is International Women's Day, they can have fun, and think about women all over the world," she said. POWER has planned several events for the day. On Thursday, poetry readings will be held called "Women's Lives," from 1-4 p.m. in the Campus Center. Also on Thursday, Susan Day will speak on "Traditional Roles of Women and Judaism from a Feminist Perspective," at 7:30 p.m. in Hillel House Lounge, sponsored by Hillel and POWER.

On Friday, a spaghetti dinner program and dance with a sliding scale fee of $3-4 will start at 5:30 p.m. at the Unitarian Church in Northampton. This event is sponsored by Women's Pentagon Action. On Sunday, a woman only contra dance will occur from 7-10 p.m. at the Red Barn at Hampshire College. This is sponsored by the Hampshire College Women's Center.

Prof discusses struggle for women's history

By RUA KELLY
Collegian Staff

When most of us think of women's history, figures such as Florence Nightingale, Mata Hari or Eleanor Roosevelt pop into our heads. For Joyce Berkman, a professor of history at the University of Massachusetts, women's history is much more than Betsy Ross.

Berkman was involved in the struggle to establish a Women's Studies department at UMass and taught its first women's history course during the mid 1970s. The first few courses focused on American and British women, and were part of a new "reclamation of history that involved more than the suffrage movement."

"There was a skepticism of the legitimacy of women's history by a minority of professors within the department who thought it was a passing fad," she said. But Berkman also said the marginalization of women's history has largely dissipated in the history department here.

Berkman's early interests were in race, ethnicity and class issues, although the "nature of the field of women's history reflected the predominantly middle-class White interests of students of history."

Berkman lauded early Women's Studies students for a call for diversity in the curriculum. "It took students to demand that we become sensitive to sexual preference — student initiative really made a difference. Recently, we have begun to incorporate differently-abled women, but it remains a problem."

What can a student, particularly a woman, discover from studying women's history? For Berkman, it was the discovery "that the categories of history and the generalizations of history. . . are wrong. The basic categories had to be re-evaluated based on what we learned from women's history." She cited the common historical myth that the 19th century saw a steady improvement in medical care of Americans. Students of women's history discovered that female and infant mortality stayed the same during the century — and that women who were healers and midwives were "systematically purged. All this had been erased and obscured. . . ignoring women's lives."

What role does the study of women serve for historians?

Berkman explained that "one central contribution of women's history is the role of problematizing gender. The discipline added to the underscoring of the historical context in which people gain selfhood [as well as] the construction of difference which is historically created."

For Berkman, a course in women's history does not simply tell you what other women did. One can gain ". . . a sense of possibility. By having your past denied to you, you suffer from a form of amnesia.

"But the daily struggle of women to resist second-class status — to deal with exploitation and marginalization — is an extraordinary record." She noted in particular the struggles of African-American and Native American women as "an inspiring record of human possibilities for women and men. We don't know the human depths of resilience and creativity."

Through the study of women, both famous and anonymous, Berkman said we can learn "the dynamics of power, and how these power relationships are gendered, providing us with a framework in our daily lives."

One final question remained, which Berkman answered with a smile: How can men benefit from a course in women's history? She said men can "grow to understand how construction of male identity is entwined with the nature of women's political and social situation."

After all, she asks us, where is there another course in which men are going to study "how they as men define things?" Berkman points out, "Men are also victimized by patriarchal assumptions and rigid definitions of masculinity."

At the University, students are fortunate to have a sizable number of faculty members with concentrations in women's history.

These range from Yvonne Haddad and Mary Wilson (Middle Eastern women's history) to Joye Bowman (African woman's history) to Kathy Peiss (American woman's history). However, Berkman also notes that there are noticeable gaps in areas of women's history at UMass, such as Asian women or Latin American women.

Joyce Berkman's words convey both the her passion for her field and the sincerity of her belief in women's potential. For her, history is not just a topic, but a challenge.

Borderland pays dues in the Valley

Take a singer who sounds like Robbie Robertson. Give him three guitars and two other guys to play them. Add a keyboardist, a drummer, a bassist, one of the best harmonica players you'll ever hear. Now have them serve up some great Zappa/Stones/Mayall/Little Feat/Neil Young/Allman Brothers music. Voila! Youve got Amherst's own Borderland.

Pianist Peter Orth will perform Beethoven and Brahms accompanied by the Franciscan String Quartet tonight at UMass in Bowker Auditorium at 8 p.m. Tickets are $20 and $18.

Dave Spagone (lead vocals/guitar), his brother Mark (guitar), Jason Buhl (vocals, guitar), Chris Houston (vocals, bass), David Wedge (keyboards), John Gibney (harmonica), and Corey Smaller (drums), have been playing together as Borderland for about a year and a half now. They play pretty much any gig they can - Katina's, Pearl Street, Twister's, high schools, private parties - you name it.

As about half the band is comprised of UMass students, they have a lot of ties to the area, as evidenced by the above list of venues. Over the past two months or so, they've been playing about there shows per weekend, sometimes two in one day. They're slowing down now, averaging only two show per weekend. The only real publicity they get is by word of mouth and posters the band members themselves plaster everywhere they can.

Their music is best describes as blues/rock in the tradition of the aforementioned bands. They play some long tunes, too. Seven or eight minutes per song is not unusual, and five is short. When asked why they do such long songs, guitarist Mark Spagone replied that they really like to do extended jams. They just love to do the Blues.

They play mostly original material in concert; last Thursday at Pearl Street they played ten songs, six of them, originals. Their writing sessions have been described as "free-for-alls," where one band member shares a song idea with the other guys, and everybody jumps in and goes nuts with it until they come up with something good. After hearing them only once, I'd say that result is the usual one.

They have had an EP out for a couple of months, which can be heard occasionally during the Blues block, 3-6 p.m. Monday through Friday on WMUA.

This Friday they can be heard at The Hadley Pub. On Saturday they'll be doing a benefit show for the preservation society at the Montegue Town Hall. Appearing Terrence La Monte Williams, always a formidable presence, delivered a thoroughly connected, dynamic performance of the main role, made difficult by the metamorphosis between drunkard and messiah. The representative White Man is a deceptively shallow role, well balanced between the utter repulsion of whiney righteousness and a kind of smoking club wit, played, in an interesting choice of duplicitousness, by an Asian female, Helen B. Suh. Some secondary actors were also right on target. Celestiina Owusu as Tigre the fellow conspirator, for example, had just the right measure of oppressed virtue and cynicism. If there was a weak link it was the cabinet maker Death who stood about through the whole play about as menacing as a maypole. There was some weakness in the stage combat sequences and group dancing, but on the whole a good ensemble spirit pervaded the company and even the smallest characters were well-rounded.

Dream on Monkey Mountain is rich and thought provoking on many levels, but remains an extremely difficult play for actor, director and audience. The performance was three hours long and almost unbearably exhausting, though there were seldom any points where one could say it was boring or irrelevant. The script has to be understood primarily as philosophic poetry, comparable to Shakespeare, and hanging on a not-very-fast moving plot. One of the admirable things about this production, particularly for a college, is the consistency of the West Indian accents, however, that may have been the very thing that bogged it down and set road blocks for the audience. An ambitious director and cast chose a really wonderful piece and simply reached a little higher than they could grasp. No dishonor in that.

Writer/director Derek Wolcott is premiering a new musical play, Steal, at the American Repertory Theatre in Cambridge, Massachusetts this spring.

YOUR DAILY HOROSCOPE
By JEANE DIXON

ARIES (March 21-April 19): The emphasis now is on the fulfillment of hopes, wishes and dreams. You could get a second chance at business. Romance holds a delightful surprise for those willing to forgive and forget.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Curb a tendency to shy away from people with influence. There is a lot they can do to help you. Keep up with important correspondence. Share secrets only with your loved ones.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Legal matters and publishing contracts are in the spotlight. If you feel ambivalent about something, seek solitude and think things out. Monetary gains are likely later in the week.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Face up to heavier family responsibilities. A legal problem can be successfully resolved. Romance is exciting but may not last. You may have to revise your evening plans.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Get caught up on your work and you will make important points with higher-ups. Focus your attention on your property improvements, and other changes are likely. The social scene looks lively tonight.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): The emphasis today is on advertising, publicity and literary efforts. Make contact with your siblings. Your optimism is contagious! You reach a major decision about your property or career.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Have an alternate plan ready if major or minor changes occur. A dramatic incident makes romance even more exciting. A kind word or thoughtful present will help you mend some emotional fences.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): A humanitarian project captures your attention. Finish what has been hanging fire and move on to new opportunities. Spend the evening reading and relaxing at home.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Get in touch with VIPs and then branch out. Consider the financial cost of publicizing a recent effort. Do your homework before facign those who will ask probing questions.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Your innovative ideas will be well-received by influential people. Keep the romantic side of your life under wraps. Spending should be held to a minimum. Postpone purchasing non-essentials.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Seek the guidance of experts and give credit to those who will help you. Romantic partner will respond enthusiastically to a trip. Be honest with someone you hope will become your ally.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Settle your debts and curtail spending. Your apotimism rubs off on those closest to you. Discourage someone you love from ruining your budget! The phone line will hum tonight.

Cafe in Butter

Butterfield Dining Commons will host Residential Arts' Beat Cafe tonight at 8 p.m. Admission will be $1 with a valid student I.D. and refreshments will be served. One can enter through the back door of the dining commons.

The Beat Cafe has evolved into a forum of expression which incorporates social, political and cultural issues. The second round of auditions for the next Beat Cafe will be on April 7, at 8 p.m. again in Butterfield Dining Commons. Writers, poets, performance artists, dancers, actors and singers are welcome. Each piece should be no longer than four minutes in length. For audition information call Terry Jenoure at 546-4851.

The Beat Cafe is sponsored in part by ResArts, UMass Arts Council and the Student Affairs Cultural Enrichment Fund.

A free-for-all

If you'd like to be fed, lavished with gifts and turned on to three bands on the brink of like, really, really big success because they're so good, Katina's would be the place to hang from 6 p.m. to 8 p.m. tonight.

Maggie's Dream, 29 Palms and Jesus Jones, number one on the alternative music charts last week, each have distinct and evocative new sounds. Danceable Maggie's Dream psycho-funk has been featured on radio stations in the area since this fall.

Jesus Jones is a little more industrial, a little more loud, but equally interesting.

Pizza, posters, CDs and cassettes will be given out in the spirit of band promotion. Everyone who comes will receive a free gift of some sort. Why not milk corporate rock for all its got?

Go ahead . . . to Katina's, tonight, and fill your pockets in the spirit of consumer savvy.

with them will be their usual billing partners, Minibus Sandwich. This concert will be filmed by Continental Cablevision, and will premiere sometime in late April or early May. The band's very excited about this, as their music will now be available to a much larger audience. Maybe they will get the respect they greatly deserve, and won't have to resort to hours of poster hanging anymore. One last note - Borderland will be doing a 70s theme night at Hadley Pub on March 28, so, if you go home for Spring Break, remember to bring back your bell bottoms, platform shoes, chest medallions and the like. Or go as you are if you wish. Bon Voyage!

Screw the Grateful Dead, check out NRBQ instead

Peek-A-Boo. The Best of NRBQ (1969-1989)
NRBQ
Rhino Records

Got the car from Massachusetts, got the RADIO ON.

— JONATHAN RICHMAN

NRBQ keep the world of rock and roll honest. Or rather, the world of rock and roll keeps NRBQ honest. Maybe both. In any case, the New Rhythm and Blues Quartet (and at times in their history Quintet) have been consistently turning out snappy blues-laced pop songs since their inception over twenty years ago.

This compilation, like most Rhino comps, easily contains some of the band's best material with nary a wasted track. The thirty-odd selections in Peek-A-Boo manage to put a smile on the face and thirty-odd catchy melodies in the head. The liner notes make good reading too. While I would still recommend Grooves in Orbit or At Yankee Stadium especially to those who want more, this sucker about does it all.

Within the two CD cassette cases, you'll find a playground of catchy songs and too much fun for one boy or girl. Granted, the music world doesn't start and stop on catchy pop songs. If that were the case, NRBQ would be messiahs. But since it isn't, the four lads are just a damn good time.

NRBQ originals extol many of the finer trappings of American Life: "RC Cola and a Moon Pie" is just as sweet as its namesake. "Captain Lou" contains a hilarious guest vocal by wrestler extrodinaire Captain Lou Albano. "Ridin' in My Car" is, well, the American past time, right? This or "Me and the Boys" or "Green Light" make as good a driving anthem as any (see above).

The liner notes claim the Mass Pike provided inspiration for the rest-stop blues in "Howard Johnson's Got His HoJo Working." And who could ever forget those all-important Silly Love Songs. Tracks like "Mona," "Never Take The Place Of You" and "Things To You" make one wonder why our heroes have not enjoyed greater popular recognition.

Covers are also part of the NRBQ equation — 1989's "Whistle While You Work" (from an A&M compilation of Disney songs) can be found in Peek-A-Boo as well as Johnny Cash's "Get Rhythm" and the blues standard "Rocket In My Pocket." Live, the band have been known to cover nearly anything and they've even recorded a few of these infamous covers (including an Alvin and the Chipmunks song, unfortunately not included in this compilation). Covers of NRBQ material abound as well. For example, Bonnie Raitt and Dave Edmunds have both recorded versions of Terry's "Me And The Boys." (In fact, Bonnie Raitt's version is on her album Green Light— yet another tip of the hat to the boys.)

So screw the Grateful Dead, these four are the hipsters to follow around the country. Now, this article ain't about the Dead per se; I'm not going to pontificate about how Mr. Garcia and his troupe are overrated (although I think they are). But for a band with similar musical roots as the Dead ('60s country/blues), Terry, Al, Joe and Tom have certainly aged as gracefully as some would argue Garcia, Hart and Co. have. Aw, shucks, and I'd trade Dead tickets any day just to hear Joey and Skeeter Davis harmonize like they do in "Things To You."

Since Bob Dylan's Biograph, it seems that every huckster who recorded more than one album has released their own voluminous retrospective. (We're all waiting for Eddie Money's or C.W. McCall's Biograph to signal the dying cry of this wasteful trend.) And Peek-A-Boo comes tootin' close to the here's-everything-we-ever-recorded school of compilations. The beauty of Peek-A-Boo, though, is that it works. I'd even advise plunking down the extra few dollars for a CD version, as it contains some of the best material in the set ('RC Cola And A Moon Pie', 'Mona', 'How Can I Make You Love Me' and the happy little Christmas Wish').

So when preparing for The Nutty Spring Break in your tropical location of choice, remember the sunscreen and always keep in mind the Q-ian philosophy: "Me and my buddies just like to go, we havin fun everybody know. We don't fuss and we never fight. We just groove takin' in the sights." Me and the boys.

British media baron moves to buy New York Daily News

By PETER ALAN HARPER
The Associated Press

NEW YORK — Robert Maxwell signed a letter of intent yesterday to buy the Daily News and announced he will meet with striking unions this week.

The news announced the letter of intent several hours after Maxwell and the unions said they would meet Thursday. Term were not announced.

Maxwell's move to purchase the News came one day after the paper announced it would close March 15 unless a binding agreement is reached with a buyer — and more than four months into a violent, bitter strike.

If Maxwell is to acquire the News, once the nation's largest paper, he has to come to terms with both the present owners and the unions.

"Obviously, I am very pleased at this development. I wish both parties well," said Publisher James Hoge, who declined to disclose any of the terms of the agreement.

The News' statement said it would not negotiate with any other potential buyers while Maxwell is involved.

Tom Clarke, a spokesman for Maxwell in London, said in a telephone interview that "If all parties are serious it shouldn't take to long" to reach a settlement.

"Both parties have invited him to come in and save the paper from extinction," Clarke said. "A paper like this would be a great loss to New York."

While neither the news nor Clarke would reveal what was in the letter, it could look similar to a deal abandoned by another party who has negotiated with the News.

Mortimer Zuckerman, a real estate developer and publisher of U.S. News and World Report, was offered a deal where he would assume about $105 million in liabilities, a source close to Zuckerman told the Associated Press.

Additionally Zuckerman would have picked up the operating costs while the News would have given him $60 million, said the source, who spoke on the condition of anonymity.

The source said the deal fell apart when Zuckerman asked for $82.5 million and the News would not budge.

"They said that $60 million was absolutely as far as they were willing to go," the source said. "Maxwell must have agreed with the $60 million."

Maxwell was to leave Great Britain yesterday and begin the talks tomorrow morning in Manhattan, said George McDonald, president of the Allied Printing Trades Council, the striking unions' umbrella group.

The British publisher is looking to settle by March 11 and will negotiate personally with the nine Allied presidents who will come with one aid each.

The agreement to negotiate came in a Tuesday morning trans-Atlantic telephone call between Maxwell and McDonald.

"He's [Maxwell] accomplished in six minutes on the phone today what usually takes three weeks to ac complish," McDonald said referring to how long it can take to set up a meeting.

The talks between the News and unions fell apart last week after 13 months. The paper has sought contracts that would give it control of staffing levels and other concessions that the unions said were attempts to break them.

It was not known what kind of deal Maxwell might try to strike with the unions, which had offered to cut labor costs at the News but did not want to surrender their control of many work rules.

Maxwell's holdings include the Daily Mirror, Britain's second-largest newspaper; The European, the recently launched English-language paper for Europe; and Collier's Encyclopedia.

Any buyer would be looking at a newspaper that has taken tremendous losses in recent months.

The strike began Oct. 25 and since then the major advertisers have deserted the tabloid. Circulation has dropped from 1.09 million to what the paper says is now 600,000.

In addition, the paper says it lost $114.5 million in 1990, $69.3 million of that in the last quarter. Hoge said Monday the paper is losing $700,000 a day.

The paper has been published throughout the strike using management, replacement workers and News employees who worked despite the strike.

McDonald said of the Thursday meeting with Maxwell, "He really wants a paper in New York. That's why he's coming over."

Work ethic, perseverance pay off for sprinter

By KEITH BENNETT
Collegian Correspondent

Junior Kevin Walters has always enjoyed running fast, and that is exactly what he has been doing for the past two and a half years for the University of Massachusetts men's track team.

Competing in both the 55-meter dash and the 200-meters run this season, Walters was the second leading point scorer on the team and he broke the indoor record in the 200 twice. He attributes much of his success this season to the work of his assistant coaches.

"I give a lot of credit to assistant coach Bonnie (Yuen)," he said. "She put me through some real quality fall workouts this year. Bonnie's work has improved my endurance and conditioning. Yuen said that Walters' workouts this fall were designed to build up his endurance. Repeat miles, repeat quarter miles and hill work were added to his agenda. Longer runs were not something with which Walters was accustomed. "I was surprised that he did the workouts without a lot of complaints," Yuen said. "It's not the kind of workouts that sprinters usually enjoy."

Walters also credits the work of assistant coach Jim Giroux, who is in charge of the strength and conditioning program for the team.

"The weight training has really improved my strength and explosiveness," Walters said. "This year I'm a lot more conditioned and stronger."

Giroux agrees that the weight program helped Walters this season. He said that Walters spent the past summer in Amherst and followed a weight program which Giroux devised.

"He did a lot of work this summer," said Giroux. "Most of the gains that he made came in the summer. I think that the base that he laid this summer was critical to his being able to do his workouts this fall."

Walters began competing in track when he was growing up in Spauldings, Jamaica. He and his older brother, Evon, competed at the Junior National level there.

Kevin Walters

"He was always infatuated with the sprints, since he was in primary school," Evon said of his brother.

The Walters family moved to Wilmington, Deleware when he was in high-school and he continued competing on the track team at Concord High School. He was a silver-medalist in both the 100- and 200-meter events in the 1988 Deleware state high school championships.

His decision to attend UMass was influenced by the fact that his brother and his cousin, Garfield Vaughn, were both students at the university. They were also on the track team and helped Walters with running when he first arrived at the university.

"My freshman year I got a lot of push from my brother and cousin," he said. "They inspired me to run and gave me a lot of constructive criticism. They told me where I needed to brush up on my sprints and also made me train harder."

Evon recalls his brother's first year at UMass: "His freshman year I didn't think he was focused enough. I didn't think he trained hard enough. I supported him 100 percent, but I know that people usually respond if you show them their shortcomings to their faces."

Walters did respond, as his fast times and his coaches praise will attest to.

"A lot of his success has to do with his competitiveness and confidence," UMass head coach Ken O'Brien said. "He's also got a strong work ethic. He spends a lot of time over the summer getting in shape for the season. Consequently, He doesn't get worn down over the course of the season because he's well prepared."

When he is not running for the track team, Walters is active in the Alpha Phi Alpha fraternity on campus. Walters has been a member of the fraternity for the past two years.

The Sports Management major said his long-range future plans include law school.

In the immediate future, however, Walters will concentrate on running better. Although he plans to do some 400-meter races this spring to improve his conditioning, faster times in shorter races is his goal.

"This spring, if I'm healthy, I'd like to concentrate on lowering some records outdoors." he added. "I'd like to focus on both the 100 and the 200. Athletically, I'd just like to fully develop my athletic potential.

"In the race at the New Englands, I felt real comfortable," he said of the race in which he established the 200-meter record at 22.37 seconds. "I know that I can go faster than that."

County commission adopts proposal to keep Sox on site

WINTER HAVEN, Fla. (AP) — The Polk County Commission adopted Tuesday a proposal that could lead to renewed negotiations to keep the Boston Red Sox' training site at Chain O' Lakes Park.

Meeting in Bartow, the commission voted to hold in abeyance a $1 million grant voted by its Tourist Council to the city of Winter Haven as part of a $3.5 million plan for major renovations to the baseball complex.

The commission acted on a proposal to delay the county funds to give Winter Haven officials to explore renewing talks with the Red Sox, who have announced plans to move to an undetermined site.

The Red Sox declared null and void an extension of their original lease through the year 2000. The city has been negotiating since last September with the Pittsburgh Pirates, who plan to move from Bradenton next year. An agreement between the club and the city reportedly is close.

The Winter Haven city commission called for a meeting for tomorrow to discuss the county action. The grant is from funds raised from a special tourist tax on motel and hotel rooms.

John Donovan, a vice president and legal counsel for the Red Sox, said he was surprised by the county commission action. He added that anything he said "would be premature until I see the proposal and the posture of the city."

"We would entertain any solid proposal by the city, but any proposals would have to come from people with authority in the city and it must be made to [club] ownership," Donovan said.

Arab perspective obscured by war, prof says

By MADANMOHAN RAO
Collegian Staff

The "dismal" future of the Middle East, issues about the Gulf War that have been obscured, and the lack of Arab perspectives in the mainstream media were among the topics discussed by Northwestern University Professor Ibrahim Abu-Lughod at Amherst College last night.

"We have witnessed the destruction of Iraq," Abu-Lughod, a political science professor and a member of the Palestine National Council, told an audience of about 150.

"But there has been no serious discussion about Iraq or its ancient history," he said. He pointed out that the height of the Arab empire was reached in Baghdad in the eighth century.

Historically, the Middle East has always challenged Europe with ideas, culture, and power, Abu-Lughod said. Every world conqueror has aspired and worked for the control of the Middle East — right from Alexander, through Napoleon, down to the British and the French, and now the United States, he said.

Baathist ideology (which marks the current regimes of Syria and Iraq) is characterized by three visions, Abu-Lughod said: freedom from foreign control, Arab unity, and economic development through socialism. One of the most concrete realizations of this ideology has been in Iraq, through equitable income distribution and extensive educational facilities.

While Egypt was an important power in the Arab world, it lost this status by signing the Camp David accord with Israel in 1977, Abu-Lughod explained. Since then, Iraq has hoped to play the same role that Egypt had played in the Arab world, he said.

In fact, in an Encyclopedia Brittanica entry on Iraq in 1970, Abu-Lughod said he wrote that "given stability, Iraq has the best future of any Arab country." However, all this has been destroyed by the war, he said.

The U.S. forces had actually been designed for potential combat against the Soviet Union, he said, but all of these forces were arrayed against Iraq — a country of only 18 million people.

"All Middle Eastern frontiers have been carved out by the forces of European imperialism," he said. "The Middle East has been undergoing a process of state formation which is still incomplete."

"While there are commonalities and distinctions between the Arab people," Abu-Lughod said, "the only divi-

37 journalists reported missing in southern Iraq

By DAVID CRARY
The Associated Press

DHARAN, Saudi Arabia — At least nine more foreign journalists were reported missing yesterday in southern Iraq, raising the unofficial total to 37.

Unconfirmed accounts from Iraqi opposition groups and correspondents in the area indicated many of the missing, who were attempting to gather information on anti-government uprisings in southern Iraq, might be in the custody of government forces.

The latest to be reported missing included five journalists working for American publications — Todd Buchanan of The Philadelphia Inquirer, Chris Morris and Tony Suau of Time Magazine, and John A. Giordano, and Ron Jacques, free-lance photographers from Saba Press Photos who were on assignment for U.S. News & World Report. Morris, Giordano and Jacques are New York City residents.

Two Norwegians and two Brazilian newspaper reporters also were newly reported missing.

An Iraqi exile in Geneva, Abdullah al-Bakri, told a news conference the "Iraqi opposition army" was protecting most of the missing journalists. His claims could not be confirmed independently.

The Soviet Union announced that its representatives in Iraq would seek the journalists' release, and a U.S. military spokesman, Marine Gen. Richard I. Neal, said front-line allied units in southern Iraq have been alerted to watch for reporters.

"It reinforces the security demands that we have levied upon the press," Neal said. "The battlefield is not a safe place."

The U.S. Central Command and news organizations had previously counted 28 journalists missing.

In Syria, Bayan Jabr, spokesman for Iraqi Shiite Moslems opposed to President Saddam Hussein, said his group was told five foreign journalists were seen being led out of Basra, southern Iraq, Monday. He said they were headed toward Abul-Khaseeb, which is controlled by the Republican Guard, forces most loyal to Hussein.

"They were escorted by plainclothes security men and two soldiers," Jabr said in a statement. "One of the soldiers had a broken camera in his hand. The other security men were also carrying cameras."

Jabr said his informants could not determine the journalists' nationalities.

French Foreign Minister Roland Dumas said he asked Iran to use its influence to help ensure the release of more than a dozen missing French journalists. He said Iran may have influence if captors turn out to be Shiites.

Sergei Grigoriev, deputy spokesman for President Mikhail S. Gorbachev, said in Moscow that Soviet officials were instructed to "facilitate by all means the location and if necessary the release" of the journalists.

The International Committee of the Red Cross said in Geneva it had no word on the journalists, although a few of those who had been unaccounted for called their bosses to report they were safe.

Southern Iraq has been the site of intense fighting between Hussein's Republican Guard and opposition forces, according to reports from refugees, opposition leaders and Iran's Islamic Republic News Agency.

Rosenberg prepares to serve, fight on Weld commission

By MARK HENSLEY
Collegian Staff

State Rep. Stan Rosenberg (D-Amherst) said yesterday he has been appointed to Gov. Weld's special commission to study the possible closing or consolidation of public colleges and universities in Massachusetts.

Although he and one other Democratic legislator, who is yet to be appointed, will be outnumbered by supporters of Weld's plan, Rosenberg said he will try to change the focus from closing campuses to making public higher education more efficient.

Weld created the commission last week to review the state's 29 public colleges and universities and to draft a "specific plan for the consolidation and closure of state colleges and universities."

He said however, that Weld is "naive" to think that closing three to five campuses this year will save the state $90 million during the next fiscal year, which starts July 1.

Rosenberg said closing a college campus does not begin to save money until at least two years after it is closed.

The legal costs of going through the collective bargaining process with the unions coupled with unemployment benefits for employees could easily offset any savings in the first year, he said.

Weld, who claims Massachusetts public higher education is "often duplicative, under-utilized, and excessively costly," is looking in the wrong areas for answers to the budget crisis, Rosenberg said.

"The question should not be how many campuses we should close," Rosenberg said. "The question should be

Protesters clash at abortion rally

Shouting matches erupt between pro-choice, pro-life supporters

By KATHERINE T. LAMOTHE
Collegian Staff

An anti-abortion rally turned into an angry confrontation yesterday as more than 150 pro-life and pro-choice activists clashed on the steps of the Student Union.

The rally, held as part of "Conservative Awareness Week," was marked by pushing and shoving, angry shouts, and a minor scuffle. University of Massachusetts police kept order on the scene and no one was injured.

Many of the people who attended were pro-choice activists. Some carried signs reading: "Not every ejaculation deserves a name" and "'Pro-life' [equals] DEATH by illegal abortion."

Others were verbal, occasionally shouting down speeches by members of the Conservative Alliance, which sponsored the event, and guest speakers.

Responding to counter-protesters' comments, such as "What about the Iraqis?" and "Let's talk about the sanctity of life after we bombed the Iraqis," Ted Maravelias, founder of the New Americans and a member of the Board of Governors, said: "Did you know that there have been more deaths since 1973 than all the wars combined?"

Maravelias also referred to abortion as "the ultimate form of racism," and compared the pro-choice movement to slavery and Nazism.

"Isn't this what Adolf Hitler did to the Jews?" he said. "Didn't he kill them because they were non-persons? The abortionists are just like Hitler."

Maravelias said the media addresses the issue with a pro-choice bias. "They're a bunch of screwballs who hate this country," he said.

At one point, a member of the crowd put a wire coat hanger, a symbol of illegal, back-alley abortions, on the American flag. Maravelias and the protester scuffled, and were separated by campus police. No one was injured.

Michelle Colitsas, a student at Mount Holyoke College who is president of Collegians for Life, called abortion "the most heinous of all forms of child abuse," and said women had no constitutional right to choose to abort a child.

"The [aborted] child will never have the same amount of choices as his mother," she said. "There are some things about which there should not be a choice."

Maravelias said: "If we have the right to kill a baby then we have the right to choose slavery," prompting jeers from the crowd.

Jeffrey Halfond, a conservative activist from Springfield, said the government should rule abortion illegal.

"Abortion is nothing less than murder," he said. "The function of government is to stop murder. It should use all of its resources to stop murder."

Ed Corrigan, vice-chairperson of the Board of Governors, which oversees the Campus Center, and editor in chief of the Minuteman, said: "I'm not going to go out and support the murder of a human life."

Rape is not reason enough to have an abortion, Colitsas said. "Violence should not beget violence," she said.

Maravelias added that pro-choice activists relied too heavily on rape reasons to keeping abortion legal, particularly since relatively few women become pregnant as a result of rape.

One student, who was not identified, told the audience he and his girlfriend chose to keep their child. "I'm glad I did it," he said.

Maravelias accused various counterprotesters and the Student Activities Office of trying to prevent him from expressing his views.

Earlier in the rally, when counter-protesters shouted down his presentation, he shouted: "You Nazis, you fascists, you militant lesbians — I've had it with you."

how many colleges and universities should be open to meet the labor market in the coming years to keep the state vital and viable."

"The overwhelming majority" of Massachusetts workers who attended college, attended a Massachusetts campus, he said.

Reviewing the higher education system makes sense and that consolidating some administrative services and programs could reduce costs, but closing campuses will not solve the state's fiscal problems, he said.

He added that he was worried that the government might to try to close another three to five colleges next year if the state's financial woes continue.

Spring in full bloom at Smith College bulb show

Up-close examples of the flower show at Smith College, which runs until March 10.

By K.A. BURKE
Collegian Staff

NORTHAMPTON — Spring has sprung at Smith College.

Upon walking into the greenhouse area of the Lyman Plant House at Smith College, the first impression one receives is the amazing blend of fragrances which form the perfect smell of spring.

This week marks the Annual Spring Bulb Show at Smith College.

There are 100 different varieties of tulips and daffodils, and 2,500 bulbs in total, including crocus, hyacinths snowdrops, squills, and enemones.

Roger Graves, foreman of the Lyman Plant House, said the show may have started as early as the 1930s by William P. Campbell, the former director of the Botanical Gardens, "for the education of Botanical and Horiculture students at Smith College and in the Five College area."

Financed by Smith College and supervised by the staff of the botanical facility, the work for the show begins in October, when horticulture students at Smith plant the bulbs as part of a class assignment, he said.

The care of the bulbs is then supervised by the staff of the Lyman plant house, which consists of three full-time employees, he said.

The planted bulbs are later brought down to the bulb cellar of the plant house where they are stored until the winter, Graves said.

"We bring the late [blooming] flowers up early, then the middle bloomers, then the earliest last so they all flower at the same time," Graves said.

According to the director of the plant house, Dick Munson, the reason for the show's continued popularity is its timing.

The show it held at the end of the winter because people "need something to lift their spirits," he said.

The show takes place annually, beginning the first full weekend of March. This year, the show runs through Sunday, March 10.

The plant house is open from 11 a.m. to 4 p.m. daily and the staff is on hand to answer any questions about the flowers.

Woman tells of homophobia in court battle to be with lover

By TRYSTAN SKEIGH

"Why Can't Sharon Kowalski Come Home?" was the question posed by Karen Thompson during her presentation at Smith College last night. The answer Thompson gave was complex, but could be narrowed down to two issues: discrimination against disabled people and homophobia.

Kowalski and Thompson had been closeted lovers sharing a home in Minnesota for four years when Sharon Kowalski was paralyzed in a car accident in November of 1983.

On that day Thompson ran head on into a social and legal system that forced her to come out of the closet and fight for the rest of the decade for her right to be with her partner, who was severely disabled and unable to speak or walk.

In the first year after the accident, Thompson, a physical therapist, said she helped Kowalski with her rehabilitation. They "worked out a communication system typing with her right index finger. We learned to laugh and joke together again."

But a bitter feud between Thompson and Kowalski's parents, who refused to acknowledge their daughter's relationship, resulted in a legal battle and Thompson being "barred" from Kowalski's life.

In July of 1985, the Minnesota State Court ruled that the conflict was injurious to Kowalski's recovery and granted full guardianship to Sharon's father, Donald. Although Kowalski was fully communicative, the court refused to allow her to testify about her own competence during the hearing.

"Twenty four hours after the decision was read, Donald Kowalski ordered me out of her life," Thompson said.

But Thompson refused to give in. In January of 1989, after 19 court appeals, the Minnesota State Court responded to the pressures of Thompson's legal efforts and civil liberties groups.

It ordered Kowalski moved from the nursing home into a rehabilitation center in Robbinsdale and transferred responsibility for her care to the center's medical team.

A month later, Thompson received her first invitation to visit her lover in four years. After another year of struggles between the medical team and the judge, Thompson

Old controversy stirs senate

Student rejected for SGA commission

By MARC ELLIOTT
Collegian Staff

The Undergraduate Student Senate last night, in a 19-13 vote, chose not to send Gil Penchina, a former budgets committee chairman, to represent the student body on the administration's commission to restructure the Student Government Association.

In September of 1988, Penchina came forward with a written statement admitting that he misused monies from the Student Activities trust fund during that summer.

He said he put extra hours on his pay slip, bought a lamp and a stapler for the budgets office and made personal photocopies using trust fund monies as part of a "test" to prove that the Student Activities Office was mismanaging funds.

He resigned his post in September after the senate's coordinating committee asked him to.

The senate resurrected the old controversy after Penchina was selected Friday to be on the commission. Penchina said he was not guilty of wrongdoing and resigned because of lack of cooperation by senate leaders after the affair was made public.

"If I'm going to be convicted for allegations, that's just the way it goes," he said. "But in my defense, if I were a crook, would I be giving out press releases telling what I was doing?" He was referring to the written statement he produced revealing the misuse.

The commission to restructure student government, which began meeting last week, was created by the administration after the senate leadership asked the administration to step in and restructure student government.

Arguing before the senate against Penchina's appointment, Student Attorney General Adam Scales said Penchina's actions "disgusted" him.

"I was disgusted three years ago when I read the Collegian accounts," Scales said, "and I am disgusted now that my memory has been refreshed."

Scales also criticized Penchina's claim that the misuse was a test.

In other business:

- The senate named intermin Speaker Jeffery Turco to the commission although he is the chairman of the coordinating committee, the same body that nominated him.

Coordinating committee members Daniel Cohen (Third World Cauces) and Kenneth Parker (Commuters) also applied for the student seats on the commission but were denied.

Sen. Paul Dionne (Field), who objected to not only Turco's nomination but all the nominations made by the coordinating committee, said he did not know that the committee was going to meet and make any decision on who would be on the commission.

"They didn't make any effort to inform anyone of the meeting," he said.

Dionne also objected to the fact that three applicants were allowed to vote for themselves.

The senate chose interim Treasurer Patricia Donoghue over former governor Laura Silver 19 votes to 18 to replace Penchina on the commission.

The senate went on to approve the appointments of senators David Gagne (McNamara), Kevin Newnan (Johnson), Robert Monaghan (Commuters), and Gretchen White (Commuters).

Panel: Gay couples denied many UMass work benefits

By PAMELA McCARTHY
Collegian Staff

Among its benefits for its employees and their spouses, the University of Massachusetts provides health care, dental, sick leave, long-term disability insurance, and tuition waivers.

Live-in partners of unmarried employees receive none of these.

Gay and lesbian couples, who are particularly affected by these and other policies, need to know what work benefits they are not getting, a panel of five speakers told an audience of about 25 last night at the Campus Center.

Live-in couples also do not receive athletic privileges and UMass health insurance if their spouse dies, according to a report by the UMass benefits subcommittee of the Faculty Staff Group for Gay, Lesbian and Bisexual Concerns.

Both unmarried and married couples receive family housing access, library cards, limited survivor benefits for accidental death, basic life insurance, sick leave, and bereavement leave, according to the report.

Heterosexual partners who are students receive University health care but same sex partners do not.

Sandy Anderson, a member of the benefits sub-committee, said: "At the bottom of [weekly employment postings at the University] is an affirmative action, equal opportunity statement. So, keep that in mind."

Of the various benefits, which total 15, married couples receive 14. Domestic partners get eight out of 15 benefits. Out of these eight benefits, five come with conditions.

The situation at the University is similar at other businesses and institutions, said Janine Cutting, a field worker for the Service Employees International Union Local -509.

Mary Bonano, a staff attorney for GLAD, a legal services organization for gays and lesbians, said that because the model for a family is the traditional nuclear family, domestic partner benefits is a family law issue. "In 1988 census data showed only 27 percent of the families fit into this model," she said.

Panelist Kathy Reep was not a part of this model. Reep, who moved from Cambridge to Northampton with her partner, was unable to get unemployment benefits even though she had lived with the same man for 13 years.

Last May, Reep won a lawsuit against the state Department of Employment and Training and received the benefits. She said the department plans to appeal.

Bonano advised workers to get a clause prohibiting sexual orientation discrimination in their contracts. She also said to look for a clause prohibiting marital status discrimination.

Cutting said the best way for domestic partners to protect themselves is to organize. "Get into your locals and organize your committees," she said. "You need to get people from these committees on the bargaining teams."

Student senators upset at losing toy

The attempt of the (former) SGA officers to restructure student government is backfiring. February 27 the SGA voted to eject the Speaker and Treasurer from their positions, and elected new, "interim" officers in their place. The Senate also voted to begin impeachment hearings on the SGA President.

When the request from the SGA leadership for the administration to disband and aid in restructuring student government became public, I was wary. I was even more wary when I went to the first SGA meeting of the semester and witnessed the intense conversation in the SGA office that followed the leadership's announcement. I was horrified when I heard senators talking about a betrayal of students, about having "their student government" taken away. I could only ask: How many of them talk to their constituents, the people who voted for them? How many of them know, or care, what they want? How many of them think that their constituents will be upset about the restructuring of the SGA? Yes, they should fear for the future of their student government, because it is theirs, not ours, not the students' of this University. They are pathetically out of touch.

Amy Lesen

I am now an SGA Senator for the Third World Caucus. I joined the Senate three weeks ago. I joined to cast a vote to make sure that multicultural students and students from other traditionally oppressed groups would be on the administration's committee to reform student government. Three weeks ago, a motion was presented at Senate to have a campus-wide referendum, a vote of the whole student body, on what to do about student government. It was a chance to finally see how the students really feel about this issue. The Senate voted the motion down! I joined the SGA to stand witness to the goings-on at SGA meetings, to inject some non-reactionary, progressive energy into the SGA. This is a losing battle. I say this because the SGA is not about representation, but domination. A representative body exists so that a multiplicity of voices may be heard. I hear only one voice — that of those already in power.

You see, there is a good reason that the majority of the SGA has reacted so bitterly to the threats of reform of student government. The reason is that it was working — for them. The SGA and the BOG were the perfect vehicles for filibustering, furthering personal political agendas, promoting prejudice, using the system to oppress, and generally maintaining the status quo. Why wouldn't a group of mostly white men want to leave things just the way they are? They only have ground to gain by refusing to change, by refusing to accept that their government was and is a stagnant bureaucratic machine that never gets anything done. By filibustering, and by voting to say the Pledge of Allegiance at BOG meetings, the people in power on student government, the ones who have squawked the loudest at the prospect of change, are successfully maintaining the status quo and making damn sure that no one but them gets any of the pie.

After impeaching or beginning the impeachment process for three of the SGA officers, the SGA elected an interim Speaker and an interim Treasurer. The interim Speaker is Jeff Turco, one of the mainstays of conservative politics on this campus. My fellow liberals and I on the SGA sat unable to do anything while these proceedings went on. We, of course, had voted to keep whatever semblance of unity student goverment had left, and voted against impeachment of the officers. We, of course, were in the minority.

The reason I may have objected to the SGA leadership's decision to restructure was not that it was a betrayal of students; quite the contrary. I thought it was one of the only options left in a stagnant student government. However, I objected because that first SGA meeting showed me that the maintainers of the status quo were going to take this for all it was worth. They were going to scream and shout democracy, betrayal, impeachment, and play off of the apathy and ignorance that most students on this campus have for the SGA. And amidst the din, the same filthied hands hold the reins of power. This is a scary time. For not only may student government never really get reformed, but the people in government who benefit form seeing it remain in its present form, who are interested in stopping all semblance of progressivism and change, are going to take this opportunity to take us all for a ride. "ConservativeAwareness Week" is coming up. This is not an accident.

I am pleading. Do not be taken in by senators shouting about betrayal of students; those same senators betray you at every SGA meeting. For all those students who care, for all of you who do not benefit from having the oppressive government stay that way, I beg: let your senator know how you feel. Join the SGA. Get involved in campaigns. Inject an atmosphere of progress, of change, into student government. For if we don't start working, our campus will not only fail to move forward, but it will move three steps back, right back to the McCarthy era. See you at Conservative Awareness Week.

Betrayed! Traitors sell students out

As most of you know, the five SGA officers, namely Angus McQuilken, Natasha Diephus, Dan Chesnicka, Karen Talbot, and Rebecca Rudko, have sold out student government.

These people, who were elected to serve the students, have done just that. Only problem is, they've served us on a silver platter to the administration. Now, the administration feels that it can come in and take over student government.

A commission has been formed, and has already had one meeting, with the intent of restructuring student government. This does not just include the student senate. It includes the graduate student senate and the Board of Governors, which oversees the running of the Campus Center/Student Union complex.

It should be known that the BOG is not even represented on this commission. As if not allowing a group that will be restructured representation is bad enough, this commission is recognizing people who have no interest in the matter.

On Feb. 27, the student senate voted to remove two of the officers that sold out SGA: Dan Chesnicka and Karen Talbot. However, the administration continues to recognize them and has kept them on this committee.

This is absolutely absurd. Just think about it logically.

These people were elected to represent us. They betrayed us, and now the administration is telling us that they are our representation on this committee to draft a new constitution. Do they think that we are that dumb? They think that we should just blindly trust these people.

We shouldn't.

We can't.

The future of students on this campus is left to administrators and traitors. Don't let it happen. Call the chancellor, the vice-chancellors, the director of the Student Activities Office, and tell them that the students should control their own fate.

It's your campus. The administration is here for the students, not the other way around. Don't let them control you.

The commission on student government can't even run itself

In recent weeks, I'm sure you've all seen the war of words between those who want student government, those who think it doesn't work, those who want it restructured, etc. This story is the end all.

The Committee to Reconstruct Student Government, which is comprised of members of the current pseudo-SGA, is supposed to meet to decide on who will be appointed to the three "at large" undergraduate committee seats. Applications were submitted. The meeting, scheduled for 5:00 p.m., doesn't start until after 5:30 because half the committee is late and therefore there is no quorum.

The meeting finally starts.

Guess what. Almost no one has reviewed the applications.

Guess what. A debate ensues on how to review the applications.

Finally it is decided that the committee should meet in exclusive session to decide who gets the seats, but get this — most of the people who applied for the three seats are actually on the committee! Is it just me, or does this sound like a huge pile?

James Molesworth

HELLO! Is anyone awake here? You already have seats on the Chancellor's Committee! Shouldn't these three at large seats be going to undergraduate students who have no ties to the SGA? Who wants to see effective student empowerment? Who wants allocation of student funds to student groups by students?

These seats need to be given to students who are devoid of walking out, quitting, impeaching, and name-calling, things the SGA is plagued with.

It's not that the SGA's structure is bad. Its "leaders" are incompetent. They can't even show up to an important meeting on time and prepared.

Attention students!

Pay attention to who you vote for in the future (if there is a government to vote for). Otherwise this problem is never going to go away, no matter what system you implement. As the Manager of a large RSO, I feel it is imperative to have effective student government, particularly when it comes to appropriating OUR SATF money.

Unfortunately, it seems that those people whome we have elected need a lesson in real life. This is not a game we are playing. The administration is not fooling around.

It's time to wake up and smell the proverbial coffee, because at this rate, not only will every officer wind up impeached, but the very basis of student empowerment will be lost to the catacombs of Whitmore. If you want to bulk up uour resume, go manage a store in the mall, don't work for student government, because you're only ruining it for the people that do care.

Back to basics: Thoughts on student government

Usually in March the frat-rush posters come down to be replaced by an environmental and political atrocity: the SGA presidential campaign poster. My belief in the existence of God was reaffirmed when I discovered that this year we might be deprived of such heinous foliage. Sadly, the atrocity might only be postponed.

This year the SGA is undergoing some restructuring. While I am encouraged to hear that finally something is being done to fix the SGA, I must inform your that the inherent difficulty in reforming the SGA lies with the reformers themselves. The system cannot be changed from the inside because it is the very system of change in the SGA that needs to be changed. If this seems like a Catch-22, then you are following me perfectly. Do not, however, give up hope. Miracles may happen and a new SGA may be reborn from the smoldering embers of its own funeral pyre.

I have worked in several branches of the SGA including two house councils, an area government, the Board of Governors, and several RSOs, and would like to think that my opinion could be helpful to the restructuring commission and maybe before they swear their own Tennis Court Oath (look that up yourself), the commission might like to consider a few thoughts on basic governmental structure. Since I was not selected (by divine providence) to be on the commission (boo-hoo) perhaps I can serve here as an amicus curiae.

The basic problem with the SGA is its name: It is not a government; it never was, never could be and never should be. The doom of the SGA and the BOG was their attempts to function like the U.S. Congress. While the SGA and the U.S. Congress both can grant themselves pay raises, the two bodies are intrinsically different.

Mark B. Adler

The BOG is like a corporate board and the SGA is a union . . . hence the name 'Student Union.' As members of the union, we, the students, all pay our dues: The Activities Fee. The union negotiates with the administration but it never has carte blanche control. The union can only activate the powers delegated to it by the administration, and even these powers are regulated by the Student Activities Office. Since the constitution of the SGA will never be approved by the administration, we are like workers laboring without a contract. There is nothing wrong with keeping the SGA in union form as long as we admit that it can't be run like a government.

Representatives to our union should not be geographically distinct; they should come from the various facets of university life, namely the academic majors. After all, we identify more with our educational field than with our dorms. At last the SGA might have more than just History or PoliSci majors.

If we want to make the SGA into a government, then we must establish three basic pillars of government which are necessary to enable, support and sustain it: 1) The people must trust and support the government; 2) The governmental delegates must respect their position and be primarily concerned with advancing the needs of their constituents and 3) the government must have some sovereignty and be able to enforce its policies. In retrospect, we see that the SGA never had any of these qualities.

The goal, therefore, of the commission is to get their heads out of the clouds and back in the interests of the students (remember them?). Let's admit it: Nobody really cares about this SGA stuff anyway and if the students actually rose up against their internal oppressors, they might actually abolish the SATF and save themselves some money. God Forbid.

Bush's energy plan is more recycled garbage

President Bush has presented a "new" energy plan that demonstrates the anti-environmental, pro "business as usual" philosophy of his administration. The plan sounds as if it is from the 1950s.

Bush's plan calls for "responsible" oil drilling in the Arctic National Wildlife Refuge, easing of regulatory barriers for new construction of nuclear power plants and the disposal of their waste, streamlining of regulations for construction of new natural gas pipelines and deregulation of the electric utility industry to increase competition. A better pro-production plan would be hard to develop.

The plan includes few incentives for energy conservation. There is no requirement to increase the fuel economy of new automobiles. Only token measures are included for the use of alternate motor fuels and improving home energy efficiency. Where is the "environmental president" we elected?

This plan should be rejected as ill-conceived and shortsighted. It does little to reduce our country's dependence on foreign energy sources. It assumes no growth in the number of vehicles on the road in the future and pulls the ugly three-headed nuclear monster out of its cage. The plan also would wreak havoc on pristine areas on land and offshore.

Henry LaVigne

Haven't we had enough environmental destruction lately? The Bush administration is the finest bedfellow the oil and automobile industries have had since Reagan.

A more realistic plan for our future must be based on conservation. We need a constant increase in the efficiency of new vehicles, homes and industries. The technology is available and the increased costs to the consumer would easily be recouped through decreased fuel expenditures. An increase of 0.5 miles per gallon for cars and light trucks per year would seem realistic. We must continue to educate the public about the technologies available to increase home energy efficiency, many available from their electric utility. The nuclear monster should remain caged until we can safely treat the by-products. Lastly, we must protect our coasts and pristine nature areas from the inevitable destruction brought by oil drilling. Our quality of life depends on it.

To those who would argue that this proposed policy would hurt the economy causing unemployment, I say this need not be the case. Many jobs could be created to clean up our current mess and in the engineering and manufacturing of new energy efficient products. I don't believe many would grieve over the lost profits of the oil industry. Envision a tax system that used monies collected from incentive taxes, say from gasoline, to help small businesses purchase the equipment needed to meet EPA regulations. What a fine cycle that would be.

Let's get real out there. We can't go on guzzling energy as we have in the past. The reality is that with 6 percent of the world's population the United States uses 30 percent of the world's energy with its resulting pollution. We also have the lowest gasoline prices and taxes of any of the world's industrialized countries. Three to five dollars a gallon is the norm in Europe. Let's not be in the hypocritical position of wasting energy due to complacency while condemning the tin despots created by the monies we spend on these energies. Remember, money is power, and sand doesn't get much on the market these days.

Call it what you will, the Glodis show is organized bigotry

The Guy Glodis Talk Show was a gross exhibition of homophobia, sexism and just plain rudeness. It was an insult to every student on this campus. The fact that it was allowed to happen by the Campus Center administration and the University administration is very disturbing. The fact that it was well-attended by students who cheered every time gays and women were insulted is even more disturbing.

It is obvious that a number of UMass students do not respect the Affirmative Action policy of this University, nor do they respect the principles contained within the Code of Student Conduct. It is also evident that the administration does not give a damn.

Laura Silver and Chris Thomas, LBGA-appointed governors to the BOG, sat on a stage for an hour and endured repeated slanderous assaults because they were gay. Laura Silver was singled out and especially targeted for humiliation, with Glodis suggesting that she sleeps with animals, uses sexual paraphenalia, and engages in group sex, while Chris Thomas was read scripture and the Massachusetts criminal code on sodomy by Ted Maravelias. Thomas was also told by Maravelias that if he (Ted) were governor of Massachusetts, Thomas would never be allowed to serve on any political board, anywhere, because of the law against "sodomites."

It is true that Silver and Thomas accepted an invitation to appear on the 'talk show.' It is true that they didn't expect it to be easy. But they didn't volunteer to be shooting ducks for hate-filled disrespect and cruelty.

None of the 'non-conservatives' who spoke that night were allowed to speak without interruption, and if they were making a particularly good argument, they were drowned out by Glodis shouting into his mike. Glodis' interruptions frequently included insults intended to intimidate the speaker.

Why was this talk show allowed to continue when it quickly developed into a gay-bashing session intermingled with personal attacks against Angus McQuilken]?

Trystan Skeigh

What few intelligent points were made by the conservatives were lost in the heated exchanges of insults and Glodis' temper tantrums.

If Blacks had been the minority on stage, and bigots had been reading passages from the Bible about Black inferiority — you know, the stuff about the race of Cain that Southern bigots used for years to justify slavery — would that have been allowed to continue? If the Republican Club, which by the way, most of the true student Republicans I know wouldn't touch with a ten-foot pole, had scheduled a 'talk show' to bash Blacks, Jews, or women, would the administration have allowed that assembly? I don't think so. Would the group have been allowed to use university equipment to film the travesty? I doubt it.

Yet gay-bashing can be scheduled and televised. Obviously, the little words in the University's Affirmative Action Policy, you know, the ones found in that little paragraph we all read when we enroll here, about no discrimination based on sex, race, religion, or sexual orientation, doesn't mean a whole hell of a lot at UMass, to students or administrators.

And, then there are the conservatives on this campus who aren't narrow-minded, rude, judgmental bigots. I think they may be the true 'silent majority' Glodis refers to. And they're silent because they're embarrassed. They were hurt by the 'Conservative Awareness Week's Guy Glodis Talk Show' as well. At UMass, political conservatism has come to mean narrow-minded, anti-intellectual bigotry, and that is an injustice to true political conservatism, which has an intellectually sound, philosophically profound basis that does not include a platform of hatred toward oppressed minorities.

And that hurts us all. The image of our university was severely damaged last night. The reverberations of that forum for hatred and bigotry will travel out to incoming students, other schools, and members of our local community. A message has been sent that bigotry will be tolerated here if an outspoken student group wishes to express and practice it.

Who knows what this holds for the future. UMass is changing. The way things are moving, maybe our next Chancellor will be David Duke. It would certainly fit the trend of the times here at UMass.

'Straight-pride' is another excuse to bash gays

Last year, at about this time, the Conservative Alliance organized its First Annual Straight Pride Rally. At first, the UMass community, the Gay, Lesbian, and Bisexual community in particular, were alarmed and concerned. Would this rally be a homophobic response to our own Gay Pride Rally that we hold at least once a semester? It was impossible to know ahead of time, and many people chose to give them the benefit of the doubt. I feel, as do many others, that everyone should take pride in their identity. Some of my best friends are straight and I support them in their heterosexuality wholeheartedly. However, we were soon to discover that there was an ulterior motive to the Straight Pride Rally.

The rally confirmed the fears of many people in the UMass community. It turned into a public forum for blatant verbal gaybashing, with little, if anything, said about heterosexual pride. Lies, misconceptions, and stereotypes about homosexual and bisexual lifestyles were bellowed into the crowd and to passers-by on their way to classes. The virulent tone used can only be described as verbal harrassment.

Today, March 7, 1991, the Second Annual Straight Pride Rally will be held at noon on the front steps of the Student Union. The community is no longer fooled. We understand that these people are a threat not only to our pride and to our lifestyles, but to our very lives. I urge anyone who embraces the values of civility and human kindness to show your outrage at these forms of harassment by attending the rally in protest and by writing to the UMass administration demanding that action be taken in support of the Gay, Lesbian, and Bisexual community.

And to those who felt the need to organize such a rally, I offer these thoughts to meditate upon. The point of our Gay Pride Rally is to show people that we are proud of our identities despite the oppression of heterosexism (the reverse of which is not suffered by the straight community, leaving little need for a Straight Pride Rally). We strive for inclusion and acceptance. We don't seek to harm, separate, or oppress anyone.

Conservative awareness: A week-long oxymoron

Conservative Awareness Week: What a fantastically brilliant idea! I find it unfortunate that so often the conservative movement slips by unnoticed. But, just as I was beginning to fear that all the pinko, liberal, flag-burning, long-haired, wire-rimmed glasses hippies were going to take over the country, spouting about peace and human rights and all that wimpy stuff, the Young Republicans have come to my rescue. Thankfully, they have restored my faith that there are still some fine upstanding American citizens at UMass who are determined to make America a safe place for moral peoples everywhere!

Gosh, in my exaltations of Conservative Awareness Week, I hardly know where to begin! One of my personal favorites has always been the "straight pride" theme. I mean, that's the way God made us fine upstanding American citizens, right? Those darned queers are causing the downfall of civilization as we know it! Why do they keep trying to stir up trouble? Don't they know that it IS everyone's business with whom you choose to share your bed?

And let's not forget the ever popular "pro-life" issue! Geez, what I don't get is, why don't women just use birth control? It's so easy! And there is such a fun variety of contraceptives to choose from! (Incidentally, gals, it is now considered socially acceptable to buy a condom for your man! Isn't that wonderful?) Further, we all know that a major part of a woman's responsibility as a fine upstanding American is to bear the young of the species. How dare women repudiate that duty! What do women think, that their bodies are their own?!

Speaking of "pro life," I also want to thank the Young Republicans for taking the honorable stance of being "pro war!" If it weren't for our peace loving, pro-life President, and the 99.99% of fine upstanding Americans standing (up) behind him, there might have been no one brave enough to accept the mission of taking our country to war and killing thousands of dangerous Iraqi citizens!

Whew! Thanks, Young Republicans! With the help of fine upstanding American citizens like you, soon our country will be what the founding forefathers originally intended, one of . . . um . . . let's see . . . was that, er, um . . . liberty and justice for all? No, um . . . how about, life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness! No, that doesn't sound right . . . um . . . gee . . . all men (women too?) are created equal? Golly . . . hmm . . . I'll have to get back to you boys on that one . . .

UMass hopes to pick up, reuse its garbage

By DAVID MASSEY
Collegian Correspondent

This is the third in a three-part series on the solid waste crisis.

Implementing a master plan to recycle and reduce the garbage at the University of Massachusetts is no easy task considering it has 150 buildings, 5,500 staff members, 26,000 students and produces 5,000 tons of trash a year.

Marc Fournier, the acting director of solid waste management at UMass, is trying to do just that.

It took Fournier months of research before he submitted the "Recycling Master Plan" to the town of Amherst on Dec. 1, 1990.

"I feel that this program will be a model once it gets up and running. Of course, you must remember that I'm doing this in the worst economic time that could ever be imagined."
— Marc Fournier, acting director of solid waste management at UMass

The plan, which has been accepted by the town, details strategies for establishing an extensive recycling program at the University and describes current recycling programs.

The report says that if the University installs an organized, highly-visible recycling program, it "will save considerable dollars in avoided tip fees at the Amherst landfill, recycle valuable resources, take in revenue for the sale of recyclable materials, and comply with town and state mandates."

Fournier estimated that 10 percent of UMass waste is now being recycled.

With a new plan, he said UMass could become a model for other institutions.

"I feel that this program will be a model once it gets up and running," he said. "Of course, you must remember that I'm doing this in the worst economic time that could ever be imagined."

For the University, it is evident that recycling its solid waste will provide economic benefits as well as the obvious environmental ones, he said. Reducing and reusing resources rather than burning or putting the waste in landfills saves energy and reduces disposal-related pollution, he said.

Also, by recycling, UMass will avoid the rising costs of waste disposal, widely known as "tip fees."

According to the UMass Recycling Study, the University spent $76,000 on waste disposal at the Amherst landfill in 1985, $314, $422 in 1989, and for fiscal year 1990, UMass spent $376,538 disposing over 5,000 tons of garbage.

Tipping fees have risen because space at the Amherst landfill is reaching capacity, he said.

In five to six years, the landfill will be full, said Melinda McCall, the solid waste coordinator for the Department of Public Works in Amherst.

"I don't think it even has that long," Fournier said. "They don't have a lot of space left." He said the University gives the Amherst landfill 25 percent of its waste, much of which is recyclable. By recycling, UMass will be avoiding these costly tip fees.

"It would be much more financially prudent to recycle," he said.

Beginning April 1, recycling will be mandatory for businesses and multi-family housing in Amherst. In addition, haulers who bring loads which carry a certain percentage of recyclables to landfills will be fined.

McCall said the environment will benefit greatly from this program.

"Rather than having to mine the natural resources, you save all the energy that is involved with mining and all the waste by just reusing those resources," she said. "So you save energy and resources and you reduce pollution."

McCall said incineration is not a reasonable option because so many citizens in this area are opposed to burning the solid waste — a method which has been proven to release toxins into the air.

The report says that 55 percent of all the waste UMass produces is recycable. The Environmental Protection Agency says, however, that 77 percent of the waste generated in administrative buildings like Whitmore consists of recyclable materials.

The University has been recycling for years, but this implementation of the recycling master plan is the first "major push" for recycling at UMass, Fournier said.

The master plan outlines eight current recycling programs at UMass which collect 10 tons of solid waste (not including scrap metal recycling) a week for recycling.

Residence halls are a key area to target for recycling programs because residents generate 63 percent of the waste on campus, he said.

The most widely known program is the Blue Box Brigade Competition, run by the Residential Recycling Program, which offers prizes to the residence hall that recycles the greatest number of funds of newsprint per person.

The January 1991 "Recycling Progress Report" stated that 30.2 tons of newspaper were collected last semester from participating residence halls.

The Bluewall Cafeteria and the UMass News Office, located in Munson Hall, have also started newspaper collection programs. The Recycling Master Plan reports that these programs recycle 1.5 tons of newspaper every week.

The newspaper is bagged and transported to a box trailer on campus. When this becomes full, the newspaper is shipped to National Fiber in Bondsville, Mass. where the newsprint is made into cellulose insulation.

Fournier is now working to implement four new pilot recycling programs by April 1, the day recycling becomes mandatory in Amherst. The master plan also outlines seven future projects, including a tire recycling program, plastics recycling, and a source reduction/environmentally sound procurement practice program.

Nevertheless, the University is operating in financially difficult times making the installment of a campus-wide recycling program a tedious process.

"They have a pretty comprehensive plan, but unfortunately there is no money provided to implement it, so it is moving very slowly," McCall said.

UMass is grappling with its garbage. But expectations of dwindling landfill space, rising waste disposal costs, and waste related pollution offers the University the chance to implement a wide-ranging recycling program that will serve as a model not only for other educational institutions but also for the country, he said.

If this University is not talking recycling, we're talking trash.

BLACK AFFAIRS

Words from a member of the human race

By SONDRA SUTTON
Collegian Staff

On March 2, 1991 at the Fine Arts Center, the University of Massachusetts was graced by the apperance of Kris Parker, better known as KRS-ONE (Knowledge Reigns Superior Over Nearly Everyone).

Parker's lecture primarily dealt with what he called "sick and barbaric ideas of America." Parker also clarified on who "America" was by saying "America isn't Black people or White people. America is the Fortune 500 and big businesses."

Parker further stated that this America is not prejudice, and that White people who are not a part of this America would be the next to feel its destructive hand of America and the next to be destroyed by it. "My White brother and sisters, the very America that you praise so much, will be the same America to bring you down," said Parker.

KRS-ONE also discussed his views on the educational system. He felt that the educational system is not based on intellectual thinking, but rather it focuses on memory.

During a brief interview with Parker he said that he was kept back twice in the eighth and ninth grade, then dropped out in the tenth grade.

After living on the streets of New York for thirteen years, he acquired his G.E.D. Parker now lectures at universities all over the United States.

Other topics discussed by Parker were that of African Americans calling themselves African Americans, Black fraternities calling themselves Greeks, and the American flag.

Parker stated that African Americans should not call themselves Americans because they are not Americans. They are of the human race with an African heritage, he said. "If a cat has her kittens in an oven, you don't call them muffins, you call them kittens," said Parker.

In reference to the Black fraternities, Parker said that he could not understand why they were calling themselves Greeks, when Greece robbed and helped destroy Africa.

Parker seemed to have very strong feelings of disgust for the American flag and what it represents. To KRS-ONE the flag was a symbol of a sick and hateful society.

Parker explained how millions of Africans and Native Americans were murdered under the American flag. Therefore the flag represents nothing but murder and robbery, said Parker.

When asked of how he classified himself, Parker stated, "Human, with an African heritage, that's it."

A thinking theme

The Black Mass Communications Project, BMCP, should be applauded for their choice in lecturers.

The appearance of Kris Parker, better known as KRS-ONE was a refreshing break from the monotonous tone this campus has become accustomed to.

Douglas Greer

If this lecture were to become a course offered here at the University of Massachusetts it would be listed as Black 101, with a description to teach African persons living in America what they should know.

To say that you agree with what KRS-ONE said is to say that ypu agree with a long line of African leaders from Marcus Garvey to Louis Farrakhan, who have been condemned by America.

With his witty use of the English language, KRS-ONE attacked everyone including African fraternities and European attitudes.

He did this without hurting feelings, but rather as if he were teaching fact, in regards to the roles that one respectively acts upon in America.

In reality, what effect does KRS-ONE, or any other lecturer for that matter, have on the minds of the people who attend.

Hopefully one would think that it would have some effect, but realistically there is very little effect. This is because those who attend the lectures already have their own idea of what AMERIKKKA, is all about.

Wouldn't it be great if in the middle of a Hispanic dance, or a Cape Verdean, or a Asian dance, the door would lock and someone would put on a tape of KRS-ONE's lecture. Maybe this would make them realize that their skin has color in it too.

Whether you agree or disagree with Parker's attack on Christianity, his attack on AMERIKKKA, or his attack on the educational system, we must all agree as a whole, and this includes the African community, the European community and also the Puerto Rican, Cape Verdean, and Asian communities, with Parker's main theme.

Coltrane; A love supreme

Editor's Note: This is the first in a two-part series about John Coltrane's music, his convictions and his culture.

September 23, 1926, John William Coltrane was born. By the time he was in his early twenties, he was beginning to make some noise in the music world. A few years later he was playing with the great Miles Davis group of the fifties. In 1957 he underwent a great spiritual change, becoming deeply religious, a vegetarian, giving up alcohol and drugs. In fact, his only "vice" was the occasional cigar or pipe which he would indulge in. During the early and middle sixties, Trane forced the edge of the envelope of the jazz world. He sent the music in countless new directions, while influencing saxophonists from Cannonball Adderly to Pharoah Sanders.

James Molesworth

Yet these are only brief encapsulates of highlights on the life of a man whose influence was not only felt in music, but in the people who played with him, and heard him play. Of all these "highlights," the one that perhaps is the most important, is his music of the sixties.

'During the year 1957, I experienced, by the grace of God, a spiritual awakening which was to lead me to a richer, fuller, more productive life. At that time, in gratitude, I humbly asked to be given the means and priviledge to make others happy through music.'

Music is an understatement. African-American music is unique, not only because of its reliance on improvisation, nor because it is America's only truly indigenous art form, but because of its function. ALL "jazz" music serves a purpose, every single note. The music was spawned out of the wretched conditions imposed on the African-American during slavery. A time which many would not have been able to survive were it not for the music which they sang and created while being forced from their homeland by the slave traders of the West.

The Trane is the embodiment of African-American music. While the music of the 18th and 19th centuries served to ease the suffering of a people, Trane's music also served a purpose. It provided a haven to a people whose destiny was changing at a furious rate. It still does. Trane's music is functional, for the human spirit, much the way the earlier spirituals and work songs were.

True, there are others who make fine examples of the greatness of African-American music. Lester Young, who after spending several debilitating months in the army in 1944, could play notes that would weigh even the lightest of hearts. Yet during Young's time, the status of the African-American did not change, it remained steadfastly despondent. Trane lived amd played through one of the most dynamic and tumultuous times in the history of the African-American, the Civil Rights movement of the sixties.

Sisters not only for sisters

By MONIQUE TABON
Collegian Staff

This past Sunday evening Jomandi Productions Inc., of Atlanta brought to the UMass campus a professional production called SISTERS, written by Marsha Jackson. An exhilerating account of two women's struggle to overcome their personal biases and class differences; SISTERS appealed to the masses of people through its parlor-room style of explicitly frank "girl talk."

The mixed audience of men and women, Black and White alike; they seemed to have identified with this comedy that dared to testify to the many strengths and sacrifices of the modern Black woman and her shattered "American dream." Actress, Andrea Frye, who played Ms. Cassie Charles, the cleaning lady, in this touring two-woman show; exemplified her character by using real stories bearing homage to African-American history. For Cassie, historical survival "techniques" came from Ma'dear, her dead grandmother.

Sharlene Ross as Miss Olivia Delphine Williams, is the unfortunate recipient of both Cassie's and Ma'dear's advice. Miss Olivia, "a chocolate covered mint," according to Cassie, is a corporate American woman, or rather, so she thought. Reality and gut-wrenching truth was a bitter double dose that Miss Olivia, could not, and for a time, would not accept. Her missed opportunity at a view from "the top of the tower" had Olivia trapped between who she thought she was; an accountant executive, and who she actually was; a Black woman.

Triumph and defeat intertwine to form a coiled story of sisters' endurance in American society that somehow always seem to have a yard or so of loose ends. Whether those loose ends include personal struggles or politics, they always seem to step in the way of progress. In SISTERS, Olivia'a loose ends happen to promote escapism, weakness, and being a workaholic. For sassy Cassie, her loose ends were her lost dreams and low self esteem that kept her from being all that she could be.

sion the U.S. looked at was whether they were for or against the U.S."

Speaking on the future of the Palestinian people, Abu-Lughod, himself a Palestinian, said the United States has never acknowledged the Palestinians' right to self-determination or their right to choose their own representatives. "I doubt if the U.S. is going to negotiate with anyone on this issue," he said. He was very skeptical of the success of Secretary of State James Baker's planned peace-seeking mission to the Middle East.

Addressing the role of the Intifada, the Palestinian uprising in the occupied territories, he said it has been enormously successful. Its most important achievements have been the articulation of the movement's vision and ideology.

"It has made a significant difference to the lives of the Palestinians," he said. "It has also exposed Israel for what it is. It has shown that Israel is not a benign power. Israel has not been successful in suppressing the Intifada."

As for Syria, Abu-Lughod said President Hafez Al-Assad was worried about its safety. "It is possible that Syria will sign a Camp David-type agreement with Israel," he said.

Abu-Lughod also addressed the issue of ex-patriate Palestinians and Middle East experts who have denied the linkage between the Palestinian movement for self-determination and the Iraqi Baathist party's attempt to break hegemonic control in the region. "Iraq has historically supported the Palestinian movement even before Saddam Hussein was born," Abu-Lughod said. "Saddam did not invent this linkage."

Addressing the future of the Middle East as a whole, he said there are two possible future models: the Latin American model of exploitation and domination, or the African model of underdevelopment and dismemberment.

is now allowed to bring Kowalski home two weekends every month, and Kowalski's parents have finally withdrawn from the case, she said.

Thompson urged everyone to assign a "durable power of attorney," which she said allows a person to name a guardian while competent for any possible future situation where one might become incompetent.

She bitterly criticized the Minnesota court system and said homophobia hurt Kowalski's recovery process. After the court awarded guardianship to Kowalski's parents, she was moved from a rehabilitation center in Duluth to a nursing home near her parents, where Thompson says her rehabilitation stopped.

"After being at the home for two and a half years her legs could not be straightened beyond a ninety-degree angle and her feet were curled into cramped little balls," she said.

Thompson says if she and Kowalski had been 'out' from the beginning, this entire court battle might not have happened.

"People have to understand the 'isms in this case," she said. "This case was not about a bitter lesbian who lost her lover. It was about a differently-abled being denied all her rights, being put away and allowed to deteriorate against her will."

More POWs released, rebellions flare in Iraq

By LAURA KING
The Associated Press

Thirty-five allied prisoners of war, including 15 Americans, arrived yesterday in Saudi Arabia from Iraq. Saddam Hussein's security forces struggled to put down rebellions flaring in the north and south.

The allies also freed the first Iraqi POWs yesterday, about 300 out of more than 63,000 held by coalition forces. They left northern Saudi Arabia for Baghdad aboard two planes, the U.S. military said.

The turmoil in Iraq was underscored yesterday by word from Baghdad radio that Saddam had fired his interior minister and appointed a cousin to the post.

The new minister, Ali Hassan al-Majid, crushed a rebellion by Kurdish separatists in the north two years ago in which government forces used chemical weapons. He also served as governor of Iraq's former "19th province" — Kuwait.

Saddam also sought to make sure his most loyal troops stay loyal. Baghdad radio said soldiers of the Republican Guards would be given a $300-a-month pay raise. It said that was in recognition of their "heroic stands in the mother of all battles."

In the confrontation with allied forces, the Republican Guard was routed.

The allied POWs arrived at an air base in the Saudi capital, Riyadh, aboard a chartered Red Cross plane, where they were greeted by allied Commander Gen. H. Norman Schwarzkopf and other officials.

The POWs were turned over to the Red Cross in Baghdad on Tuesday, but high winds and poor visibility delayed their departure from Iraq.

Yesterday, under the supervision of Red Cross representatives, they left their Baghdad hotel and boarded a bus for the airport. All were clad in yellow jumpsuits emblazoned with the letters PW, and all appeared in generally good condition.

In addition to the 15 Americans, the freed captives included nine Britons, nine Saudis, an Italian and a Kuwaiti. The release of the prisoners was among peace terms laid down by the victorious allies.

Date rape discussed

Prevention explained at workshop

By AMY PRENDERGAST
Collegian Correspondent

Date rape is not only a women's issue, according to two educator/advocates from the Everywoman's Center, who gave a date rape workshop Tuesday in Cance Residence Hall.

"Date rape is not sex. It is a violent crime and against the law. Women have control over their own bodies, and this needs to be made public."
— Kay Pfeiffer, educator/advocate at the Everywoman's Center.

Educator/advocates Debbie Butler and Kay Pfeiffer discussed the definition of date rape, issues of responsibility, and prevention with about 20 persons.

A handout distributed by the Everywoman's Center said date rape is defined as forced, manipulated, or coerced sexual intercourse by a friend or an acquaintance.

According to the FBI, date rape is the most common act of violence against college-age women. One in five college women will be raped in her college career, and 57 percent of those rapes will be in dating situations, according to the brochure.

"Date rape is not sex," Pfeiffer said. "It is a violent crime and against the law. Women have control over their own bodies, and this needs to be made public."

Butler said, "Men have to take responsibility for their actions and learn to respect a 'no' at face value."

The workshop covered several prevention strategies. Butler and Pfeiffer urged women to communicate what they want, and set clear limits for sexual behavior. Women should also establish the identity of a person before going out with him, and trust their instincts if uncertain about someone, they said.

"If you have reported a rape, you do not necessarily have to file charges. We urge all victims of rape to call our 24-hour hotline." The hotline number is: 545-0800."

Indian prime minister resigns

By VIJAY JOSHI
The Associated Press

NEW DELHI, India — Prime Minister Chandra Shekhar resigned yesterday, saying he can no longer run his minority government because of manipulation by former Indian leader Rajiv Gandhi.

Chandra Shekhar's dramatic declaration in Parliament touched off an immediate political uproar. Even some opposition politicians who had criticized the prime minister in the past yesterday upbraided Gandhi's Congress Party, India's largest.

Gandhi has made a series of ill-disguised power plays in recent weeks. His party boycotted Parliament on Tuesday and yesterday over alleged police surveillance of his official residence in the outskirts of the capital.

Chandra Shekhar said he asked President Ramaswamy Venkataraman, who accepted his resignation, to arrange for new elections, instead of trying to patch together another minority government. The prime minister said he would continue in office until new arrangements are made.

"The president has assured me that he will take a decision within 24 hours," Chandra Shekhar told reporters outside the presidential palace.

Chandra Shekhar, 63, took office Nov. 10 after helping to engineer the downfall of V.P. Singh, the prime minister from the Janata Dal party who succeeded Gandhi.

In his minority coalition government, Chandra Shekhar needed the support of the Congress Party to remain in power. Without that backing, Chandra Shekhar's Janata Dal-Socialist party, a faction of Janata Dal, was given no chance of passing any legislation in Parliament.

"This house cannot continue as an honest legislature," Chandra Shekhar said as he announced his resignation with his voice cracking. "I cannot run the government in keeping with their [the Congress Party's] behavior. Being betrayed is not bad, but to betray is bad."

Chandra Shekhar said he could understand when his actions were criticized by opposition parties, but he called the Congress Party's actions "irresponsible."

Before his announcement, opposition members bitterly criticized him for running a "puppet" government controlled by "puppeteer" Gandhi. Afterward, some opposition members echoed his sentiments.

YOUR DAILY HOROSCOPE
By JEANE DIXON

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Look forward to an upbeat day! By evening, you will know the satisfaction of having won an important battle of wits. Domestic affairs require patience. Be willing to compromise.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): A member of the opposite sex is the major factor in openional decision you make today. A career choice is involved. You resolve to forge an important alliance. Repay old debts and favors.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Seek the advice of your old friends. They may be able to shed new light on how you should proceed. Good luck is your secret ally. Beneficial changes are in the wind.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Unexpected developments can slow progress. Stick to the tried-and-true. Someone you hhave long admired will contact you. Count on close friends to go to bat for you.

LEO (July 23-Aug 22): A decision could be taken out of your hands. An influential associate will be sympathetic. Concentrate on taking care of a family obligation. Preventive safety measures are worth the cost.

VIRGO (Aug 23-Sept 22): Exercise special caution when handling money. Temporary problems with your mate can be easily resolved if you are tactful. Wait a while before trying to contact a prominent friend.

LIBRA (Sept 23-Oct 22): You may have to pinch pennies now, especially where household purchases are concerned. Your creative juices will flow freely this afternoon. You make a dynamic impression on someone special.

SCORPIO (Oct 23-Nov 21): New trends denote a welcome financial development. Travel could give you the opportunity to accomplish several aims at one time. Be a goodwill ambassador to your associates. Spend more quality time with offspring.

CAPRICORN (Dec 22-Jan 19): Shifting priorities cause changes in your basic plan. This is a highly sensitive time for romance; be conservative. Seize an opportunity to sow seeds for future financial security.

AQUARIUS (Jan 20-Feb 18): Progressive projects are favored at work. Make long-range plans adn put any extra money into a savings account. A yen for exciting romance could lead you in a new direction. Be careful.

PISCES (Feb 19-March 20): Do not let fear of failure prevent you from trying new things. Take any setbacks in stride. Your day is coming! A friend tries to wangle an invitation to a special event.

With exhibition games on the horizon, money talks loom

By RONALD BLUM
The Associated Press

Jack Armstrong and Joe Oliver of the Cincinnati Reds and Texas Rangers' pitchers Kevin Brown and Kenny Rogers didn't like their contracts, so they picked up and left spring training on Tuesday.

The significance of the walkouts will not be clear until Wednesday, the mandatory reporting date under the collective bargaining agreement. That also is the date American League MVP Rickey Henderson is expected to report to the Oakland Athletics.

As teams prepared for exhibition openers on Thursday and Friday, the offseason money battles went on. The players, all of whom fall short of arbitration eligibility, were renewed at salaries of their team's choosing.

"I don't want to start playing for the money," said Armstrong, renewed for A$215,00.

"I'm not happy with the treatment I've gotten," Oliver said. "I just wanted to make a statement."

Brown had his contract renewed by Texas for $327,500, a 50.2 percent raise. Rogers was renewed at $287,500, a 105.4 percent raise.

"This is not the way to build a relationship for the future," Brown said. "I'm not demanding all the money in the world. I don't think that way. I just wanted a chance for the market to show what a fair number would be."

If the players fail to return on Wednesday, they can be fined.

"It's not the right approach," Reds manager Lou Piniella said, "but then they have to make their own decisions."

In other spring training news:

Players on the Athletics are taking up a collection for Henderson, who thinks he's underpaid at $12 million for four years and wants to renegotiate.

A collection bottle was placed near the entrance to the trainer's room and it was full of greenbacks of varying denominations by the end of Tuesday's workout.

On the bottle was a handwritten message: "Rickey Appreciation Fund. Not Tax Deductible."

The San Francisco Giants agreed to a five-year lease to continue training at Scottsdale, Ariz., through 1996. The city will build a new $7 million, 10,000-seat stadium which will open next year. The current stadium was built in 1956 and seats 5,000.

Don Robinson threw 15 minutes of batting practice after learning he has an inflamed rotator cuff. He will seek a second opinion.

"I threw and everything felt normal," Robinson said. "The MRI revealed the inflammation, but Dr. Richard Collins said it was difficult to interpret the results because of all the previous work on my shoulder."

Philadelphia Phillies pitcher Ken Howell appears to have a bone spur in his pitching shoulder and may miss four-to-six weeks if X-rays confirm the preliminary diagnosis.

Howell, who was disabled last Aug 1 and missed the remainder of the season, reported pain while throwing Monday and was sent to a nearby radiology clinic.

Atlanta Braves outfielder Tommy Gregg, who led the major leagues in pinch hits last season with 18, missed practice with a strained lower back he aggravated during stretching exercises.

Trainer Dave Pursley said Gregg will miss three days to a week with the injury. He has prescribed rest, whirlpool treatments and anti-inflamatory drugs.

Jeff Robinson, obtained from the Detroit Tigers on Jan. 12 for catcher Mickey Tettleton, was told by Baltimore manager Frank Robinson that he's virtually locked up a spot in the Baltimore Orioles' rotation. Jeff Robinson pitched two inning in Tuesday's intersquad game, a day after he had arm spasms, which were found not to be serious.

World Series MVP Jose Rijo participated in full drills for the first time since having two wisdom teeth extracted last week. He threw 10 minutes of batting practice wearing a black mask.

Infielder Randy Velande and the New York Yankees are clashing over $20,000. The team is offering $155,000 and he says: "It's a slap in the face."

WINTER HAVEN, Fla. (AP) — Wade Boggs and Tony Pena homered and Tim Naehring lined a two-run double as the Bernardinos beat the Brumbrys 5-3 in six innings Wednesday in the Boston Red Sox' only intrasquad game of the training season.

Boggs led off the game against rookie Derek Livernois by hitting a 1-1 pitch into a jetstream wind, the ball carrying far over the fence to the right of the 420-foot mark in dead center.

Pena who singled and scored on Naehring's double in the second broke a 3-3 tie with a long homerun over the fence near the 380-foot mark in left-center off rookie left-hander Tom Fischer in the fourth. It was the only hit off Fischer in two impressive innings, but he was the loser.

With one out in the second, Phil Plantier walker and took second on Pena's infield hit. Naehring followed with a line double to left-center, scoring Plantier and Pena.

Coach Al Bubmry's squad scored two runs in the first on a walk, a double down the left-field line by Jody Reed and a pair of infield grounders by Mike Greenwell and Mike Marshall against rookie Scott Taylor.

The Brumbry's tied the score in the second when two walks and a single by Louis Rivera loaded the bases and John Moses hit a pop fly single to right-center. Jeff Plympton replaced Taylor and retired Reed and Greenwell with the bases loaded. Plympton, a rookie right-hander from the University of Maine, allowed just one hit in the next two innings to earn the victory.

Veteran Tony Fossas, signed to a minor league contract for a trial with Boston, protected the lead with two perfect innings, including two strikeouts.

the National Championships and the Iron Man competitions taking place in October. The reason for the later start for triathlons is because the first leg of the competitions usually involve swimming in either lakes or oceans and the water and air temperatures are too cold for the activity any earlier.

The club is looking forward to successful year of competition, which members hop to include qualifying as many athletes as possible for the National Championships, according to Schwankert.

Member Peter Vananburgh qualified for the National Biathlon Championships last year and Michael Stebe qualified for the National Triathlon Championships. Schwankert hopes that more athletes from the club will qualify this year.

"I expect that the guys who qualified last year will go again this year," Schwankert said. "Hopefully some other athletes will qualify also."

SPORTS

Women's track finishes strong

By DAN WETZEL
Collegian Staff

Although her team was beset with much illness and bad luck throughout the season, the University of Massachusetts women's track coach Julie LaFreniere looks at the past season positively.

"The one thing that you have to remember about this team is that we didn't have many athletes," LaFreniere said. "However, we may not have quanity but we do have quality. Everyone of these girls worked hard and they all had great attitudes."

UMass, which went 11-2 in the dual meet season, definitely had some quality performers. Leading the pack was junior Lee Ann Ambrose, who posted a team-high 46 points.

Ambrose set two school records this season, in the 200- and 500-meter. Ambrose actually tied her own record in the 200, running 25.35 seconds at the Smith College Invitational in February. She shattered her old record of 76.26 in the 500, running 74.35.

"Lee Ann is an extremely talented athlete," LaFreniere said. "In the 200 she pulled up the last 20 meters with a buckled knee or else she would have had a better time. In the 500 she was just dominant.

"Lee Ann ran in the 200-, 400-, 500-, 600- and the 800-meter for us — often doubling up — and she anchored our relay teams," LaFreniere said.

"Not only that, but she qualified for the [Eastern Collegiate Athletic Conference Championships] in every one of those distances, her coach added. "She is also a person who leads by example and is very pleasant to have around."

Ambrose was neither able to defend her New England 400-meter title nor compete at the ECAC's due to an asthma problem.

Another stand-out, according to LaFreniere, was sophmore Lennice Johnson. Johnson scored 35.75 points for UMass while running the 55-meter hurdles, 400- and 500-meter runs and competing in the relays.

"Lennice really stepped up and did it all for us this season," LaFreniere said. "In the 500 she ran 76.8, which just missed the old school record. She has run the third fastest time ever at UMass.

"Lennice is a very versitile athlete and she did a great job even after missing two weeks with a twisted knee," LaFreniere said.

Freshman Kelly Liljeblad, who was MVP of the cross country team, kept her momentum going this winter. Liljeblad scored 34.75 points for UMass and competed in the 800-, 1,000-, 1,500- and 3,000-meter as well as the mile.

Liljeblad was extremely close to setting a couple of school records: She ran the mile in 4:56.03 yet the record stands at 4:55.03; and she missed the record in the 1,500 by four one hundreths of a second. Both records are over 11 years old.

Sophmore Mo Meldrim came alive towards the end of the year and ran the 5,000 at the ECAC's. She ran a personal best 17:38 to finish third at the New Englands.

Senior co-captain Cathy Crocker also had a good season, often tripling up in the 800-, 1,000- and 4x800 meter relay.

"Cathy is running better than she has in the four years that I have known her," LaFreniere said.

"Kelly is a versatile kid, she doubled up for us this season in every meet," LaFreniere said. "She just missed those records but she is only a freshman and still has plenty of time to set them."

In the field events Diane Ozzolek and Samone Marrisua showed strength all year. Ozzolek set a school record in the 20-pound weight, throwing 46 feet, 9¼ inches.

"We had some very good performances throughtout the season," LaFreniere said. "We had a few bad breaks along the way but this was a successful season for us."

Female skiers tame Eastern slopes

By CARRIE WYETH
Collegian Staff

The ski team had both a strong and consistent season this year that ended at the Middlebury College Snow Bowl on February 23.

The women snatched first place in the Eastern College Ski Conference, dominating both Boston College and Plymouth State with victories in their last four races. The men were not quite as successful, finishing third out of nine men's teams in the league.

"We skied the best we have in three years, but we would have liked to win," junior skier Rob Umstead said. "But we'll win next year."

The season started off aggressively during winter training as coach Bill MacConnell explained: "I felt that winter camp was the best it's been in the 28 years that I have been ski coach.

"Everyone improved in a very substantial way, and that helped us through the whole season," he said.

The season witnessed especially dynamic skiing from J.J. Tanguay. She won six out of the 10 league races, with each race hosting 10 colleges and about 80 women.

MacConnell said the consistant skiing of junior Josh Cohen made him the most valued skier yet results from all participants enabled the team to participate in the NCAA Eastern College Ski Championships at Middlebury College.

"[At Middlebury] the competition is much more intensive and only championship teams race there." he said.

Considering the competition they were up against, places of eighth for the women and 11th for the men were impressive. MacConnell described the 18 East Coast competitors as 'snow-country schools.'

The strong season will see the departures of captain Marti Gilbert, Peter Selkowitz and Scott Levine.

Gilbert finished her fourth year of skiing with a very steady performance, and tranfer Selkowitz was one of the more valuable skiers on the team, according to MacConnell.

Levine will continue his engineering studies at the University but will not compete as he has used up his eligibility.

Club encourages endurance, training

By KEITH BENNETT
Collegian Correspondent

While many athletes may swim a mile or take a 25-mile bike ride or run 10-kilometers in an afternoon, members of the UMass Triathlon Club frequently do all three.

The club, which was founded by a group of students in the spring of 1989, currently includes 26 members and prepares for its third year of competition.

In preparation for the season, the club will compete in several local road races this spring, beginning with the Run For Runaways Road Race held in Amherst on April 6. The first triathlon for many members will be held May 5 in Marlboro.

Steven Schwankert, president of the club, said that the purpose of the club is to provide a means for endurance athletes to get together and share ideas and information about upcoming races. The club also holds group workouts.

"I've always found that training with other people and talking with other people helps in your racing," Schwankert said.

The club is made up of two types of members, according to Schwankert, those who are just starting to train and compete in triathlons, and the more experienced athletes who have won age-group titles or have had success in races.

Schwankert said that a typical week of training for the more experienced athletes might include 150- to 200-miles of bicycling, 45-miles of running and nine to 10-miles of swimming. These triathletes typically need to work out twice a day in order to fit in the two to three hours of training daily which this schedule demands.

The sport of triathloning is fairly new. The competitions, which combine the sports of swimming, bicycling and running all into one race, began to gain widespread popularity in the early 1980s. Schwankert said he believes that the sport is still growing in popularity.

"They called triathlons the sport of the '80s but I don't think there'll be a reduction in the number of races or in the number of competitors in the '90s," Schwankert said.

Indeed, triathlons may even see a growth in popularity in the '90s as an exhibition triathlon will be staged in the 1992 Summer Olympics in Barcelona, Spain.

Schwankert said that triathlons range in size from the sprint variety to Iron Man competitions. A sprint competition typically includes a quarter-mile swim, a 12-mile bike ride and a 3.5-mile run. In contrast, the Iron Man is a gruelling test of endurance where athletes complete 2.4-miles of swimming, 112-miles of bicycling and a 26.2-mile run.

The international distances for the event, which will be used in the Olympics, are one-mile (1500-meters) of swimming, 25-miles (40-km) of bicycling and 6.2-miles (10-km) of running.

One of Schwankert's goals as president has been to try to increase the club's membership and its visibility on campus.

"We've tried to make ourselves more known to the University," Schwankert added. "I put up posters around the school and run ads in the Collegian inviting people who are interested in learning more about the club to our meetings, which we hold every other Tuesday night."

He said that many of the athletes in the club, including himself, like to compete in road races in the spring in order to assess their level of training and to accustom their bodies to competition again after the long winter.

"I like to run 10-Ks and five-mile races in the spring just to get out there and run fast," Schwankert said.

Some club members also compete in biathlon races early in the year. These races, in which athletes compete in only the bicycling and running events, usually begin in April and run until October.

Triathlons are held from June until September, with

FUGAZI
By LAUREN BARBAGALLO
Collegian Correspondent
In an age of hypocritical rock stars, MTV saturation, and ruthless self-promotion, the appearance of Fugazi this Saturday on the University campus should prove to be a cathartic release for a troubled Pioneer Valley. In a time of stressful and perplexing developments at home and abroad, Fugazi's full frontal assault in the Student Union Ballroom should be one of the most powerful performances at our disposal.
"Function is the key," writes Fugazi in their song, "Waiting Room." The performance will benefit Necessities/Necesidades, a local nonprofit organization that has served battered women and children for 11 years.
It is no wonder that Fugazi possesses one of today's most original sounds, since all the members have had deep influences in the world of underground music. The band has been incredibly successful at developing a unique sound unparalleled in music today. Fugazi's music is pure energy and unbridled rock and roll — hardcore but tighter, hard rock but better. Fugazi has a refined, polished, yet powerful presence that possesses enough enormity to keep

The Spyz to bring new line-up to the SUB

By DANIELLE DOWLING
Collegian Staff

"I usually say it's like listening to a radio station," bassist Rick Skatore said in relating how he would describe his band, 24-7 Spyz, to someone who has never heard them before.

"You how you get your favorites on one channel then you turn to the next channel. That's what you do with your radio and that's how you can look at our music," he added. "First you'll go to hip-hop, then you'll turn to funk and then to jazz."

The blend of styles they created on their last release, Gumbo Mullenium, can be best compared with a Sizzler's salad bar of ska, funk, punk, hard core, thrash, R-n-B and whatever the hell else they decide to throw in.

"People say, 'How can you do that on the same album? Doesn't that hold you back? Doesn't that make you guys difficult to market?'" Skatore said. "It's hard to market, but there's so much involved in our stuff that it makes it that much more enjoyable. On the market, they play so much stuff that you want to hear and then you get the album home and it's sounds fucking wack, because there's only one or two songs on the album that you like and the rest of them just flow on the same pattern. With our music there's nothing that's ever going to be quite the same."

Skatore claimed that he was pleased with the material on Gumbo, but was somewhat disappointed with the sales.

"I think it could have gone a lot further," he said. "But no problem, there will be others."

Unfortunately Skatore's relaxed attitude was not shared by former band mates, vocalist Peter Fluid and drummer Anthony Johnson. Skatore pointed to financial expectations that were not met as being a major factor in the departure of those two members.

Fluid plans to start his own solo career in the reggae scene, while Johnson has decided to go back to school. The two have been replaced by vocalist Jeff Broadnax and drummer Joel Maitoza.

They found Broadnax at a club in Virginia Beach. Broadnax came up to Skatore and presented him with a video tape of his band, the Funk Junkies. A year later when Fluid announced his resignation, Skatore remebered the guy and his superb voice.

Maitoza was picked out of several drummers. Spyz's guitarist Jimi Hazel went out to the Concrete Convention in Los Angeles, where he met Maitoza, who said that he would do anything to get out to New York to audition for the group. Their managers flew him to New York, where he practiced with the group for three days. They went on to do shows in New York, Washington, D.C., Providence and New Jersey.

"It was amazing. I couldn't believe it," Skatore said of the shows. "In the short amount of time that we had to rehearse, just to get these guys back into the swing of things as well as ourselves. They were very on it, very good entertainers, very good players. I like this band a lot more now."

Skatore claimed that the new members will have more of a soulful influence on the sound. "It will be a combination of soulful rock-n-roll," he added. But never fear, they will keep a thrash feel, but there will be more of a twist than in the past.

The Spyz will probably start preparing for a new album in April or May with a possible September or October release. Expect the Spyz to showcase three new songs in their live show.

The 24-7 Spyz will play at UMass in the Student Union Ballroom Saturday night. Opening for them will be the Veldt and the Lemonheads. Tickets are $7 for UMass Students and $9 for the general public. The show will start at 8 p.m.

Robert Rivest and Ken Glickman to entertain in silence

By JOY EVANS
Collegian Correspondent

Jay Leno, Steven Wright and Ken Glickman. While many people may have never heard of that last name, many people will never hear him.

On Friday night, the Hands Sign Language and Deaf Culture Club will present Ken Glickman, a deaf humorist, as part of the Mount Holyoke College Deaf Awareness series.

Author of two humorous DEAFinitions books and designer of a DEAFinitions poster, Glickman presents a comedy performance based on these books and presents it in a crash course in "Deafology 101."

Born completely deaf, Glickman provides humorous insight into the deaf culture as seen through his eyes and offers new words and phrases for the sometimes hilarious, sometimes awkward situations that the deaf encounter on a daily basis. In doing so, Glickman gives a new voice to the deaf experience and opens up the world to the hearing audience.

On Saturday night, another show will be presented as part of the Deaf Awareness series. It will be a double feature of "The Great Mime" with Robert Rivest and the deaf acting troupe, "The Return of Charlie Chaplin." In a show that uses no speaking and no music, Robert Rivest constructs his act around his ability to act out scenes using his body, combining an actors grace, strength and control with an added sense of realism.

The Hands Sign Language and Deaf Culture Club will present Ken Glickman at Mount Holyoke College in Blanchard Campus Center at 9 p.m. Friday night. Admission is free. "The Great Mime" with Robert Rivest and "The Return of Charlie Chaplin" will perform at the same college in Pratt Auditorium at 8 p.m. Saturday night. Admission is $4 for students and $6 for the general public.

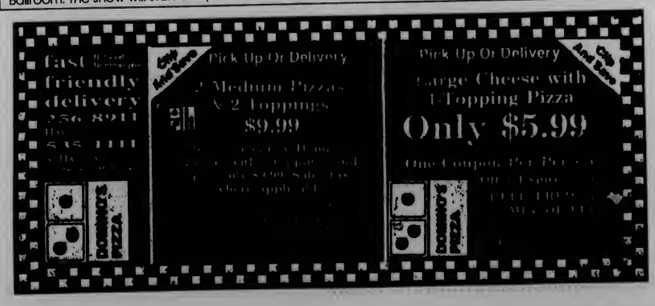
McCabe and Mrs. Miller, another $1 film, will be shown at Hampshire college at 8 p.m.



Magic jazz with Renee Rosnes

The second installment of this year's Magic Triangle Jazz Concert Series, sponsored by WMUA 91.1 FM, will take place tonight at the Hampden Theatre. Performing will be a quintet, led by one of the brightest young stars on the scene today, Canadian pianist Renee Rosnes.

A quintet led by Renee Rosnes will play the second series of the Magic Triangle Jazz series.

Born in Saskatchewan, Canada, Rosnes received formal training in classical music, but then fell in love with jazz. She has since moved to New York where she finds herself in high demand.

She has released two albums of her own on Blue Note, as well as recording with the group Out of the Blue and Joe Henderson. She has also toured with such luminaries as Wayne Shorter and Herbie Hancock. Her albums are split between her own compositions and bright new interpretations of well known pieces by such greats as Thelonious Monk.

The rest of the quintet are also a large part of the new wave of fresh and interesting young talent hitting the jazz world. Saxophonists Steve Wilson and Walt Weiskopf have recorded solid albums under their own leadership and are regulars in the Renee Rosnes group.

Bassist James Genus may be best known for his regular work with the Don Pullen trio and can be heard on that group's latest release, Random Thoughts. Rounding out the rhythm section is versatile drummer Tony Reedus. Rosnes, Genus and Reedus will also be teaching a master class at Amherst College this afternoon.

The Renee Rosnes Quintet will perform tonight at UMass in the Hampden Theatre at 8 p.m. Tickets are $5 for students and $7 for the general public and on sale at the Fine Arts Center Box Office.

Bob Mould to play an acoustic set at the Horse

By JODY GABIN
Collegian Staff

There are certain people who have the ability to channel their angst through prose. In their barest form, their words speak volumes; it's writing born from passion and loss; created by intense, white pure emotions.

They're the emotions Bob Mould songs are made of.

Mould, formerly of the melodic hardcore trio Husker Du, secluded himself on his Minnesota farm following his band's break up during the mid-80s. What evolved was Mould's first solo album, the meticulously crafted Workbook — an introspective effort that paired themes of betrayal, isolation and disillusionment, with mesmerizing, explosive guitar riffs. Mould followed up the release of Workbook with months of touring that enthralled both audiences and critics alike. Mould's 1990 album Black Sheets of Rain, was a response to the exhilaration of these shows, which followed a two-year hiatus from live performances.

"Seeing how people reacted to Workbook live and the things that charged them up got me going in that direction," Mould says. "When you're writing songs, you go with where you're at at the time. If you're feeling loud, that's what you should write. It just seemed appropriate to be more aggressive."

As was with Workbook, Mould melded his talent with drummer Anton Fier (Golden Palominos) and bassist Tony Maimone (Pere Ubu), to arrive at a sound that rings with the same sense of tension and urgency that drove Husker Du's Warehouse: Songs and Stories.

"There's no point in not pushing yourself," Mould says, and taking that tenet, he burst headlong into breathtaking sonic territory.

In support of the album, Mould, Fier and Maimone toured throughout 1990, blanketing audiences with an incessant onslaught of of guitar-stimulated violence and white noise.

This weekend, Mould leaves the violence at home and returns to the Valley to bear his soul in a solo-acoustic show, higlighting his skills as a purveyor of stripped down, distilled, emotionally potent acoustic guitar work.

Bob Mould will be performing at the Iron Horse on Saturday, March 9, at 7 p.m. Tickets are $10.50 in advance.

their hardcore fans satisfied. As a result of their massive sound and tight musicianship, Fugazi has become a word-of-mouth legend in the underground music scene, drawing sellout crowds and a faithful following. Furthermore, they have gained the respect of their peers by refuting the norms of today's music industry. The band refuse to play shows for a ticket price of more than five dollars and continue to act as their own booking agency.

Guitarist/Vocalist G. Picciotto and drummer Brendan Canty are both veterans of the influential Washington D.C. band Rites of Spring. Vocalist/Guitarist Ian Mackaye helped form the legendary D.C. punk band, Minor Threat, a band largely responsible for shaping the D.C. hardcore scene. Mackaye and ex-Minor Threat drummer Jeff Nelson confounded the independent record label, Dischord. Fugazi is Ian Mackaye (guitars, vocals), G. Picciotta (guitars, vocals), Joe Lally (bass guitar), and Brendan Canty (drums).

Although their most recent album, Repeater, sold over 100,000 copies, they do not want a place in the corporate rock world. Says Mackaye, "The only thing major labels can offer is distribution . . . the fact that we can't get our records in every 7-Eleven across the country is just not important . . . the goal and ambition of Fugazi is to be a band, and we've succeeded in that."

Mackaye's consistency and integrity is especially refreshing in light of certain other bald-headed rock stars who inflict us with their pompous denouncements of "the false and destructive materialistic values of the music industry" as they rake in the benefits of money and publicity that come from being on a major record label.

The Union Program Council, the Alternative Music Collective and the UMass chapter of POWER, will present Fugazi on Saturday, March 9, at 8 p.m. in the Student Union Ballroom on the UMass campus. Appearing with Fugazi will be special guests, The Brood, and Zu-Zu's Petals. Tickets are $5.

The Toasters could bring their ska blend to the forefront

By PAUL DEGEORGES
Collegian Staff

When people talk about the Sixties, a topic that inevitably comes up is the musical revolution that took place. Unfortunately, the first thing that pops into most people's heads is the birth of that crap we now so ironically call "Classic Rock." What makes it "classic," I'm not exactly sure of, but perhaps it has to do with the fact that it has stood as the inspirational archetype for most of the equally useless stuff that now abounds on commercial radio. But please excuse my cynicism, I'm not trying to say that no good came of the decade that is responsible for unleashing Led Zeppelin on us, in fact one perfectly wonderful example is the creation of ska.

The Toasters will play their ska blend at Pearl Street tonight.

Ska came before Reggae and introduced the world to an irresistible sound full of off-rhythms and heavy horns. Actually it was born in the late-50s and quickly spread from its birthplace of Jamaica to the West Indies and on to the rest of the world. Though ska has consistently been a strong force in the music industry, it has oddly remained a largely esoteric genre.

The Toasters could change all of that.

They've been called "the best kept secret in the music business," but this New York City-based make it clear at every show that they don't expect to stay that way. The Toasters combine ska and reggae with a unique and exhilarating fusion of calypso, jazz and blues, House, and Hip-Hop. Basically, they just take every kind of music that feeds the part of the brain that controls your resistance to rhythm, and mix it up into a irresistibly tasty ska gumbo.

They've played from Broadway to Berlin, and consistently garnered rave reviews. Their stage presence has been described as "stunning" and they have no trouble whipping danceteria crowd into a skanking frenzy. "For me, that's the whole attraction of the music," says Rob Hingley, guitarist for the group, "It does reach out to people. It doesn't really have that Brechtian alienation — we are the artists and you are the admiring public. It definitely brings people in, and I think that's why it has a big attraction for younger kids — who may not be the biggest music critics in the world, but they know what fun is when they're having it."

The Toasters, with special guests The Mighty, Mighty Bosstones, will perform tonight at Pearl Street in Northampton. The show will start at 8:30 p.m. Tickets are $6 in advance.

600 students protest 'Straight Pride' rally

By MEREDITH O'BRIEN
Collegian Staff

More than 600 angry students yesterday defiantly protested the "Straight Pride" rally held on the Student Union Steps at the University of Massachusetts, drowning out rally organizers with chants, whistles and music.

Albany and Boston chapters of Queer Nation joined its UMass contingent to show support for gays, lesbians and bisexuals, while members of the Lesbian Bisexual Gay Alliance, as well as many other supporters, came out in full force. About 20 people, wearing buttons with blue squares — symbolizing heterosexual pride — showed their support for "straight pride."

Protesters, toting signs reading "Hot Queer Sexy" and wearing stickers saying "Dyke" and "Fag," jeered speakers while chanting "Nazis" at many of them. When some of the rally's organizers tried to speak they were drowned out by protesters yelling and playing music through portable radios.

Amy Lesen, UMass sophomore and LBGA member, said people decided to protest because the rally was "not really about 'straight pride'

"This rally isn't about pride, it's about hate," she said. "Gay bashing went up on this campus after last year's 'Straight Pride' rally and we're not going to take it anymore."

Glen Caroline, president of the Republican Club, said the purpose of holding a "Straight Pride" rally was to reassert heterosexuality, which he said was being trampled and disregarded by the University administration.

"I'm not homophobic because that implies that I'm afraid of homosexuality," Caroline said. "I'm fighting to make them equal, but if you want to be equal you have to go through the system, not get special privileges."

Ted Maravelias, founder of the New American Club and senior editor of the Minuteman, told a screaming crowd that "militant" homosexuality threatens the existence of a "moral" United States.

"If you guys [gays, lesbians and homosexuals] take over the country, your country will slip into a totalitarian dictatorship," Maravelias said pointing to the crowd. "All Christians will be killed. You have all lost your respect for your country and have spit on the Constitution . . . You're a bunch of godless freaks."

One Hampshire College student attending the rally filed assault charges against a man who punched him in the face.

Philip Zaia, a second year Hampshire College student and member of Queer Nation, filed charges with UMass police after he was hit by a man, believed to be a UMass student.

Protesters hold signs at the "Straight Pride" rally, part of "Conservative Awareness Week."

Zaia said while he was handing out Queer Nation literature, a man who refused to take one of the pamphlets began calling him a "faggot." He said the man then grabbed his arm and began pushing him in the shoulder.

"I knew this was a completely stupid situation, so I backed away," Zaia said. "I just said, 'Back off,' but then he started swinging at me and started punching me across the face. I was blocking some of the punches with my hands."

Director of Public Safety Arthur Hilson said UMass police have spoken to witnesses, have positively identified the assailant, and are actively investigating the issue.

Zaia was looked at by physicians at the Hampshire College infirmary, but was not treated for any serious injuries.

Bill Hewitt, member of the Board of Governors and the UMass Republican Club, said, "I pray to God that this is not held as a representative action of the Republican Club. We want no part of that — we do not advocate violence."

Hewitt said he was also considering filing charges of assault against two women who had reached through the Republican Club office window, destroying property and grabbing his arm.

After the emotional and bitter rally, conservative organizers, surrounded by UMass police, fled to the

Carew works to end dispute

SAO director attempts to bridge gap

By JEFF CLEARY
Collegian Correspondent

By creating a partnership between students and staff of the Student Activities Office, the director of SAO said recently she has tried to end the disagreement between the Student Government Association and the University administration.

Dr. Irene Carew holds a University of Massachusetts degree in counselor education and has worked at UMass since 1969. Carew replaced the late Randy Donant, whom she described as a "great educator."

"This organization was in a lot of conflict [when Donant was director] — and still is now," Carew said.

The SAO and the students did not have a good relationship when she became director, Carew said. Communication with the Registered Student Organizations was "great" but there was no dialogue with the SGA, she said.

Carew said the SGA's main purpose is to appropriate money from the Student Activities Trust Fund to RSOs. The mandatory Student Activity Fee of $112 on every undergraduate's semester bill goes to the SATF.

Part of the conflict with SAO is "Student government wants to manage the SATF, [the SGA] wants to manage us," Carew said.

In 1986, a commission of administrators and students was formed to oversee the SATF, Carew said. The commission, similar to the current Restructuring Commission, created the SAO Council and the Student Planning Committee to bring students and staff together to manage the SATF budget, Carew said.

Students filed suit against the University over handling of the SATF interest in 1987 and the case is still pending, according to a student senator.

Salaries for SAO staff, which total about $500,000 out of a $2 million budget, are drawn from the SATF, said Johnson Senator Kevin Newnan.

"I think we're a little unusual in that all [SAO] monies are paid for out of the SATF. If we could get SAO paid out of state monies, it would clarify some of those relationship problems," Carew said.

SAO has always been seen as an administration office by the trustees, because "through the trustees comes the authority for the SATF," Carew said.

The SPC is made up of SAO staff and the student-elected SGA leadership. "I think the SGA leadership is very much in touch with the students," Carew said.

"What runs smoothly are those students that get informed, have dialogue with SAO staff . . . [those students] build together from student and staff perspective goals. One example is Chapter 9," Carew said.

Chapter 9, a motion which failed in the SGA last semester, would have set new regulations on RSOs, according to Sen. Newnan.

Those regulations include an advisor for each RSO, which could override members of an RSO and only be appealed to the SAO Council, not the Senate.

UM accident victim dies

By MARK HENSLEY
Collegian Staff

Nancy S. Anton, 20, a University of Massachusetts junior, died Wednesday, March 6 at Bay State Medical Center in Springfield of injuries received this weekend from a car accident on Route 116 in Amherst, hospital officials said.

Anton, who was a nursing major at UMass, leaves her parents Michael and Barbara, and her sisters Beth and Judy, of Sudbury.

Anton lived at Townhouse Apartment Complex in Amherst and also leaves her roommates Gail Girasella and Robin Hennessy.

Anton worked with the elderly at Hampshire County Health Care in Northampton, and volunteered at Emerson Hospital in Concord and a shelter in Boston for homeless women.

She also worked last semester at Shriners Hospital for Children in Springfield. "She was so interested and so excited about the possibilities of what could be done [for the children], even in their difficult situations of being hospitalized," said Susan Sheridan, dean of the School of Nursing.

Visiting hours will be Sunday, March 11 between 2 p.m. and 4 p.m. and 7 p.m. and 9 p.m. at the William R. Duckett Funeral Home at 656 Boston Post Road in Sudbury.

The service will be held Monday, March 12 at St. Elizabeth Episcopal Church on Concord and Morse Roads in Sudbury. Instead of flowers, contributions can be sent to the Nancy S. Anton Memorial Scholarship, P.O. Box 862 Sudbury, MA 01776.

Judaism offers women active role in religion

By ALISON BUCKHOLTZ
Collegian Staff

Traditional Judaism presents many more examples for modern Jewish women to take an active role in religion than generally thought, according to Susan Day, the director of Student Affairs at University of Pennsylvania Hillel, during her discussion, "Traditional Judaism and Women's Roles in the 1990s: The New Challenges" last night in the Hillel House.

Day, who enjoys "trying to integrate Judaism into day-to-day life," takes a special interest in intertwining Judaism and feminism. "I'm often asked, 'How can someone who considers herself Orthodox also be feminist?' " she said. Her own investigation into women's roles in biblical history and contemporary Jewish life have Representatives attend LBGA conference in Va.

By ALI WOOLWICH
Collegian Staff

Six representatives from the University of Massachusetts Lesbian Bisexual Gay Alliance attended the eighth annual North East Lesbian and Gay Student Association Conference, held in Williamsburg, Va. last weekend.

Students from colleges as far west as Ohio and as far south as Virginia convened for three days of workshops and lectures addressing issues pertinent to the gay, lesbian and bisexual community.

Mandy Carter, a lesbian activist from North Carolina, facilitated "Involving Gay/Lesbian/Bisexual People of Color in the Battle for GLB Rights." Students discussed creating a space in student organizations that would welcome African-American, Latina/o, Asian, and Native American peoples.

Ideas and suggestions discussed, included restructuring committees to achieve White/alana parity, building trust between communities, and holding meetings in new places to start a new dialogue. Participants pointed out how the single available mainstream media image — the White, middle-class, male homosexual — separates members of the GLB community from each other by denying the fact that sexual orientation cuts across lines of gender, race/ethnicity, class, and religion.

Stuart Campbell, a youth representative from the Human Rights Campaign Fund, spoke at the conference luncheon about the group's recent activities on the national level. In 1990, HRCF worked for the passage of the Women's Health Care Act, which will fund breast and cervical cancer screening for low income women, the People with AIDS Non-Discrimination Act, and the Hate Crimes Statistics Act, the first piece of federal legislation to include sexual orientation.

Carter held a presentation in the afternoon entitled, "Gays, Lesbians and Bisexuals in Electoral Politics: The Helms vs. Gantt Senate Race in North Carolina." Carter and a group of activists started an Independent Expenditure Campaign to back Harvey Gantt, the Democratic party pro-gay rights candidate for Senator, who was running against arch-conservative Republican incumbant Jesse Helms.

Another afternoon presentation addressed the legalization of gay marriages. Craig Dean and Patrick Gill of Washington D.C., recent guests on the Oprah Winfrey Show and Donahue, discussed their efforts to get their relationship legally recognized.

Despite the fact that D.C. marriage laws do not specify what the gender of married couples should be and do not legally prohibit same sex marriage, Dean and Gill's application for a marriage license was denied by the District. They filed suit against the District of Columbia under the D.C. Human Rights Act, which prohibits discrimination based upon sexual orientation and guarantees that every individual shall have an equal opportunity to participate in all aspects of life.

Dean discussed what gay couples are denied without legal recognition of their relationships. Same gender spouses cannot share health and life insurance, couples cannot have co-guardianship of children, and foster parent programs, in most states, favor married couples — thereby excluding gay couples. Same gender spouses cannot claim each other on federal or state tax forms, and are not recognized as a person's next-of-kin in case of hospitalization or death, unless a durable power of attorney were legally filed prior to the incident.

One of the final workshops addressed bisexuality. Self-identified bisexuals and those who chose not to label themselves discussed their views on gender, on attraction, and wanting to be included or recognized as part of the gay community and gay movement. Bisexuals asserted that the myth of "half straight, half gay" is untrue.

Other workshops included gay spirituality, stress reduction, building student GLB undergraduate and alumni organizations, becoming a gay foster parent, feelings concerning masturbation, GLB students within the fraternity/sorority system, female impersonation as a career track, tapping creativity, gay music, a survey of the 20th century gay novel, safe sex in the age of AIDS, combatting homophobia, gay relationships, women's issues, women in the leather and S/M communities, operating a gay-owned business, and being or staying out of the closet.

proved there is a place for strong women, she said.

One of the most important women in Jewish tradition is Chana, who created the three main mitzvot, or laws, for men and women in prayer, according to Day. Since creation, women have also taken important roles in writing prayers, "although it was thought for a long time that women didn't pray."

These prayers, known as techinot, were "about the things women worried about. Characteristically, these prayers are like a conversation between the woman and God," Day said. The language and focus is very different than in men's prayers — very empowering. There's no language of God the warrior. There's no man sitting on a chair in the sky. It's very nature based."

Women have also recently re-discovered and re-interpreted the holiday of Rosh Chodesh, taking it back as their own, Day said. "Rosh Chodesh celebrates the beginning of the new moon, and in its most original form it is a woman's holiday. Since creation, Jewish literature has associated women and the moon."

In the last fifteen years, Day estimated, women's Rosh Chodesh groups have sprung up around the country. In the Orthodox community, women's prayer groups have also become popular as "a place for religious women to come together."

Today's Jewish women, unlike their predecessors, also have more professional options allowing them to play a stronger role in religion. "In many cases, modern women committed to traditional roles in Judaism take a strong role in the teaching professions — and teachers are just one step away from being Rabbis," Day said.

They also might have been able to eliminate such athletic RSOs as the Crew and Rugby teams because of liability, Newnan said.

"For those students working with the staff and were informed, it was a wonderful relationship, but [Chapter 9] could never get by the SGA. The Senate never really got informed," Carew said.

Carew stated the SAO Council and SPC are outside of the SGA, and are a structural problem.

"If you were going to make the current SGA work — and I have strong doubts on that because the SGA is so large and it's hard to inform that many people — I don't think you need 118 senators in a central governing body," Carew said.

"One constant goal is for students to get together with their peers over issues of interest, including getting to know each other," she said.

A basic problem RSOs had when she started was they no longer followed their constitutions or purpose and were not passing on any kind of history, Carew said.

"Organizational development is one way to enter a system and build a strong organization, to transfer leadership," Carew said.

She points to the LBGA and the Theater Guild as examples of improved organization and stronger leadership.

Carew defined SAO's mission as supporting student businesses and organizations, scheduling events, and accessing money from groups' accounts in the SATF.

"SAO tries to get people to work together and pull out the best from them," Carew said.

"A lot of campuses have students make decisions on their SATFs," Carew said. She said the California State Legislation provides for students to incorporate themselves, hire their own staff, and be entirely separate from the school finances.

"Our state has no such provisions and the Student Activities Fee is mandated by the trustees and therefore not entirely student-controlled," Carew said.

Many students and administrators remember student government in the '70s as the strongest in the country, sources said.

"I hope we get a shot at it," Carew said, in reference to solving the problems of the current SGA and SAO.

Republican Club/YAF/Minuteman office in the Student Union. A group of about 30 protesters followed them, demanding applications to join the Republican Club.

Police guarding the door to the office were helping club members distribute applications when two women, wearing pink triangles on their shirts — which symbolize gay, lesbian and bisexual alliance — reached into the open window of the office, grabbed and ripped some papers, tossed books out the window and threw a framed picture of Abraham Lincoln to the ground where the glass frame shattered.

Three minutes after the police secured the club members in the office, Hewitt said: "Two women appeared at the window and started calling me, 'Nazi' and 'homophobe.' They grabbed the 2 feet by 5 feet bookcase [next to the window sill] and tipped it over knocking its contents out. Then they grabbed my arm."

EDITORIAL/OPINION

The opinions on this page are those of the individual writer or cartoonist and do not necessarily reflect the views of the Collegian or the University unless otherwise noted.

Why 'Conservative Awareness Week' should cause alarm

I just wanted to say a little bit about the seeming revival in the confidence of the ultra-right wing, reactionary, neofascist — call it what you will — 'movement' here on the UMass campus. The new 'movement' includes the Young Republicans, Young Americans for 'Freedom,' etc. It's the growing number of rightist editorials by these people in the Collegian, along with this 'Conservative Awareness Week' crap that's prompted me to write this.

There will be certain students, as well as student leaders, who will tend to waver back and forth between their liberalism and the oh-so-popular all-American ideal of 'tolerance' in the face of the ever-more vocal right-wing. That is, they'll say things like, "I may not agree with all they (the right-wingers) say, but they definitely have the right to say it," etc.

Tolerance is great, when it really means tolerance.

Unfortunately, this word 'tolerance' has come to mean acceptance and sometimes respect for those who espouse racist, sexist, and homophobic remarks in the name of 'freedom' and 'democracy' etc.

The reactionaries' 'straight pride' rally is nothing of the sort: It's an anti-gay tirade; the 'pro-life' rally is also an inversion: It's an anti-woman diatribe; and of course the 'support the troops' rally has nothing to do with 'supporting the troops': It's a pro-imperialist (i.e., pro-Raytheon, pro-Mobil, but anti-you and I) crusade. In its desire to avoid all bloodshed, American and Iraqi alike, the antiwar movement was the true supporter of the troops, of the workers in uniform, of the victims of the 'economic draft.'

But of course, our campus reactionaries will ignore the 100,000 or so Iraqis killed in the fighting because they have to: Arab lives simply aren't as important for them. Let's forget all about 100,000 dead Iraqis and 'string up Saddam,' right? In fact, it's no mistake that the American people didn't know about the large number of Iraqi lives lost until after Iraq had been brutally crushed, or doubtless the anti-war movement would have been even larger.

Roger Long

In short, the corporate press did a damn good job of systematically covering up the truth behind a facade of troop movements and Defense Department press releases, just like they always do. Just like they did in Panama (five to 10,000 dead), Libya, and Grenada. But Iraq was different: At no time in U.S. history has an antiwar movement been as large as this one was before the war actually started. Neither did the antiwar movement lose its momentum after combat began. It grew.

This frightens the reactionaries, and with good reason. So what do our UMass reactionaries do? They, like the 'liberal press,' delight in denouncing. They cover up the 100,000 Iraqi dead with dangerous (yes, dangerous) appeals to 'String Up Saddam,' etc., etc., etc. This makes them racist as well. In their defense, however, I doubt if they always consciously neglect to mention this huge number of dead. They simply take it for granted that the lives of non-Whites are less important. What a pack of idiots.

What about this question of tolerance, then? Should we 'tolerate' our campus reactionaries? A certain British university that I know of, as well as the British Labour Party itself, has what they call a 'No Platform' policy. This means that no public time (or newspaper space) is given to racist, sexist, and/or homophobic remarks. And no matter how they paint it, how they try and hide it with appeals to 'freedom' and 'democracy,' this is exactly what the Young Americans for 'Freedom' and their buddies are spouting: Racism, sexism, homophobia. In short, intolerance, suppression, and HATRED.

It's common fascist strategy, and it's what both Hitler and Mussolini did: In a nutshell, take people's minds off more pressing concerns (like paying the rent and buying food) and get them to hate each other. Sometimes it can be done with certain individuals if they're dejected, frustrated, and have nowhere else to turn. They use hatred to political advantage and certain racial and ethnic groups and certain ways of life as scapegoats. Sound familiar? Kind of like David Dukes' 'National Association for the Advancement of White People,' or the UMass' reactionaries' 'Straight Pride' rally?

You know the rest, and while it's unlikely that someone like Hitler will come to power today in exactly the same way that Hitler himself did, the danger of ultra-right reaction nowadays is very real indeed. But people in the '90s won't fall as easily for such blatantly fascist propaganda. We're more sophisticated, and the memory of Hitler is still fresh in our minds — for example, Bush evoking the notion of Hussein, the leader of a nation (formerly) with the economic output of Kentucky, as the new 'Hitler.' The tactics used to discredit Noriega were very similar.

The lesson to this is that it's more politically wise in modernity to couch repression and injustice in terms of freedom and democracy, especially in the United States. Hence, Young Americans for 'Freedom.' We've only begun witnessing some of it here at UMass with 'Conservative Awareness Week.'

My point? Don't ignore these people; don't think they'll go away by themselves, because they won't. It's vitally important to let them know that there are those who will stand up to them and expose them for what they are: cowards and liars.

Tolerance? Of racism, sexism, homophobia, classism? Sanctioning the use of public property (the Student Union steps) for this crap? Using the Campus Center auditorium for UMass' version of the Morton Downey Show? I don't think so.

The slogan of the British coalminers is 'Eternal Vigilance is the Price of Freedom.' Today, in the face of the United States' economic decline and its resort to militarism to prevent it, nothing could be more true.

Carew leads charge against students

So who made Rene Carew God?

Was it Dennis Madson, Jo-Anne Vanin, Joe Duffey or maybe one of the five student 'leaders' (termed loosely)?

As Director of the Student Activities Office, Dr. Irene Carew has refused to recognize the senate-elected interim speaker and treasurer. She has illegally practiced political censorship by blocking the Finance Committee's transfer of funds to the Minuteman. She has proposed the elimination of the Greek Area, Area Governments, and House Councils in last semester's 'budget exercise.'

Rob Witherell

The senate speaker and treasurer are elected by the senate and serve at the pleasure of the senate. Although the senate may have elected Dan Chesnicka and Karen Talbot last year, the senate also impeached them on Feb. 27. An interim speaker and treasurer were then elected; Jeff Turco as speaker and Patti Donoghue as treasurer. Carew has said that their elections will not be recognized. She has NO right to decide who shall or shall not be recognized. The administration has said it will respect actions taken by the senate — why can't she?

The SGA's Budget Committee is charged with allocating the $2.1 million Student Activities Trust Fund. The Student Activities Office is funded in this manner. The administration is attempting to prevent this budget process from occurring, moving to level fund all organizations for fiscal year '92. The problem with this is that through level funding we will run a $200,000 deficit, which is poor fiscal management.

Patricia Donohue, interim treasurer, asked Carew what the rationale behind the move for level funding was. She responded by saying that the $200,000 would be well worth avoiding a "battle with the Budgets Committee." Battle with the Budgets Committee? Donoghue asked what Carew's basis for anticipating this 'battle' was, whereas Carew had cancelled the only two meetings that Patti had scheduled with her. Carew felt that the memo sent out to all professional and classified staff asking for input on Trust Fund concerns by the Budgets Committee was sufficient grounds for her conclusion. A sincere attempt on the part of the Budgets Committee to open the channels of communication between the students and staff was deliberately thwarted by Carew. Who incited this 'battle?'

Have you ever noticed the new SAO office furniture? Where did that money come from and how much did it cost? SAO will not make that information available. SAO currently recieves nearly $500,000 yearly for payroll alone! There is no money for new office furniture.

The administration and SAO walk all over students and student organizations. Any constitution put forth by the administration's commission is most definitely not going to be pro-students or work toward student empowerment. With public education facing hard times, students need a strong voice. DEMAND IT!

Clarification

Timothy Rondeau, the writer of an earlier letter (Feb. 26, "Unpatriotic radicals should burn as well") apparently did not intend to associate his place of employment with his writing of the letter or the opinions expressed therein. He was writing as an individual human being.

"First, the administration came for the Trust Fund, but I didn't speak up, for I didn't require money.

Then they came for the SGA elections, but I didn't speak up, for I was not running for office.

Then they came for the Minuteman, but I did not speak up, for I was not a conservative.

Then they came for the SGA interim officers, but I did not speak up, for I was not such an officer.

Then, the administration came for me — only. By that time there was no one left to speak up for me."

Comics reek of sexism

I am sick and tired of sexism on the Collegian comics page! Most of the characters are male and those that are female are not given major "speaking roles." For example, on March 4 the comics page contained 185 words "spoken" by male characters and only 22 words "spoken" by female characters. On March 5 there were 271 words "spoken" by male characters, 23 "spoken" by one of Gary Larson's animals of undetermined gender and no "speaking" role for any clearly female character. This gives readers the message that women aren't as important as men.

Notes from the Campus Center Basement

Better tell my favorite President-Chancellor Joseph Duffey's story before it's too late.

In Spring 1989, people were taking over various campus buildings to protest Department of Defense funded research at the University (back in those giddy days, people protested when the government gave UMass money). Duffey called an open meeting in the Cape Cod Lounge to clear the air.

One protester who was arrested at a Graduate Tower takeover, and who was apparently shocked to find getting arrested to be an unpleasant experience, pointed her finger at Duffey and said something along the lines of "you need to learn about the teachings of Gandhi, Martin Luther King, Jr. and the principles of Civil Disobedience."

Duffey, who studied sociology and ethics at Yale and earned a doctorate degree from the Hartford Seminary Foundation, pointed a finger back and said something along the lines of "You should know something about the people you accuse of being ignorant."

Word.

It says here, Duffey's decision to move on is an enormous loss for the University of Massachusetts. He was at the helm during UMass' most prosperous years in the early to mid '80s, and has since been a level-headed leader during chaotic times.

I don't have a problem with supporting the troops. I do have a problem with someone telling me to support the troops, inking the slogan on signs and t-shirts and waving it in my face every time I turn on television. The implied subject of "Support our Troops" is "You," as in, "You support our troops like I obviously support our troops by wearing this t-shirt."

I walked out of Super Stop and Shop recently to find a piece of paper advertising the Earth Preserver cotton canvas re-usable shopping bag under the windshield wiper on my car. I looked around the parking lot and saw hundreds of cars with similar pieces of paper on their windshields. The pavement was strewn with paper flyers.

Senior marketing majors looking for work, please give Super Stop and Shop a ring. They need some help.

Oxymoron of the week: "Conservative Awareness" . . . Moron of the Week: Naw, he's already got enough material for a lawsuit as it is . . . Jason Talerman, of Collegian "Yeasthead" fame, directed the Buffalo Tom video now being aired on MTV. The video is full of "Yeasthead" imagery, including bare feet stepping on eggs and a cat being thrown out of a tree and landing on its feet. Buffalo Tom is a UMass-born hardcore band . . . Again, from the Undergraduate Rights and Responsibilities handbook, "No student shall be denied admission to a University class because of personal grooming or attire unless such restrictions are clearly related to legitimate purposes of health and safety."

YOUR DAILY HOROSCOPE
By JEANE DIXON

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Enjoy the limelight and the extra attention you get now. Share your hopes for the future with someone who needs reassurance. A last minute schedule change allows you to run an important errand.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Someone who has shunned you in the past now wants to do business. Your popularity rises when you participate in group activities. Welcome a golden opportunity to make new friends.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Events at a distance could bring you new hope of personal fulfillment. Loved one makes a surprising decision. Other people give freely to you. An old romance is rekindled.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Murky or uncharted waters lie ahead. Proceed straight ahead. You will find the answers or financial backing you need. Family members are your strongest allies. Show more appreciation.

LEO (July 23-Aug 22): You reach a turning point where your loved ones and mutual funds are concerned. Your foresight pays off. A younger relative expresses admiration for your ability to plan ahead.

VIRGO (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): A closed-door conference may be part of the day's plan. Finish old business before starting new projects. A phone call or message contains a valid hint. Keep your friends by refusing to gossip.

LIBRA (Aug. 23-Sept 22): The spotlight is on your relationship with an older person. Your sense of humor rescues you from a fickish situation. A family member will be very supportive this weekend.

SCORPIO (Oct 23-Nov 21): Family members' request deserves a diplomatic response. Real estate could be the source of a second income. A marital relationship profits. Romance adds glamour to your social life.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov 22-Dec 21): Contact an influential associate. Someone is ready to make a deal. Discuss educational matters and purchase books. A new aquaintance adds glamour to your social life.

CAPRICORN (Dec 22-Jan 19): A personal relationship demands 'kid glove' handling now. Your efforts will be richly rewarded. Welcome a unique financial opportunity. Spend some time on your own this weekend.

AQUARIUS (Jan 20-Feb 18): Complete old business before moving on to new enterprises. A financial situation can be stabilized. You find more good will in a negotiation than anticipated. Plan a special treat for your offspring.

PISCES (Feb 19-March 20): Adhere to a business schedule. Romance may be clouded in the morning but will turn happy by evening. A loan should be repaid without further delay. Invest any extra money.

Singing the praises of the unsung women in jazz

By BILL ROSENBLATT
Collegian Staff

It should go without saying that there aren't too many women in jazz. As a rough gauge, of the approximately 500 artists listed in The Rolling Stone Jazz Record Guide, 50 are women or woman-led groups. It is considered "acceptable" for women to be jazz singers or, to a lesser extent, pianists; accordingly, of the 50 in the Guide, two-thirds are singers, while most of the remaining third are pianists or keyboard players.

Clearly there is something going on there, other than the usual myth of male superiority at skills. Why piano over other instruments? British musician and feminist historian Lindsay Cooper provides an answer: "Piano playing for women was closely tied up with social and marital ambitions. It had to be piano, of course, because the physical movements required for other instruments would excite "unhealthy passions." Cooper was writing about mid-19th century England, but such attitudes die hard. I would add that horns like trumpets and saxophones also have strong phallic implications.

In recent decades things have slowly begun to improve for women in jazz. Although they are still mostly singers and pianists, there has been more acceptance of women as serious artists rather than entertainers. The following are some important female jazz instrumentalists, in rough chronological order. They are personal favorites, and the list is not even close to exhaustive.

Lil Hardin Armstrong — the first important female jazz instrumentalist was Louis' pianist wife. She figured heavily in his Hot Fives and Hot Sevens, the most important small groups of jazz' early decades.

Mary Lou Williams — pianist who arranged, composed and generally took complete control over her music. Her style has constantly progressed since the beginning of her recorded career, in the 40s; she even had the temerity to recorded an album of duets with Cecil Taylor.

Melba Liston — trombonist who eventually became better known as a composer and innovative big-band arranger for the likes of Ellington and Basie. Her best-known work was in collaboration with pianist Randy Weston in the 70s.

Shirley Scott — swinging organist in the Jimmy Smith mold. "Scottie" had a promising career in the 60s, but ended up hibernating in her native Philadelphia. Last year she was rediscovered by Muse Records and is coming back as strong as ever.

Toshiko Akiyoshi — Japanese-born pianist who apprenticed under Charles Mingus, and went on to lead one of the few big bands that extended (rather than imitated) the Ellington tradition.

Alice Coltrane — John Coltrane's widow, a keyboardist and harpist, continued Trane's infatuation with Eastern philosophies and recorded lots of music in the 70s that was highly conceptualized and sometimes downright weird.

Carla Bley — keyboardist/composer/bandleader who was active in the avant-garde and artists' collective scenes of the 60s and 70s. Known for her taste for the bizarre, tongue-in-cheek humor and profound compositional influence on the European jazz scene.

Emily Remler — hard-swinging young guitarist right out of Wes Montgomery. Was hampered by the novelty aspect of a woman playing straight-ahead guitar; her recent, premature death was a tragic loss.

Jane Ira Bloom — soprano saxophonist (finally) and composer with an innovative concept involving live electronics, but essentially a solid, tradition-based player.

Marilyn Crispell — high-energy pianist, influenced by Cecil Taylor. A mainstay on the adventurous, now-defunct India Navigation label in the early 80s. Recently heard in stunning duet with drummer Andrew Cyrille on the Live at the Knitting Factory, Vol. 4 compilation.

Geri Allen — one of the brightest hopes of the young prodigies (of either gender), a truly unique pianist and composer, and a member of Brooklyn's M-BASE Collective. Her recent Blue Note release, The Nurturer, shows her in extremely strong light.

Track finishes with bettered times

By KEITH BENNETT
Collegian Correspondent

The University of Massachusetts men's track team's winter season featured some strong individual performers and added depth in the jumping events, according to head coach Ken O'Brien.

The team finished with a 4-4 record in dual meets and followed that with strong performances in the championship meets. UMass finished third in the Eastern Conference Championships, ninth in the New England Championships and qualified three runners to compete in the Intercollegiate Association of Amateur Athletes of America Championships.

"I can certainly feel satisfied with the overall performance of the team," O'Brien said. "We had some individual performers on the team that carried a heavy load over the course of the season. There were a lot of outstanding individual performances."

Junior Steve Brown finished as the team's leading point scorer. He was undefeated in dual meet races, competing in the 400-, 500- and 800-meters. He also placed second in the 400 at Easterns and third in the 400 at New Englands with a season-best time of 49.23 seconds.

Against Dartmouth, his time of 1:05.03 in the 500 was good enough not only to win the event, but to qualify him for the IC4As. He was unable to run, however, due to a strained hamstring.

Junior Kevin Walters finished the season as the second-leading scorer. Competing in both the 55- and 200-meter races, Walters had some of his fastest times late in the season.

At the Easterns, Walters placed second in the 55 and third in the 200. He followed that performance with a school-record time of 22.50 in the 200 against Dartmouth, then shattered that record with a 22.37 at New Englands the next weekend.

"Walters handled the bulk of the work in the sprints," O'Brien said.

However, Jon Corso, Matt Simon and Gerry Squires carried the middle-distance and distance range events.

Corso won races ranging from 1,500-5,000 meters during the season. He won the 3,000 at the Easterns in a season-best of 8:31.78 and placed fourth in the 5,000 at New Englands in 14:29.33. He qualified to compete in the IC4As and finished eigth in the 5,000.

Simon competed in the 1,000 and 1,500 for the Minutemen. He placed second in the 1,500 at Easterns and was a member of the 4x800 relay team which finished fourth at New Englands.

Squires also placed in races ranging from 1,500-5,000 meters during the season. He placed second in the 3,000 at Easterns in 8:37.4 and also qualified to compete in the 5,000 at IC4A's, where he finished 12th.

O'Brien said that one of the main reasons for the success of the team was a solid jumping crew. The nucleus of the group comprised of Dave Borges, Brian Bednarek, Joe Kourafas, Jeff Peterson and Kristian DiMatteo.

"The improvement of the jumping events was the largest area of improvement over the past years, and that really helped us in the dual meets," O'Brien added. "[The athlete's] versatility was the key. They all competed in two or three events for the team."

O'Brien credited Jeff White and Paul Doyle for balancing out the 55-meter hurdles and was especially pleased with the performances of the younger runners on the team.

"We have a real balanced and deep group of young kids who are freshmen and sophomores," he said. "This shows real promise for outdoors and for next season."

Female gymnasts take on UNH

By LYNN FRANKEL
Collegian Correspondent

The University of Massachusetts women's gymnastics team heads to Durham, N.H., this Saturday to take on long time rival UNH.

Coach Alfie Mitchell expects a tough meet.

"Everything has to work, and there can be no mistakes," said Mitchell.

He said he expects stiff competition from the New Hampshire squad on all the events except the balance beam. Mitchell said UNH, has really put together a strong program this year, and his athletes will be facing their toughest competitors of the season this weekend.

A healthy Tammy Marshall will return to help lead the UMass team.

Marshall will compete in the all-around with teammates Erin Klier, Kim Grady and freshman Margaret Furtado.

Mitchell said he is expecting the same strong, intense consistency from his freshmen team members.

Erika Finkleman and Angela Jent will be expected to come up and contribute to the team's overall score on the balance beam and the floor exercise.

The team, 10-1, no longer faces any 'easy wins.' UNH and next weekend's challenge, West Virginia, stand in UMass' way of getting qualified for the Atlantic 10 and National Championships.

Mitchell said he wants to come back from the weekend 11-1. He said he feels his team has the capability of beating any team as long as their routines are flawless and their confidence levels are high.

Male gymnasts look for revenge in post-season

By MICHAEL MORRISSEY
Collegian Correspondent

Revenge is on the minds of many University of Massachusetts gymnasts as they hope to right past wrongs done them during the regular season.

The Eastern Collegiate Athletic Conference and New England Championships in Burlington, Vt., this weekend, will give them the chance to do so.

The mens' gymnastics team will get a second chance to face Southern Connecticut, Springfield College, Vermont, Dartmouth and the Massachusetts Institute of Technology at New Englands on Sunday.

Saturday's ECAC meet, however, provides the opportunity for individuals to showcase their talents, according to Coach Roy Johnson.

UMass is looking to get back at Southern Conn., who defeated the Minutemen earlier this year by 6.5 points. Some gymnasts said they feel the judges' scoring was slanted toward the home team.

"They were overscored," said sophomore Steve Christensen in reference to Southern Conn. "We definitely want some payback."

"We want to humiliate them," senior Andrew Sullivan said of Southern Conn. "Our main goal is to kick Southern's ass, then go to the [Eastern Intercollegiate Gymnastics League Championships] and kick everyone's ass that beat us."

UMass averages the highest team score of the teams competing at New Englands, according to Johnson. He said he thinks UMass is the favorite.

"We've been New England Champs three out of the last four years," Johnson said. He said he would like this good fortune to continue.

Johnson said he thinks Rob Thomas and freshman Jason Braud have a chance to place in the floor exercises. He added that freshman Joe Haran and Christensen have chances to garner medals on the all-around.

Tammy Marshall shines all around

By TOM QUINN
Collegian Staff

The women's gymnastics coach Alfie Mitchell was in an uncomfortable predicament: The team's only senior, Kristen Turmail, was out with a career-ending knee injury.

Who could equal Turmail's dominant performances?

The answer this year has been sophomore Tammy Marshall.

Mitchell said one of the wisest moves he made as coach was getting Marshall.

"Tammy is irreplaceable," said Mitchell. "She almost always is a top scorer and she always comes to compete in meets and in practices."

Marshall is a determined and focused competitor whose positive attitude is reflected in her routines. She competes in every event, the all-around, and is regularly at the top of the scoring charts.

In a meet against Bridgeport, Marshall won three of four events and swept the all-around with authority. Marshall claims her weakest event is the uneven bars, however, she consistently scores high in the event.

"I just started to hit my routines on the uneven bars," she said, "but it's still something I have to work at."

Mitchell says his hope is that all his athletes will shoot for Marshall's consistency.

"We all want the same thing," he said. "She gives it everything — day in and day out."

Marshall credits her coaches and teammates for getting her through the rigors of pre-season and intersession training.

"Leticia Selk [assistant coach] has done so much for me," Marshall beamed. "She's a great motivator and she always knows what to say to you before a tough routine."

Gymnastics isn't always as graceful and easy as it looks, those beautiful twists and fluent flips take hours of drudgery in Boyden — and a little help from some friends.

"Gymnastics is an individual sport, but I rely on the team for so many little things," Marshall said. "It just wouldn't work without their support."

In high school Marshall competed as an elite gymnast for a Olympic-level team in Long Island as she fought her way back from ligament and cartilage trouble endured during her sophomore year in high school.

"My knee feels fine now," she said with a room-glowing grin. "I had to work hard at getting back to the national level."

Her knee didn't stop her from becoming an All-American in the vault nor qualifying for Nationals as a freshman in college. She entered as an alternate in the all-around competition at Nationals last year and left the competition hungry to make Nationals, but not just in one event.

"My goal this year is to qualify for Nationals in the all-around," said a determined Marshall.

Although a consistent winner in the regular season, Marshall relishes postseason competition.

"We've been working hard in the gym since September and I'm looking forward to Championships," she said with a sigh of relief. "The tough part of the season is over. Now comes the fun part of the season."

Last year UMass was seeded second going into Regionals, but finished with a disappointing third-place finish. Marshall was the only member of the team to qualify for Nationals.

Marshall is confident that her team will make Regional's.

"Our goal is to make Regionals," she said with conviction. "My goal is to win the all-around."

Sophomore Tammy Marshall stepped up to the challenge of trying to replace the team's only senior when she was sidelined with a season-ending injury. Marshall has more than proven herself, both in and out of the gym.

Asian activist analyzes Black/Asian history

Friend of late Malcolm X speaks on racism of the Japanese

By ALEXANDER NGUYEN
Collegian Staff

Yuri Kochiyama condemned the recent "blatant racist" remarks about African Americans by Japanese cabinet members and re-told the history of Asian and Black solidarity to a packed lecture hall last Thursday at Hampshire College.

Kochiyama is a long-time community activist from Harlem and a friend of the late Malcolm X.

Kochiyama cited the Japanese cabinet members' remarks as racist. "The intelligence level in the United States is lower because of the considerable number of Blacks, Puerto Ricans and Mexicans" (1986). "American Blacks have few qualms about going bankrupt..." (1988).

Last year the Japanese Justice Minister drew parallels between the effects of foreign prostitutes on Japan's residential districts and the flight of United States homeowners forced out because Blacks moved in and "ruined the atmosphere."

Kochiyama also noted various Japanese products which portrayed Blacks in "stereotypical and degrading light" including wide-eyed Black dolls with red-lipped grins. "This reveals either utter uncarringness or total knownothingness," she said.

"Japan seems deaf, dumb and blind to the greatness of the human spirit, the beauty and strength of people who have defied humiliation and oppression and have sustained themselves as have the Blacks, Puerto Ricans, Chicanos and Native Americans, challenging the likes of Japan's cabinet members, both here and abroad, fighting on the front lines against racism, inequity, poverty, distortion and hyprocrisy," Kochiyama said.

She said it was beneficial that both Asians and Blacks are "seriously trying to grapple with the reasons, causes and motivations behind these biased, prejudicial acts, thoughts or behaviors" which in the last ten or so years have created conflicts between the communities both overseas and domestically.

"I think this is healthy and needed rather than allowing conditions and relationships to deteriorate or to look the other way as if nothing happened," she said.

Kochiyama told stories of Asian and Black interactions, both negative and positive. She reminded the audience of the international incident three years back where Chinese students at a Chinese university attacked African students for escorting Chinese women to a dance and also of the segregated bars for Black and White American soldiers in Okinawa during the Vietnam war.

Kochiyama praised Mohandas Gandhi for organizing the Indian Red Cross unit of stretcher bearers in South Africa which operated during World War I. She praised Vietnam's Ho Chi Minh for speaking out in support of African and African-American struggles.

"Ho, an Asian internationalist, lived in solidarity with Africans," she told.

Kochiyama then spoke of her friend and colleague Malcolm X, whom she referred to as the "most maligned and derogated Black leader of his time." She told the story of when Malcolm X came to Harlem to meet the atom bomb survivors of Japan and give them his solidarity.

"Malcolm said that the Vietnamese people's struggle is the struggle of the whole Third World," she told.

"That Malcolm would come to a stranger's apartment at a dangerous time for him to meet Asians is something I'll never forget," Kochiyama said.

Campus officials testify against Weld's higher ed plans

By MARC ELLIOTT
Collegian Staff

The Massachusetts Joint Committee on Education last week heard testimony on Gov. William Weld's proposals for sliding scale tuition, turning grants into loans and replacing the Board of Regents with a secretary of education.

Citing the fact that Massachusetts has cut public higher education by 22 percent in the last three years alone, President-Chancellor Joseph Duffey accused the state of backing away from its commitment to higher education and using it as a "cash cow in a time of financial need.

"Yes, this is Massachusetts, the education state," Duffey said, "retreating from its proud heritage and commitment like an Iraqi tank column in full flight."

Weld reiterated his proposal that tuition be put on a sliding scale, meaning that the amount of tuition charged would depend on a student's ability to pay, and that state give loans instead of grants to students in financial need.

Weld also proposed replacing the Board of Regents with an education secretary who would have all the powers the Board of Regents, including the ability to raise or lower tuition.

Duffey, in his testimony before the committee, criticized Weld's proposals, calling them "Ill informed, hastily drawn, panic driven efforts to cut public funding for the resource most important to the future of the Commonwealth, the education to the young men and women whose skills and knowledge will drive our economy and guide our civic life in the decades ahead."

Duffey said that tuition should be raised but the state should provide scholarship support and tuition waivers to those who cannot afford that increase. The power held by the Board of Regents should be placed in the hands of the campus' administrators and Boards of Trustees, he said.

Student Trustee Angus McQuilken and Student Government Association Senator Kenneth Parker (Commuters) also criticized the state's education cuts.

"According to the U.S. Department of Education, our tuition and fees combined are now 80 percent above the national average for a four-year public university," McQuilken said.

He said after his testimony that those called to testify before the committee were overwhelmingly supportive of the state's students and the committee itself was very critical of Weld's proposals.

"The committee was clearly more on the students' side than the governor's," McQuilken said. "They want evidence that the low-income student isn't going to be hurt and there isn't any.

"Weld's people, as of yet, haven't provided any information to the committee or the public about what this is going to do for the students," McQuilken continued. "My feeling is that they don't care."

McQuilken and Parker also spoke in support of Rep. Stan Rosenburg's (D-Amherst) alternative reorganization proposal to give schools autonomy in the administration of their campuses with the education secretary serving as a link between the campuses and the state.

"What public higher education needs in a secretary of education is an advocate for state resources and financial aid," McQuilken said.

"Each campus has different characteristics and different requirements," Parker said. "A secretary of education would be just as poorly equipped to make the specific decisions needed to govern these diverse schools as are the Regents currently. The way to make our state's higher education system efficient and flexible is to give the Boards of Trustees of the various institutions increased autonomy."

A year later: UM still looking for elevator safeguards

By PRESTON P. FORMAN
Collegian Staff

It was a year ago today that an 18-year-old University of Massachusetts freshman plummented to his death in an elevator shaft in Kennedy Residence Hall. Now, in separate efforts, University of Massachusetts Housing Services and Physical Plant officials are trying to avert a similar tragedy.

Director of Housing Services Joseph A. Zannini said recently the safety mechanisms that Joel B. Mangion and an unidentified friend defeated have been re-engineered to prevent access to elevator tops, yet still allow emergency personnel to extract persons trapped in a broken elevator.

Mangion and a friend, a non-University student, were apparently "elevator surfing," or riding on top of an elevator as the car traveled between floors. He died of multiple injuries after he fell off the eighth-floor cross beam between two elevators.

Authorities believe that Mangion and his friend were jumping from the roof of one elevator to the top of another elevator as the two cars moved through the shaft.

Paul Lawler, elevator maintenance supervisor at the Physical Plant, said in his 25 years at the University that it has been a battle to build devices to keep students off the tops of elevators and to prevent damage to elevators.

"It is like warfare — attack and counter-attack," he said. "Whatever we do to the elevators, the students try to undo."

An elevator mechanic for over 30 years, Lawler said in the two decades since Southwest was constructed, refinements have been made continually as students break or defeat safety mechanisms and gain access to the tops of the elevators. He cited the "escape hatch" in the ceiling, which now can only be opened from outside the elevator car by elevator or emergency personnel.

Lawler said several devices were tested that would have automatically shut down the elevator if a safety mechanism was tampered with, but all were deemed inadequate.

He said devices were installed in the Kennedy and Washington towers several weeks ago that will hopefully prevent the misuse of safety features. The three remaining towers should be completed by the end of the month, he said.

"I can't promise that this will work," he said. "We can only try."

The elevators in the Sylvan Residential Area which share a common elevator shaft will also be also be modified but a completion date has not been set, Lawler said.

Lawler said the construction of the devices, the designing of the system as well as the state elevator inspection that is required, has delayed final implementation of the safety devices for the past year.

"I care enough about these kids to try and do something. It's outrageous that I even have to attempt to keep kids off the tops of elevators," he said. "I defy anyone to go to [an elevator manufacturer] and find someone there who can prevent this from happening."

On the education side, Housing Services plans to show the New York City Housing Authority film, "Children Are Too Young to Die," which chronicles elevator accidents which claimed the lives of several children in that city's housing projects.

Meanwhile, residence assistants will continue to discuss the dangers of elevator "surfing" at the beginning of each semester, Zannini said. However, there are no formal educational programs set up at this time.

"We are always going to have someone who plays with the elevator," Zannini said. "What we need to have are people who see this to tell us that this is happening. It is just stupid to be on top of an elevator — that's the bottom line."

Since Mangion's death there have been no other confirmed "elevator surfing" incidents. However, police during spring break last year investigated a report of "surfing" in Coolidge. There have been rumors that "surfing" continues in Southwest, particularly in the "supervator," the one elevator in each tower that is able to stop at each floor.

Zannini said he had no knowledge of any surfing since the death of Mangion. "While it is possible and conceivable that there has been elevator surfing since

400 roll for cancer

By TAMIR LIPTON
Collegian Staff

Some 400 people, decked out in formal attire, filled the Campus Center Auditorium on Thursday night for Casino Night to raise money for the Brain Tumor Society.

Sponsored by the Board of Governors Program Council, Casino Night raised approximately $6,400, according to Sean Linnane, the producer of the whole event.

A permit was obtained from the state which legalized gambling for the night. In return for the permit, the state was paid a percentage of the total earnings, with the rest going to charity.

The Jeff Holmes Jazz Band performed throughout the night until the 1 a.m. closing.

"I think the whole night went very well," Linnane said. "Everyone seemed to know why they were there, and the students who were working did a great job and had a great time."

All guests were charged $5 for admission. Once inside, people were free to bet as much and as often as they wanted.

"I think this is great," said Daniel Menitoff, a UMass student. "You can go out and drink at the bars any night, but one night a year, you can feel like you are in Atlantic City or Las Vegas."

The Black Jack tables had very few empty seats throughout the night. There were tables of $2 and $5 minimum bets. Roulette and Craps were big attractions, while Wheel of Fortune was not crowded.

Students who volunteered their time, dressed in tuxedos and acted as dealers and pit bosses.

"Other than the small problems which occur at every casino, there were no problems," Linnane said. "The students who worked dealt with everything, they deserve a lot of credit."

"I think it's great that the money that I've lost here tonight is going to a worthy charity," said Peter Resnick, a Board of Governors representative from the Greek area. "I just wish I could have won some money instead of losing," he said.

Flying Tigers take-off

Women, children learn the art of self-defense

By TRYSTAN SKEIGH
Collegian Staff

Thirty women and children kicked, chopped and thrust in Greenfield on Sunday afternoon during an open house celebrating the newly-opened Flying Tiger Martial Arts School for Women.

The Flying Tigers, taught by Jamie Shea and Chris Wings, train women in self-defense and Shuri Ryu Karate, an Okinawan martial arts form.

The Flying Tigers started in Greenfield in September 1990, Shea explained, and moved to their present location at 3½ Osgood St. on February 1 of this year.

"We've had a lot of support from all kinds of different people," Wings said. "They have helped us find space, someone donated a telephone, others have given funds. Our students have all been incredibly supportive."

Shea and Wings said they obtained their black belt degrees in Suri Ryu Karate at the Valley Women's Martial Arts School in Easthampton under teachers Janet Aalfs and Beth Holt.

"We still have close connections with VWMA although we are an independent organization," Wings said. Some of the martial arts demonstrations performed during the afternoon included a mix of Flying Tiger and VWMA students, because, Wings explained, "most of our students are just starting and still white belts. So we've asked some VWMA students to come down and help us demonstate some of the upper levels."

The first demonstration was by the Flying Tiger students, and included a variety of basic moves included in the first Kata, or level of Shuri Ryu. A dozen white-belted students twisted, thrust, and kicked in unison, led by the barked commands of Shea and Wings.

Later demonstrations included "Wunsu-Kata," which translates as "strong-armed dumping form," which is the second level of Shuri Ryu, practiced by Yellow belts. The name evolved from a technique for lifting assailants and throwing them.

The last event was a short self-defense workshop, led by Shea and Wings. Wings explained that their self-defense course teaches women about four primary targets on an assailants body — the knees, throat, nose, and eyes. Shea led Flying Tiger students who demonstrated direct blows at the bridge of the nose, grabbing, clutching blows at the throat, kicks to the front of the knee and fingers-first thrusts at the eyes.

"The techniques we teach focus on these vulnerable spots on the assailent's body," Shea said. "They don't require strength, so they're techniques any woman can use."

Wings said the Flying Tigers courses are open to all women and girls twelve-years-old and up. The Karate Course can be joined at any time, with an option of once or twice-a-week classes. The next Self-Defense course will begin on March 19 and will last for 6 weeks, one class per week. The Self-Defense course costs $35. Wings said interested women can call the new Flying Tigers Training Center at 773-3002.

However, he said, "There is a difference in having knowledge and attempting to follow up." He refused to clarify his statement.

Mangion, who was from from West Newton, had an blood-alcohol level of .165 percent when he fell to his death — the equivalent of a case of beer, the medical examiner's office in Springfield said when it released its findings last April.

In November 1973, an 18-year-old non-University student also died in a 15-story fall from an elevator in Washington.

UMass financial aid lobbying group travels to Washington

By THOMAS A. GEORGE
Collegian Correspondent

Registered University of Massachusetts student organization, Students Advocating Financial Aid completed a "historic" junket to Washington D.C. on behalf of all student financial aid recipients last weekend, lobbying to over 250 congressional offices, according to a group member.

This represents the highest number of lobbying appointments in the group's history, according to SAFA Co-president Mary Jo Bazarian. She said the trip was concerned with the up-coming re-authorization of expiring financial aid laws.

SAFA is a program which educates students on financial aid issues and teaches students lobbying techniques, she added.

On Sunday, the second of four days the group spent in Washington, the group was adressed by UMass alum and former SAFA member Silvia Gaudette, as well as Ken McKinerny from the National Association of Student Financial Aid Administrators. Gaudette said he is now working with the Senate Committee on Agriculture, Forestry, and Nutrition.

"After the trip, you will know more about the inner workings of government than a great deal of the country," Gaudette said.

Ken McKinerny who said he received his post secondary education at Northeastern University, said the mission of the students is very important.

"During the meetings, show how important [financial aid] is to you. It is a great help to see some faces, and get some heart into [the presentation]," he said.

NASFAA operates as the representative for the more than 3,100 member institutions, which include public and private four year schools as well as two year and trade schools according to Dallas Martin, president of the organization. NASFAA is instrumental in providing hard information for SAFA, and SAFA provides the hands on expiriences for NASFAA to evaluate their progress by, he added.

Sophomore Cassandra Welch, who had six lobbying appointments Monday morning, said "I was really nervous at first, but once the first interviews were over, I felt much more confident and at ease with the Congressmen."

Bazarian and member Christine Thibodo said they met and were able to speak briefly with District of Columbia "shadow" Senator Jesse Jackson. Junior Laurel Collins, senior Celeste Poulin, and exchange student Manu Gulati said they rode on an elevator with Senator Jesse Helms (R—North Carolina).

Junior Kate Chamberlin said she rode with Senator John Kerry (D—Massachusetts) to the filming of a public service announcement.

"Senator Kerry was receptive and very professional. He said he doesn't want to see five colleges cut, and now is certainly not the time to cut education," she said.

SAFA plans to continue lobbying efforts on the state level, later on in the spring. Bazarian said she testified last Thursday on behalf of SAFA at a Joint Committee meeting on Education in the state house in Boston.

"It was really dissappointing to see the lack of student support at the hearing, this year especially with the proposed changes in funding," she said.

Who's flag anyway? A critical look at right-wingers

I would like to address some of the weapons used against the non-conservatives during this past week of puerile antics. First there is the United States Constitution. We need to consider the fact that the constitution was written in 1789. Since then our society has changed drastically, to say the least. For instance, slavery is no longer technically legal in this country, and women have been allowed to enter the world outside of the home (although they are still unable to leave the home). But just because women and people of color have received nominal rights doesn't mean that they are not still oppressed. There are still many problems with the way our society is set up, and some of the laws of our country need to be changed.

Jessame Hannus

So, we can't go quoting the laws put down by our forefathers as though they are the infallible guidelines for our country until the end of time. And don't tell me I'm unpatriotic because I find fault with our country. Our constitution was set up to allow for a changing society. We pride ourselves on freedom and equality, so I shouldn't be called unpatriotic for demanding my rights. I have the right to find fault with our government and to attempt to change it. That right is theoretically what this country is all about. Of course, who am I to talk about my rights? The constitution was not written with women in mind. Nor was it written for people of color, or even poor white men and women. This is why we cannot take what was written two centuries ago as absolute law. And yes, there is a law in this state against sodomy, the definition of which includes oral sex. Sorry, no blow-jobs for you guys! And there is also a law against sexual intercourse before marriage. And how many of us have broken either one or both of these laws? And how many people would like to see these laws enforced?

Another weapon used against those who do not rant and rave against the rights of others, was the Bible. I am actually rather nervous about discussing the Bible because I know that it invokes very strong feelings, but I find that I just can't ignore this issue. The Bible is nothing more than a set of rules drawn up by a culture that existed centuries ago. The rules and beliefs of the Bible were set up by the men who were in power at the time, just like the constitution. Also, people seem to forget that there was a human civilization before the Bible was written. Even in reading Genesis I discovered much that could very well have been propaganda against an existing and acceptable way of life. I also have a question for people. Do you honestly believe all that the Bible tells us about women's role in society? If so, then you must not believe that women ought to have the right to vote, or to work outside of the home. You must believe that it is women's God-given duty to bear children and obey her husband in all things. You must believe that women are not real human beings, never mind equal citizens. Not many people would argue that women ought not be equal to men in society. They would most definitely loose the argument.

I also find it odd that there is so much controversy about the separation of church and state. It seems odd to me for two reasons. One is that our country tells us that we are free to worship or not to worship as we please. If all children were forced to learn the teachings of the Bible in school, it would be a violation of their rights. The second reason that I find this controversy odd is that the church is basically a state of its own, with its own political structure, and the idea that all children of the United States should be taught to live by the laws of another state is totally ludicrous.

I have noticed a trend in the argumentative tactics of people in power when they feel that their position is threatened by the rabble of the day. They often argue that since things are the way they are, that is the way they ought to be. They are not dumb. People are easily impressed by weighty words full of pomp and ceremony, such as are used in the Bible and the constitution. I can only hope that people will learn to question what they are told, and abandon the belief that anything that has survived the years is right simply for that reason. We must evolve in order to survive.

What's acceptable in the US is an outrage in Belfast

The kid was approached by the cops. "What are you doing out here, kid? What have you been up to?" they demanded. They kept asking him if he knew anything about a crime that happened in his neighborhood. Then, they searched him.

Pamela McCarthy

Another kid was arrested. The cop thought he was being too flip, so he beat him up.

The new family in the neighborhood had problems, big problems. They were harassed. Their daughter was cursed at on her way to school. They were told to "go back with their own kind."

So, where do you suppose these things happen? Belfast? Derry? Try Mission Hill, in Boston. Try the South Bronx in New York City. Try Suburbia, U.S.A.

This Sunday is Saint Patrick's Day. Every year, Irish Americans get together, get drunk and lament the problems the Irish have in Ulster. "Give Ireland back to the Irish" is the common battle cry of the day. We hate the British colonizers, who took away the sovereignty of Ireland. (Even if our relatives did move to a land that was also colonized by the British.)

We try to remember what our ancestors went through at the hands of the British. I was told how much my great-grandparents hated the English. I learned how they had to watch their backs in parts of Boston, since all of the WASPs would think that beating them up was a fun way to spend an afternoon. I was told that the slur for that part of my ancestry is 'mick.'

Every year, I see at least one article on the injustices of stop and searches in Belfast, the police harassment of Irish boys, and the terror inflicted on the Irish people by the British.

Charles Stuart murdered his wife Carol, and blamed it on a Black man. No one wept when innocent Black men were stopped on the streets of Mission Hill and searched. (You know, just like what happens in Belfast.) Hey, after all, they could be murderers. They could be gang members. They could be drug pushers.

Forget the Constitution. That's only for White people.

When someone complains of job discrimination, or racism, or poverty, or all three, no one wants to hear it. Instead, you'll hear about how someone's immigrant grandparents came here and were laughed at for their accent and name. I keep hearing about the "No Irish Need Apply" signs that were plastered on the doors of businesses. "We got ahead. We got out of the rut. Why can't these people?" say many second and third-generation Irish-Americans.

It's ironic that while so many Irish-Americans self-righteously scream over the fact that the Irish in Ulster are subject to abuse, many of us are outdoing the British. Let's face it. We are not the most progressive people in America. We make excuses for our bigotry. We think that because Ireland was colonized and land was taken from our ancestors, we have instant empathy with the horrors the Irish in Ulster now experience. Let's forget that our country (yes, we are Americans now) is guilty of the same thing. This place was not empty when the first Europeans got here. But it's easy for us to forget that.

We think that because our grandparents, or our great-grandparents were used as doormats and kickbags for the WASPs, we are excused from judgement. We can do what we want.

Sure we can. Most of us are doing well now. We live in the suburbs. We are very middle-class. We have money, security, and social standing now. In New England at least, Irish-Americans are common. It's a comfortable and easy existence.

So do me a favor. Shut up about the poor, oppressed people in Northern Ireland. We are not oppressed. We don't live there. We're Yankees now, and like most White Yanks, we are spoiled rotten. We are the colonizers. This time, we are the oppressors.

Keep off: Right-wingers

The legalization of a safe, easily accessible abortion has been one of the biggest triumphs in the movement to end the oppression of women. The pro-life people at yesterday's rally showed not only that they are for the continued oppression of women but also against basic human rights as well. There has been a ludicrous assumption taken among the pro-life movement that the majority of women having abortions would be able to support their children if forced to do so. However, the common trend shows that the majority of American people living below the poverty line are single women with children. Tell me please, Mr. Marvelias, are you willing to pay extra taxes to support these women and children?

In her speech at Wednesday's rally, Michelle Colitsas, of Collegians for Life at Mount Holyoke College, said that women had no constitutional right to choose to abort a child. As was shown by the rejection of the ERA in 1982, women are not guaranteed any of the rights of the Constitution. It is these right wing conservatives who have prevented the passing of this amendment and kept women form achieving equality in every social aspect of society.

It was also indicated at the rally by a local conservative that the function of our government is to use all our resources to stop murder. This statement is completely out of line in light of the fact that our country has just spent 45 days putting all of our resources into the countless murders of Iraqi people.

We feel that the legalization of abortion and the availability of birth control have accounted for the major advances in the women's rights movement. To take away either of these advances would be to plung women back into the oppressive domestic roles we have fought so hard to escape.

Just say 'No!' to bigotry

I can't concentrate. I want to be somewhere else — namely the front steps of the Student Union. My usual response to such gatherings of protestors is to walk around. For one thing, I find taking sides to be ridiculous. For another, seeing the same faces at all the rallies year after year leads me to think it's the rally that's important, not the issue.

There have been too many times in the eight years I have worked and studied at the university when I have felt offended, annoyed, insulted and alienated. After reading Wednesday's front page report about the 'talk-show' held the night before, I became outraged and, for the first time, scared. If you need to know what it is I'm scared of, it's the Ku Klux Klan at UMass.

I needed to do something, but what? I called around campus and thought of writing to the Collegian, but I question the effectiveness of writing. I've already seen the response of the offending parties to opinions they dislike. When I heard the commotion at the Student Union, I expected to see a handful of freedom advocates rallying against a gang of sexist, homophobic, and conservatives. When I saw the numbers of people on this campus, gay and straight, who refused to let hateful bigotry and harrassment slide by unnoticed, I was overwhelmed with gratitude that there is still a community here that I can feel a part of.

YOUR DAILY HOROSCOPE
By JEANE DIXON

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Business negotiations go well now, and romance looks promising. Share your exuberance with those closest to your heart. Plunge into a favorite hobby or social activity this evening.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): A romantic adventure could lead to a permanent partnership. Travel is favored, and you may feel reluctant about it. A change of scenery will give you a bright new perspective. Profits rise.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Be careful if you are contemplating domestic changes. Moving too swiftly could cause setbacks. Loved on may not agree with you on expenditures. Make intelligent concessions.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Strengthen an alliance with someone at a distance. Financial details must be kept confidential. Be patient with a young person. Something that is said in jest could be taken seriously.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Organize your time better to increase productivity. See things as they really are and you will minimize your chances of being disappointed. Frustration turns to joy.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Keep your ideas under wraps while learning how to operate from behind the scenes. Your differences with mate or partner are not as serious as they appear; compromise.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Tap an unusual talent or source of information. An expert's financial advice could increase your holdings. An old grievance is apt to be settled in your favor. Crystal-clear communication enhances romance.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Financial matters continue to merit your close scrutiny. Weigh all the pros and cons before making a long-term decision. Your social life accelerates and so does romance.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Talk a business matter over with close associates. Allow plenty of latitude for divergent opinions. Friends may encourage you to publish your ideas. Consult an expert.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Although new methods must be adopted to keep abreast of the times, it is wise to retain some of your conservative policies. An unexpected windfall allows you to expand your business operation.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Let yourself go when in the mood to utilize your talents. Someone needs an escape from the daily routine. Extravagant gestures could put quite a dent in your budget.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Know where you stand professionally. Meet with higher-ups behind closed doors. A new partnership or job offer is in the works. A fun evening will be the icing on the cake.

After 0-27 season, Minutewomen look to improve next year

By GREG SUKIENNIK
Collegian Staff

A cursory glance at the University of Massachusetts women's basketball team's final statistics suggests a season of disappointment. However, they don't tell the entire story about a team that never stopped trying.

The Minutewomen did not win a single game all season long, finishing 0-27 overall and 0-18 in Atlantic-10 Conference play. The numbers say that UMass only hit 37 percent of their shots from the field, were outscored by an average 74-46 margin and turned the ball over 29 times a game.

However, while those are actual numbers, they don't tell the whole story, as coach Kathy Hewelt explains.

"The unfortunate thing is that it's hard to see the team's improvement because of the bottom line," said Hewelt.

In particular, Hewelt stressed the improvement that the Minutewomen made at the season's end on offense and over the course of the year in the area of maturity.

While the Minutewomen did improve offensively at the end of the season — a 64 point, 47.7 percent field goal percentage outburst against St. Bonaventure in the A-10 tournament — they did suffer difficulties in putting points on the scoreboard.

Only center Keyburn McCusker averaged over ten points a game — she led the team with 15.2 points per game — and no player besides McCusker shot over 40 percent from the field.

"Thirty seven percent is certainly not acceptable at this level," admitted Hewelt. However, she noted the loss of Patty Robak [who left the team] and Trish Riley [injury] the team's starting guards as a partial explanation for those numbers.

"If our one, two and three spots [point guard, shooting guard and small forward respectively] were settled, we would have had more balance. We had no outside scoring and that allowed the opposition to drop down inside on Keyburn and Lisa [Ireland]."

More important, perhaps, was the manner in which a team comprised mainly of freshmen and sophomores underwent "baptism by fire," a common Hewelt phrase during the season. Despite the lack of wins, the Minutewomen did improve, according to Hewelt.

"Our young kids grew up and took a step forward," pointed out the third-year coach. "It's overlooked that we played pretty good defense because of the scoring margins. We held Rutgers to 62 points at their place, and they finished in the top four."

"It was a strength of ours that in a horrendous year, we were up and ready to play 95 percent of the time, and that's pretty damned high," Hewelt continued. "At times you would have expected us fold our cards, but we didn't. These kids want to win."

Looking to the future, the Minutewomen return all but McCusker, who will graduate with the fourth-best scoring mark in UMass women's history.

McCusker and Hewelt were both confident that the experience the Minutewomen gained will help the team improve.

"I see a lot of good things in the future," said McCusker. "A lot of our young players got experience that most other young players don't get their first or second year. There is some talent on this team...every player can work on that over the summer."

Hewelt hopes that her team can remember this season and by doing so, put it behind them.

"It can be a great motivator, because no one wants to go through this again," she said. "Our kids will not forget."

Men's gymnasts take fourth New England title in five years

Steve Christiansen won the pommel horse with a score of 9.55, helping the University of Massachusetts men's gymnastics team to the New England championships this past weekend.

By MICHAEL MORRISSEY
Collegian Correspondent

While the University of Massachusetts men's gymnastics team may not have accomplished all of its' goals, they still won their fourth New England Championship in five years on Sunday in Burlington, VT.

The Minutemen were true to their word, as they scored 263.1 points and beat Southern Connecticut (259.4), the team they sought revenge against for an early season loss. Springfield College finished third, with a score of 257.55.

Sophomore Steve Christensen had an excellent weekend, as he compiled an second place all-around score of 54.4 on Sunday. His 54.15 all-around at the Eastern Collegiate Atheletic Conference Championships on Saturday was good enough for second place.

"Everybody showed some bright spots," said Coach Roy Johnson, who was pleased with his team's performance this weekend.

The team swept four of six events in the New Englands. UMass took the floor exercise, rings, pommel horse and parallel bars, and missed winning the vault by just .05 points.

Christensen's pommel horse routine (9.55) was good enough for first, and almost good enough for a team record. Freshman Joe Haran also had a good meet, as he scored a 53.15 on the all-around. Haran tied for first place on the rings (9.0),and finished third in the horse, with a score of 9.3.

In addition, Jason Braud finished fourth in the vault, scoring a 9.0. Braud also placed on the floor routine with a score of 9.4. Bill Sayman earned third place on the paralell bars (9.1).

Although they did not compile the 270 points they had hoped to, Johnson said he thought his team did well.

"We got off to a good start," he said. "But we didn't do real well on the vault, and only okay on the parallel bars."

Johnson said he was sure his team would not let down next week against Cortland, the last warm-up before the Eastern Intercollegiate Gymnastics League Championships.

"We usually have our best meet of the year against Cortland — we want to get 270 [points]," he said.

UMass gets NIT bid, will host game Friday, vs. LaSalle

The University of Massachusetts men's basketball team will host LaSalle at the Cage Friday night in the first round of the National Invitational Tournament, the NIT Selection Committee announced yesterday.

"I'm happy for the seniors more than anything," UMass coach John Calipari said. "It's amazing they get to play another game in front of their home crowd . . . I know spring break starts this weekend. I'm begging for the students to leave after the game. We need that kind of support."

News of the home date was a pleasant surprise for the 17-11 Minutemen, who spent last week wondering if they'd receive a bid at all, no less at the Cage.

"It means the NIT Committee was impressed with our fan support," Calipari said. The Minutemen sold out 10 of 12 games at the Cage this season.

LaSalle, 19-9, is a member of the Metro Atlantic Conference. The Explorers' top player is senior guard Doug Overton, who is projected as a possible first round pick in the upcoming NBA draft.

The game will mark the second NIT appearance in two years for the Minutemen (17-11). Ticket information, game time and other details will be announced later in the week.

Uneven bars do in Women's gymnastics

By LYNN FRANKEL
Collegian Correspondent

The University of Massachusetts women's gymnastics team won three out of the four events this weekend against top-ranked University of New Hampshire. Unfortunately, one event, the uneven parallel bars, stood in the way of a UMass victory, as the Wildcats prevailed, 186.9-184.45.

The bars, the first event of the meet last Saturday, was a complete 'disaster' for the Minutewomen.

Coach Alfie Mitchell described the event as "weird." He said his athletes hit all of their big tricks and that the breaks, or falls, came during the easy portions of their routines.

"I was impressed with the way our team salvaged the meet," said Mitchell. UMass defeated the UNH squad on the vault [47.15 points], the floor exercise [46.65] and the balance beam [47.0].

"The only negative of the meet was the loss," said Mitchell.

Tammy Marshall led the team once again. Marshall scored an impressive 9.7 on the beam and established a new school record in the floor exercise with a 9.7. Abby May scored a personal best on the balance beam with a 9.55, placing second behind Marshall.

The team, currently ranked seventh in the Northeast, is looking to improve their standing this weekend as they take on West Virginia and UNH once again. Mitchell is hoping that high scores will improve their ranking in the Northeast as well as in the Atlantic-10 Conference.

Baker cancels trip to Eastern Jerusalem

US to push for concessions on territories

By BARRY SCHWEID
AP Diplomatic Writer

CAIRO, Egypt — An outbreak of violence in Jerusalem forced Secretary of State James A. Baker, III to cancel a planned visit to the predominantly Arab but Israeli-occupied Eastern sector of the city.

Baker met here yesterday with Egyptian President Hosni Mubarak after saying he will not ask Arabs to make gestures for peace until he knows how far Israel is prepared to go in matching them.

He was heading yesterday afternoon to Jerusalem, where his call for unspecified concessions by Israel already is causing problems.

In canceling his scheduled visit to East Jerusalem as part of his 10-day tour of the Middle East, Baker denounced Sunday's fatal stabbing of four women in mostly Jewish West Jerusalem as "tragic and appalling acts."

Nonetheless, Baker's spokesperson, Margaret D. Tutwiler, said he would follow through with plans to meet today with a group of Palestinian Arabs at the home of the U.S. consul-general in West Jerusalem.

Arab participants in the planned meeting are listed only by occupation. U.S. officials maintained they do not know whether delegation members have ties with the Palestine Liberation Organization.

The Bush administration suspended talks with the PLO last June saying factions had engaged in terrorist acts despite a pledge by PLO Chairman Yasser Arafat to abandon such tactics.

If Baker meets with Palestinians endorsed by Arafat, it could effectively renew the dialogue and put pressure on Israel to yield parts or all of the West Bank and Gaza.

Israeli troops early yesterday shot dead six Arab gunmen attempting a cross-border raid from Jordan. And three Israeli soldiers were wounded in the clash near a farming collective in northern Israel.

In Jerusalem, the alleged assailant, an Arab from occupied Gaza, said he was delivering "a message for Baker" with Sunday's stabbings. Israeli police wounded and captured him. After the attack, angry Israelis shouted "Baker go home!" and anti-Arab slogans.

Baker was beginning his first visit to Israel yesterday afternoon in an effort to promote peace talks with Arab nations as well as an Israeli-Palestinian dialogue.

Baker's spokesperson expressed his condolences to the families of the stabbing victims.

"He was very deeply saddened by the senseless and tragic acts of violence," Tutwiler said. "It is obviously inappropriate to visit sites (in East Jerusalem) on the heels of this tragic and appalling act of violence," Tutwiler said.

"But we must not let these rejectionists define what is possible," she added. "They reject hope and reconciliation."

The mostly Arab old city fell to Israeli troops in the 1967 Six-Day War, ending 19 years of Jordanian occupation. President Bush has called the Israelis occupiers, putting East Jerusalem in the same occupation category as West Bank and Gaza.

Commission makes headway on SGA disputes

By JEFF CLEARY
Collegian Correspondent

The Commission on Student Governance met again last Saturday for over eight hours, agreeing that the main source of most of the problems center on a lack of communication and trust between administrators and student leaders.

The commission, composed of administrators, faculty and students, was designed to restructure the student government. It focuses on the problems of the current Student Government Association structure.

John Hunt, associate University of Massachusetts English professor and member of the commission, said there seemed to be an improper balance toward the vice chancellor of Student Affairs and away from the students. When administrators and staff have problems with students, Hunt said, they go to the vice chancellor instead of dealing with student leaders.

Hunt, also a Faculty Senate member, said the Faculty Senate has great influence over other groups on campus because they have the best access to administrators — more than student leaders could have.

Previously, he said, the Senate used its influence to stop the sale of cigarettes on campus, against some student objection.

Marc Kenen, vice president of the Graduate Student Senate, said the GSS runs relatively smoothly because, "We have an unspoken rule that we do not bring things to the GSS to divide it."

Jeff Turco, SGA speaker and member of the Republican Club, said more staff members need to be in positions to help students.

Members of the commission also expressed a desire to more clearly define the roles of each segment of the SGA.

At the meeting, three new undergraduates were added to the commission: Manuel Bento from the Off Campus Housing Office, James Molesworth of WMUA and Laura Silver of the Lesbian Gay Bisexual Alliance.

The commission also defined the goal of the SGA as one of responsibility "for representing students in finance and quality of life decisions on campus," according to Dan Chesnicka, former speaker of the SGA.

Saddam's troops shelled by rebels; Iraq reports control of Karbala

NICOSIA, Cyprus (AP) — Saddam Hussein's troops shelled Shiite Muslim rebels in mosques in the besieged holy city of Karbala, and defected by the tens of thousands elsewhere, opposition leaders reported yesterday.

They said the Shiite fighters, as well as civilians trapped in the crossfire, were being slaughtered, and that 500 have been killed or wounded since Friday.

Government officials in Baghdad claimed Republican Guard troops have re-established control of the city, 100 miles south of the Iraqi capital, after several days of fierce combat.

They gave no details, but Saddam's forces appear to have been isolating centers of resistance, such as Karbala and the southern port of Basra, and pounding them with artillery and tanks.

Karbala, famed for its mosques, is revered by Shiites as the burial place of Imam Hussein, grandson of the Prophet Mohammed and one of the sect's principal saints. It has a population of about 120,000.

Exile leaders met in Beirut to coordinate their campaign to oust Saddam. Ayatollah Taqi al -Mudaressi, leader of the Shiite Islamic Labor Organization, told reporters that Republican Guardsmen were "ruthlessly and indiscriminately shelling the holy city of Karbala."

"They're massacring the people there," he said. "I have sent letters to the world's religious leaders, including the pope, to prevent Saddam's criminal regime from massacring the Iraqi people."

There was no independent confirmation of the reports on the rebellions by the Shiites in the south and by Kurdsnin the north Rasra and low-income Shiite suburbs of Baghdad.

The Kurds have claimed major advances since the uprising began March 1, following Saddam's crushing military defeat by the U.S.-led coalition force that liberated Kuwait.

Mudaressi said two army brigades, about 10,000 soldiers, "have joined the popular uprising" in the south since Sunday. He claimed the Shiites have captured 42 helicopter gunships and 11 surface-to-surface missiles since the revolt began.

Jalal Talabani, leader of the Patriotic Union of Kurdistan, claimed in Beirut that at least three Iraqi Army divisions — 30,000 to 36,000 men — have "joined the people along with their tanks, artillery batteries and other weapons."

Kurdish officials said the Patriotic Union and its ally, the Kurdistan Democratic Party, have seized large areas of the northern provinces and were poised to attack the key oil center of Kirkuk, 100 miles north of Baghdad.

The Kurds have battled for years for autonomy for their mountainous homeland, which includes parts of Turkey, Iran, Syria and the Soviet Union.

They make up about 20 percent of Iraq's 17 million population. The Shiites, who live mainly in the south, form a 55 percent majority. Saddam's ruling elite is overwhelmingly Sunni Muslim, a sect that totals about 40 percent of Iraq's people, including most Kurds.

Talabani and Mesut Barzani of the Kurdish Democratic Party met secretly last week with Turkish officials, Turkey announced yesterday.

The meeting apparently represented a change in Turkey's policy of trying to block Kurdish autonomy in northern Iraq. Turkey has feared that a Kurdish state would encourage Kurdish separatists in Turkey.

Talabani said the opposition forces meeting in Beirut agreed on a goal of establishing a "democratic, federal Iraq."

Baghdad's state-run newspapers acknowledged the opposition meeting. Al-Thawra, the Baath mouthpiece, declared in an editorial: "They want to bring down the government and replace it with stooges who receive their instruction from foreign ambassadors."

Volunteers help bring lambs to life

By DANIEL J. LYONS
Collegian Correspondent

Almost 200 lambs were born during February at the Hampshire College Farm Center under the watchful eyes of 60 volunteer workers, according to the program's director.

Roberta Myers, director of the Farm Center, said the center is not a "real" farm in the strictest sense, but rather an educational institution.

"Our product isn't lambs, or money, or crops really, it's education," she said. "If I were running this farm strictly for profit, it would be done very differently. I probably wouldn't be so hospitable to volunteers. . .But since this is an educational institution, we feel we have a duty of education people."

Myers said the center program "is not always open to anyone, unless we have something that needs a lot of people."

The primary times when volunteers are needed, she said, are in February during the height of the Lambwatch program. During Lambwatch, volunteers help monitor pregnant ewes.

Volunteers are also needed when the sheep are being sorted, she said.

Myers said people are motivated to volunteer for the Center "from whatever comes from inside them."

"It's an opportunity that's available and people put into it what they want to, and they get out of it something that's of interest," she said. "And it's fun, if you do something that's really mental, it's really fun to do something that's physical."

People interested in volunteering to work for the Farm Center should write a letter, including a method of contact and an area of interest, to Roberta Myers at the Hampshire College Farm Center. All inquiries will be placed on a list for notification when volunteer positions arise.

An employee dumping trash outside the Hampden Dining Commons on Saturday, reported being struck by a paint pellet which was shot from the lower Coolidge Residence Hall area. Six other shots landed on the ground near him and the man received a bruise on his back.

A man was struck in the face Saturday morning at Lincoln Apts. after he chased two subjects who he allegedly saw kick in a window.

Arrests

- Lewis J. Newell, 20, of Stoneham, was arrested Friday night on University Drive for allegedly being underaged in the possession of alcohol, operating an uninspected motor vehicle, drinking from an open alcoholic container, and was cited for operating without headlights.
- Peter Z. Ribeiro, 20, of New Haven, CT, was arrested early Saturday morning at the Worcester Dining Commons for alleged disorderly conduct.
- Phillip S. Halperin, 20, of Stoughton, was arrested Saturday evening at Lot 50 for allegedly being underaged in the possession of alcohol.
- Martin W. Gatrost, 21, of Waban, was arrested at the Student Union Saturday night for two counts of alleged possession of a dangerous weapon. In the same incident, Kerry A. Mauey, 19, of Brighton, was arrested for alleged disorderly conduct.
- Jouhn Charles Vincent Casilli Jr., 19, of Somerset, was arrested Saturday at the Southwest "Horseshoe" for allegedly being underaged in the possession of alcohol.
- John S. Ziemba, 22, of Ludlow, was arrested early Sunday morning for allegedly operating under the influence of alcohol and was cited for speeding.

Jewish students at Hampshire struggle for acceptance

By ALISON BUCKHOLTZ
Collegian Staff

Hampshire College is small, and the group of Hampshire students who gathered for a meeting on a rainy evening are wary because of its small size.

Their views are unpopular on campus, and until recently, unspoken. Some hesitate to give their names. Phrases like "feeling reined in" and "not belonging" dot their speech, along with "coming out" — not as gays, but as Jewish students on a campus thought to be open to a diversity of cultures.

"For me, the idea of 'coming out as a Jew' is perfect at Hampshire," said Hampshire College junior Michael Seltzer. "Here there is an environment where Jewish identity. . .is something you keep hidden."

Some Jewish students at Hampshire, concerned their cultural experience is being systematically ignored and that political opinion against Israel has crossed the boundary into anti-Semitism, have gathered to address these new concerns.

A steady stream of anti-Semitic graffiti, Hampshire's denial of Judaism's cultural legitimacy, and other students' willingness to negatively label "out of the closet" Jews formed the group's new agenda, members say.

Hampshire's ad-hoc Jewish Student group claims "no uniform political ideology, so we can be open to all Jewish students here," Seltzer says.

Their largest meeting to date gathered last spring, after the phrase "Kill the Jews" was smeared in butter on the windows of the faculty lounge.

Last semester the tension intensified when the "Kill the Jews" and "Destroy Israel" were scrawled in library bathrooms across campus, in Franklin Patterson Hall and in Emily Dickinson Hall, according to freshman Brooke Leviton.

"Whenever racist, homophobic, or anti-Semitic graffiti is found, the administration sends out a letter saying there's an investigation, but you never hear beyond that," Leviton said.

As a result, some Jewish students feel "angry and scared," she said. "You don't know who's writing it, or even who you could be talking to anymore."

In fact, according to Hampshire's Director of Public Safety Jim Lyons, "One student has been asked to leave campus" in a tenuous connection with the graffiti, "but no criminal charges have been brought up." The investigations are still "semi-active," he said.

Unlike the situation at other area colleges, where the Jewish student communities are larger, formally organized, and most readily self-identify as Jews, Jewish students who are "out" at Hampshire often end up feeling more isolated and alone after anti-Semitic incidents that remain unresolved, according to Seltzer.

"This makes it more complicated to maintain your identity as a Jew," he said. "On your own, you have to find other people 'out' as Jews to share the experience with you. But even if you're 'out' your identification as a Jew still isn't acknowledged by others at Hampshire."

Cultural acknowledgement is the main goal that members of the Jewish Student group seek.

"Religion is not cool at Hampshire, and people here see Judaism only as a religion, not a culture," said sophomore Isaac Bromberg.

"We're politically isolated very quickly," said senior Steve Deutch, "but we're also culturally isolated because Judaism 'isn't a culture,' so all we're left with is religion — which means that we're left with nothing, since this is Hampshire. Maybe that's why we're afraid, because we're discounted. We're nothing in the eyes of other people."

In Rebecca Gutterman's experience, others "aren't open to hearing the whole story."

"Judaism isn't just my religion, it's my background," she said. "There's a lack of understanding that goes beyond political viewpoints."

Unfortunately, members say, personal opinion and prejudice on campus interferes with institutional processes. When Hampshire "writes us off as being part of the larger White majority," according to Bromberg, "it's the Jewish Student Group that suffers."

"We're always having to prove a valid reason for [the group's] existence. . .people question why we need a chunk of the budget, what this group can do that others can't, why we need a certain space to have meetings," Bromberg recalled. "But money and distribution of resources should be proportionate for all groups."

Since Judaism's legitimacy is questioned at Hampshire, however, so is the group's legitimacy. But what's worse, members say, is that informal anti-Semitism is not questioned. "There is a tendency at Hampshire toward a hierarchy of oppression," Seltzer said, adding Jewish oppression is seen as the least important, if it is considered at all.

"In one 'ism' class, the professor left it up to the Jews in the class to prove there was Jewish oppression," Seltzer said.

"In another class, when people said offensive things about Jews, the professor and other students let it go," he said. "Things that affect other groups, that would be an affront to other groups, are consciously ignored for us. We are consciously asked to look at our own racism, sexism, homophobia, but anti-Semitism isn't included in that. Why?"

Because anti-Semitism isn't seen as "real," according to Deutch, "We're left to stand up for ourselves, do things on our own. We all see the anti-Semitism on campus, but we don't know how to make people aware of it because they want to ignore it."

The solution, according to freshman Jonathan Miller, is "more, and more open, discourse. . .That's what Hampshire is supposed to be about."

The recent teach-in's about the Persian Gulf War, and the constant parade of opinion on the UMass Student Union steps only serves to highlight what Miller sees as Hampshire's lack of dialogue on current events and its unquestioning "blanket liberal, anti-conservative" stance.

"I love Hampshire, but it has its problems," Seltzer agreed, alluding to what he said is an intolerance of a different opinion.

"A lot of issues aren't addressed," he said. "There is no discourse, for example, regarding the issues we're bringing up. Zero."

One positive step, he suggests, would be for the administration to acknowledge "a Jewish cultural community at this college, and treat us as such. There also needs to be a program during Holocaust Awareness Week. There's a tremendous amount of insensitivity about the Holocaust at Hampshire, to the point where people trivialize it."

Other improvements would follow if non-Jewish students made it easier for Jews at Hampshire to 'come out,'' members say, by realizing that Jews do not act or think as a political mass.

"As a Jew here, I'm somehow condemned for everything [that goes on in the Middle East]," Leviton said. "I'm made responsible for everything. When people find out I'm Jewish, they confront me with, 'What about Israel?'"

The assumptions follow, whether or not one identifies a political stance, often frustrates the "coming-out' process. "If you apologize for an Israeli policy, it's demeaning, but people assume certain things about you if you don't have a disclaimer," she said.

"There's a look of surprise. If it happens more than once, I start to wonder, 'Should I say (that I'm Jewish?'" she said.

Differing opinions about Israel, according to Seltzer, have nothing to do with the real issue of being accepted as an ethnic group.

"It's not about political expression — it's our experience of who we are as Jewish Americans," he said. "We want to present our identity and be proud of it, and have others acknowledge it."

As the situation stands now, the automatic labels given to Jews who identify as such "take on their own personality, and stereotype you," Bromberg said.

"You find that you thought you were in a place that people thought openly, but it's not really different from anyplace else. I don't want to be judged by people without them knowing me," Bromberg said.

Working in such small numbers against a potential backlash of opinion "makes you realize what's important to you," Guttermman said. "You don't know it's there until you're faced with it. It is difficult here, but hopefully if you feel good about your Judaism you can be proud."

Judaism, according to Seltzer, is the most basic bond members of the Jewish Student group share, though they may be at odds on political and social issues. To him, that is enough.

"We don't represent the Jewish community at Hampshire," he said. "We don't even agree with each other half the time. But we share a common identity, and we want that identity to be acknowledged and treated with the same sensitivity and respect as any other."

EDITORIAL/OPINION

The opinions on this page are those of the individual writer or cartoonist and do not necessarily reflect the views of the Collegian or the University unless otherwise noted.

Where are the Democrats?

You'd think we'd already be rolling our eyes by now. You'd think that family members and friends would already be arguing over the best people for the job, the best topics for mudslinging.

But we're not.

It's March 1991. The presidential election is a mere 16 months away and no one from the Democratic party has come out and made an official bid for that esteemed position.

Meredith O'Brien

In March 1987, we already knew who was running for president, and could make a pretty accurate guess at who was gaining popularity with the general public. The primary campaigns were gearing into full swing and everyone was excited. With Reagan out of the picture, it would be a real race.

But not this year.

It seems as though the Democrats are afraid to announce anyone as a potential candidate. They emerged from the meeting of the head Democratic honchos last week without so much as a whimper. Gone was the vigor, intensity and ambition that heralded their 1987 strategy meeting. The 1991 Democrats were hardly raring to go, to put up their best people against the Republican candidate.

The Congressional votes, cast in January, to back economic sanctions instead of military action, is what is stopping them, along with an astronomically high popularity for Bush in the aftermath of a highly successful American military excursion.

Watching the thousands of Americans across the country waving their flags, singing patriotic songs and praising the military, Bush seems invincible, untouchable. The public backs him, feels he did the right thing defending "Kuwaiti freedom," defending "democracy." They feel proud to be Americans.

Meanwhile, the majority of the public looks at the Democrats and remembers that they voted against use of troops to trounce Iraq's Saddam Hussein. They wanted to use more peaceful sanctions.

Now who's going to look like the wimp?

Democrats were seen as unpatriotic and lacking in support of the troops. Ted Kennedy (D-Mass.), a leading liberal, was ignored and booed in late January when he went to bid a small group of soldiers leaving for the Gulf farewell. The perception that his vote was not against war, but against the troops extends to most Democrats.

But it's not as though we really want to see a dirty, mudslinging campaign devoid of issues and substance. Long, drawn-out campaigns are an atrocious waste of time and money anyway. The problem with the Democrats lying so low, not putting forth any potential candidates (or sending out the proverbial "feelers" to the voters to see what type of reception candidates would get), is that their inaction makes Bush seem stronger and more righteous in everything he does and says.

They're virtually giving Bush his re-election on a shiny, silver platter — no complaints, no competition.

If they can't put out a single candidate who can avoid the seemingly deadly war issue and prod Bush in vulnerable areas they might as well give up now.

Since Aug. 2, when Iraq invaded Kuwait, Bush has completely ignored domestic issues (not that he was paying much mind to them before the Gulf crisis). While unemployment continues to escalate, the S and L crisis still looms and the recession still haunts, Bush can only talk about victory and "kicking Saddam Hussein's ass."

Granted, many welcomed the ditching of politics to unify the country, but while we were waving the flags, Americans are losing their jobs and their bank accounts. Their taxes are being increased to compensate for poor fiscal planning and governmental debacles costing them millions of dollars.

And yet the Democrats remain silent. Silent because they are afraid. But the longer they remain silent, the more we can all anxiously place our bets on what neato duds Dan will wear to the inaugural ball.

Conservatives are anything but that

This editorial comes in response to the ignorance of the Conservative Alliance.

I have always thought that the conservatives were farther "right" on the political scale, while the liberals were farther "left." To give a very general outline which excludes most political philosophies, I would create this arrangement: Socialist, Democrat, Republican, Libertarian. On the left of the scale, the government is the main institution; everything is government-owned and government-regulated. Moving farther right, the government stays away from individual affairs. Democrats, for instance, concern themselves more with issues such as social security, welfare, and taxes than do Republicans.

Republicans are often referred to as conservatives while Democrats are considered liberals or at least more liberal than Republicans. This makes no sense to me.

I am Libertarian, which is even farther right on the political scale than are Republicans. You would call me an ultra-conservative. I would say that I am an ultra-liberal.

The laissez-faire attitude of the Republican party is even more a concern for the Libertarian. (For those of you who do not know what a laissez-faire attitude is: Don't worry. Ignorance is strength.) I want the government to LEAVE ME ALONE. No taxes, no programs — just me working for myself in order to survive.

But wait. The Conservative (Republican) Alliance is PRO-LIFE! The conservative, laissez-faire, hands-off attitude wants to take away a person's right to choose.

You as Republicans should respect the right of individual choice. But you step on it. I ask you to stop giving the Republican party a bad name. You are making me out to be a fascist. Re-read your doctrines.

And Mr. [Ted] Marvelias, violence is not the answer. Nor is name-calling. Grow up, man. This is not high school, nor is it a game of Risk. This is life. Do what you want with it. But don't affect mine. You make me embarrassed to say that I am a Libertarian. If you are what represents the Republican party, then the world is surely doomed to a future of socialism.

Jesus wasn't that kind of conservative

How sad it is that many people on this campus are careless enough to take UMass conservative's word for anything, let alone for Christianity or its values. Does Guy Glodis strike you as someone you'd team up with if you were truly interested in protecting Judeo-Christian values? It is unlikely that Jesus would give his stamp of approval to someone who is so obviously full of himself. It is truly lamentable that many otherwise righteous values are devoured and defamed by this reactionary trend.

Alan Wilcox

I wanted to participate in the pro-life rally last Wednesday because the abortion industry, which kills over 164,000 children every day, is a greater atrocity than even the Holocaust. It's like wiping out over seven times the student population of this University every single day. Since 1973, over 25 million have been slaughtered in the United States alone, amounting to about 10 percent of the U.S. population today. Furthermore, they were mostly from low-income and minority households, who rarely have a choice; economic and social factors usually force their decisions, but middle- and upper-class women have freedom of choice! Pretty convenient for those of you who favor sterilizing minorities. Unfortunately, this "pro-life" rally was sponsored by a bunch of loudmouth neanderthals who seem to think "straight pride" more important than straight humility, and that past policies and systems are somehow inherently good. The pro-choice groups have taken advantage of this, consistently portraying pro-lifers as chauvinistic bigots, while ignoring groups such as Feminists For Life and Women Exploited By Abortion, as well as "liberal" advocates for life such as Nat Hentoff (columnist for the Village Voice) and the Sojourners community.

Then there's the "straight pride" rally. Celebrating straightness only acknowledges and affirms homosexuality as a legitimate sexual orientation when, in reality, no one is truly homosexual. There are many who, damaged by family and peer relationships or lack of relationships, believe themselves to be naturally oriented towards their own sex. Is straightness something to flaunt and take pride in? Do injured soldiers in battle flaunt the fact that they weren't injured in front of those who were? The shameful bombing of Iraq was more compassionate than Young Americans For Freedom is. Furthermore, everybody has injuries in one form or another. Sometimes they can lead a person to believe that they are different, and attracted to their own sex. Or they can make one believe that fascism is biblical. Everyone is affected. Jesus has both the power and the desire to break this bondage, and to heal and restore the homosexual, bigot, thief, witch, you and I, whoever.

Men and women are helpless to pull themselves out of their morally-depraved situation. Each individual desperately needs to be reconciled to Jesus Christ, and can be changed by a loving relationship with his or her creator. I believe that the Bible is the infallible word of God. Unfortunately, many seem to think that Jesus wore a suit and tie, generally oppressed women, and was proud of his straightness. Maybe he would join Young Americans For Freedom. Maybe he would join the Klu Klux Klan. I don't think so.

More Hitlers than we know what to do with Hitler, Hitler, who's got the Hitler? There's a new game sweeping the nation and it's called "Hitler tag." It's all the rage from the White House to the Student Union. The object is to call somebody who opposes you "Hitler" before they can say or do something you don't like.

The elections of last fall saw numerous accusations of Naziism by candidates on both sides. While Chet Atkins was trying to fit Republican John McGovern with a pair of jack boots for the Congressional race, political cartoonists had Democrat John Silber goose-stepping down the gubernatorial campaign trail. Hardly an issue could be heard over the furor.

In the recent Gulf War there was a veritable torrent of Hitlers. Some said Saddam Hussein was Hitler. Some said it was Bush. Der Fuhrer himself, maintaining his impartiality on the issue, remained notably silent.

Just last week a new gang joined in the antics. Our own Teddy Marvelias and his band of juvenile delinquents spent most of their Annoyance Week calling anyone who disagreed with them supporters of Hitler. During his anti-abortion rally Teddy likened pro-choice supporters to Nazis. Then he railed against "Nazi lesbians." At another rally one of his cronies creatively compared the peace protesters to Hitler's supporters.

What could be the motivation for this radical posthumous flip-flop? What possessed the Reich Fuhrer to gainsay every position of Teddy Marvelous? Why has Hitler suddenly become so darned liberal? I say it's professional jealousy. When world leaders toss the title around, that's one thing. But when any flag-waving yahoo can vie for the position of figurehead of fascism, what can a self-respecting ubermensch do but switch sides?

Personally, I'm not buying it. I have my opinion as to who's side he's really on. And with shenanigans like we had last week, we are sure to have a real springtime for Hitler.

Pearson Post's artistic response to the military excess

By LISA CURTIS
Collegian Staff

The Experimental Prototype Gallery of Tomorrow opened on Feb. 28 at the Student Union Art Gallery. It features two large installations by Pearson Post Industries, a Rhode Island based video art studio founded by Joshua Pearson and Gardner Post. Both Rhode Island School of Design graduates were on hand to give a briefing and a launching.

Pearson Post Industries criticizes what they perceive to be excessive militarism of the United States. They create issue art which is art that primarily focuses on political and social issues.

"In 1987 we formed as a coherent response to the massive military build-up over the past 50 years in the United States," Joshua Pearson stated in his briefing.

At the crowded opening people were pinned up against the wall, held hostage by their fascination with the choppy imagery on the many television screens. Food was passed down along the line in a basket for the viewers. As the crowd watched, an unobtrusive man filmed them from the other side of the installation. Some people plunked down on the floor to watch the videos while others began dancing to the music. The loud volume and endless barrage of military abbreviations were dizzying and boring.

The exhibit is divided into three rooms.

BELIEVE IT OR NOT – It's rather strange, but true. River Phoenix has his own band with his sister Rain (she's to the left of Phoenix who is in the center). The group is called Aleka's Attic. Up 'til now, the only recorded work they have done is a song that can be found on the Tame Yourself compilation on Rhino Records entitled "Across the Way." The proceeds from that album were donated to People for the Ethical Treatment of Animals and also featured the B-52's, K.D. Lang and the Indigo Girls. The group has been described as a throwback to 60s nostalgia, but check it out for yourself tonight at Pearl Street. Show starts at 8 p.m.

The first room is completely stark white with a car in the center. An American flag, a television, and a missile are the only other splashes of color.

The actual installation is the large white object in the shape of a station wagon. It has four televisions stacked at a 45 degree angle off its roof. At the end of the televisions, a replica of a rocket points at the ceiling. A long antenna towers above the bumper with a large yellowed flag at its tip.

Clips shown on the televisions attached to the MMABS (mobile multiple audio/visual broadcast system) ranged from detailed history of Pearson Post Industry to footage of their scaled replica of the Titanic (which generated huge laughs from the crowd when it burst into flames on the screen).

Pearson Post likes to call what it creates "high cutting defense entertainment technology." Their music videos contain alternating explosions set to a funky beat. These also grabbed appreciative laughs from the crowd. A rotating presidential seal floated across the screen with the words, "it is awesome," resounding in the background. The videos had "guest appearances" from previous presidents and our current president saying such hip things as "get down."

Pearson Post referred to their defense music television videos as, "massive doses of cathode ray entertainment." Such witty manipulation of defense lingo the highlight the exhibit.

Cute clips like repeated "uh-uh"s from Tom Brokaw add humor and a nice break from the military jargon.

The second room is completely black with a large eagle in relief on the wall. A window was cut out in the middle of the same wall where the audience can peer in at the Telepodium Launcher. A set of four headphones allowed the viewer to tune into the television screens embedded in the telepodium. Mumurings from onlookers included "It's bizarre," and, "It's a history of fires."

These videos incorporate parts of GI Joe episodes and a bikini clad woman firing an automatic weapon. There is a parade of politicians in their crisp, white shirts, red ties and blue blazers.

The telepodium can transform itself into a missile launcher in case of attack and then it will resume showing enjoyable music videos.

Pearson Post's wit was evidenced when Joshua Pearson announced that their podium is designed to "interface with the human speaker."

Information sheets set out at the exhibition posed some interesting questions and provided some interesting answers. "What does music television have in common with multiple independently targetable reentry vehicles? They're both supported by multi-billion dollar industries that incorporate state of the art technology to create spectacular products which are used to dominate and pacify large populations and they are both paid for by the American people."

At the end of the briefing, the audience was assembled outside the Student Union Gallery to witness a demonstration of Pearson Post's Gulfbag Launcher equipped with its "ground to air to ground" missile. As the small rocket veered off to the left and landed in an unimpressive clump in the grass, Mr. Post grinned, "and that's an anti-climatic climax."

Feminism and motherhood

Some attributes of womanhood are hard to ignore. A pregnant woman will often show at five months. Though not pregnant, I am reminded daily of my capacity for childbirth, thanks to my ever-widening hips. As in the past, I greet this biological fact with ambivalence.

Renee Caruso

I, at 12, upon seeing a mother with an infant, would shake my head in wonder. Why, I mused, would she want to spend time with someone so needy? Being an only child, I had decided early on that babies were a nuisance and an impediment to freedom.

At 18-years-old, I had not strayed much from my beliefs. If anything, college reinforced my attitudes about motherhood. Women's biology, I learned, is often used as an agent of repression, along with the washing machine and the toaster oven. I assured myself that I would never be domesticated. I would not marry, and I certainly would not bear children.

That was before I went to camp. I had attended summer camp as a child, but never before as a counselor. Looking back, I find it incredible that I spent two months of my life tying shoelaces — since even now I forget to tie my own. And yet, I enjoyed this task, as well as others. I truly liked many of the children and wanted to see them safe and happy.

I now find myself bridging a gap between prospective life choices. Because of my formal education and other privileges, I have the capability to support myself. I wonder if I will achieve this goal. I wonder also how I will express my needs for love and companionship, and if it is possible to have both a family and a self.

I never want to lose the identity and autonomy I feel I now possess. Yet, my still ambivalent views of Motherhood are changing. My recent attitudes have been shaped in part by a lecture I attended two weeks ago. The Orchard Hill/Central Area Women's Center brought a licensed midwife to speak on campus. Vicki Elson, also a Certified Childbirth educator, showed slides of home births and answered numerous questions. She spoke of her own childbirth experiences eloquently and of her children with love.

In a world where women are often refused power because of their gender, Vicki was affirming hers. By thinking of motherhood solely as a role forced upon women by a limiting society, I had denied myself and others respect. Biology, I realize now, does not always have to be destiny. Thus, I am increasingly proud of my biology. For many women, childbirth, as well as motherhood, is both beautiful and empowering.

As Vicki said, while relating her own childbirth experiences, "I'm so much stronger than I thought I was."

Attention all travelers: Not everyone is on vacation

By RUA KELLY
Collegian Staff

Spring break. . .the words conjure up images of surf, sand and fun for most college students. For me, they conjure up the image of my remote control. My spring break experience has pretty much been limited to the Natick Mall and bad late-night TV — mostly due to lack of motivation rather than lack of funds.

News Analysis

But for some college students, spring break may not be too relaxing. Many of your classmates will not be watching General Hospital, but will be working a 40-hour week in order to insure that their study habits are not impaired by their electricity being shut-off, or by having "mac and cheese" every night for a month.

I talked about spring break with my friend Kathy, who will be spending hers in Goodell.

"Do you resent having to work over break?," I inquired. She told me "no," since growing up with a tight budget meant never going on family trips around the world — thus, she didn't feel disappointed.

Kathy did express frustration with so many college students who take their extravagant lifestyle for granted.

"I was standing on the bus to Northampton, and this woman was complaining to her friend, saying '. . .so you know, last year I went to the south of France, and it was a real letdown. This one had better be good,'" Kathy said. "Again, I'm really not angry about going away, but those who do don't seem to appreciate that college is so easy. It's a really spoiled attitude. Seven weeks of classes is not so hard that you need nine days off."

I wondered if there was anything to be gained from spending the break at work, even if the job was not necessarily very glamorous. She said that she believed, "The best thing to do over break is work because it gives you perspective on school versus work. While we theorize, there is a working world out there (where) people's biggest problem is not a midterm, but whether or not they can heat their home. . .and these people are at UMass."

We began to discuss this in terms of a feminist perspective.

How did her experience in the office affect her views as a Women's Studies major? She talked about feeling very frustrated in the classroom:

"We sit and decide what would be best for working-class women, (but) it seems very rare that we ever walk up to the women whom we discuss. We underestimate these women, looking down on them — not asking them what they want, but just going ahead with our revolution."

Finally, I asked her what she would do if she didn't have to work — or what she would say to those people on spring break.

She said if she had time she would ". . .do volunteer work in the community. I think students could also learn a lot from getting a job for a few hours a week and learning about working-class people."

For those on vacation, she hoped that ". . .they would not feel guilty vacationing, but simply be aware of those who do. . .There is a waitress waiting on you at the bar, there is a maid cleaning your hotel room, and there is someone picking up cans at the beach after you leave. . .It is very tiring to be on your feet. I'm not saying 'don't go to Bermuda and be destitute,' but remember that there will be an imbalance in society if you're always taking and not giving."

The Women's Issues editors would like to wish all UMass and Five College area students a wonderful spring break. . .hope to see ya soon!

YOUR DAILY HOROSCOPE
By JEANE DIXON

ARIES (March 21-April 19): The spotlight is on joint finances. Intriguing investment opportunities arise. Do not waste valuable time arguing about trivial matters. Give a romantic relationship time to develop.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Be careful not to overlook an important task or health matter. Real estate transactions enjoy highly favorable influences. Consult a lawyer before signing agreements. Romance is in bloom!

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Come to grips with what is happening at your place of work. Focus on what needs to be done immediately. A promotion or raise could be in the works. Take a calculated risk.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Clear up an old misunderstanding with your mate or business partner. Attention to minute detail is the secret to your success. People and places at a distance could be in the spotlight.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Move ahead with an interesting new plan. Influential people will be impressed by your enthusiasm. Be careful not to overlook something important. An excellent evening for socializing.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Listen to your strong inner voice today. Luck is on your side in both business and romance. A conflict could develop on the home front if someone insists on constantly bringing up the past.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Your enterprising attitude helps you make sweeping improvements at home. A decorating project is just one possibility. Protect your credit rating. Be sure to pay your bills on time.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): You can make fantastic progress on a new project today. Job interviews will go well. Return telephone calls promptly and write important letters. A hobby could become a source of income.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Long-term plans take precedence now. A move to another city or business location is a real possibility. Consult family before making a final decision. Community work brings you deep satisfaction.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Emotionally and creatively, it's all happening now. Be ready to move when a golden opportunity presents itself. Previous endeavors begin to pay off.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Projects that are in the preparatory stage may provide more pleasure than the actual launching. Travel could boost your earning potential. In romance, speak from the heart.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Great real estate news puts you in a positive frame of mind. Working hard now will pay huge dividends down the road. When accepting an honor, share the limelight with your loved ones.

The Hard Way is a cute little action flick

By EMILY HAYES
Collegian Correspondent

The highest praise I can bestow on the movie The Hard Way, is to say it is cute. An amusing action-comedy, it owes much of its charm to Michael J. Fox who co-stars with James Woods as an actor venturing into the real life work of a tough cop to train for a big movie role.

Film Review

The plot is in no way fresh; it left me thinking "deja vu" as the credits rolled. The odd couple contrast of a spoiled pretty boy and a tough man is a familiar theme.

Set in New York City, the film is about two characters who have nothing in common. Nick Lang (Fox) is from L.A. and has grown tired of Hollywood's commerical penchant for typecasting and regurgitating movies as sequels. He seeks out John Moss (Woods), a chain-smoking fearless cop whose every other word is a curse, to give him a crash course in machismo.

Lang's goal is to snatch the part in an upcoming flick away from Mel Gibson who is the preferred actor for the role.

Moss has a different agenda — to apprehend the "Party Crasher," a mammoth-sized psychopathic killer with bleach blond hair and a positively evil disposition.

A big fan of Nick Lang, Moss' boss forces him to accept his new alter ego, room mate and partner on the job for two weeks, Lang drives Moss crazy by analyzing and imitating his every move. And when the foul mouthed cop explodes in a fury and verbally chews him to bits, the young actor is even more awed by him.

"You are like the Yoda among cops," says Lang to Moss.

Moss calls Lang a "cop groupie" who comes from Never-Never Land.

There is a romantic twist in the plot with the character of Susan played by Annabella Sciarra, who single-handedly turns tough guy Moss to mush.

Though somewhat predictable, the film has some funny scenes and a lot of fights and car chases.

The Hard Way did not fare badly at the ticket booth at Hampshire Six Theaters either, taking second place for numbers of movie goers. 370 people attended the opening show on Friday, compared to L.A. Story and Shipwrecked, which had draws of about 200 according to Ingrid Warner, the manager. Of course The Doors was by far the number one flick with 600 tickets sold.

The movie is worth seeing for Michael J. Fox fans and those who enjoy cute comedies won't be disappointed.

Mozart Symposium

One who finds splendor in the musical creations of Mozart will find absolute pleasure in "Mozart's Nature, Mozart's World," a National Bicenntenary Humanities Symposium which will be presented at Amherst College in three sessions. The first session will take place today in Buckley Recital Hall at 4 p.m.

The session will feature two lectures and a round-table discussion. The symposium is being held in conjunction with Amherst College's Mozart Spring Festival and will delve into Mozart's own human nature, the nature of his world and the nature of his music. Admission is free and open to the public.

American Express Announces A Great New Travel Program.

Now students can get the Card and get 3 roundtrips on Continental Airlines, for only $129 or $189 each.

There's only one way to cover a lot of territory without spending a lot of money. And that's by getting the American Express® Card. It's the only card that offers an exciting new travel program exclusively for students—including three roundtrip certificates on Continental Airlines.

Just look at the map and pick the place you'd like to visit. If it's on your side of the Mississippi River, you can use a certificate to fly for only $129 roundtrip. Or, you can cross the Mississippi for $189 roundtrip.

You have your pick of more than 150 cities in the 48 contiguous states. And you can fly almost anytime—because there are no blackout dates. But you must make your reservations within 14 days of the day you leave. And the maximum stay is 7 days/6 nights and must include a Saturday night.

In addition to this great travel program, you'll also enjoy all the benefits of Cardmembership as well as other exclusive student privileges. They include a quarterly magazine filled with informative articles on summer jobs, careers, campus life. Plus valuable discounts from leading retailers.

32 teams ready for NIT action

By GREG SUKIENNIK
Collegian Staff

When the University of Massachusetts faces La Salle Friday night at the Cage, it will be one of 32 teams participating in first-round action in the National Invitational Tournament. Here are the pairings of all 16 first-round contests, with records in parenthesis.

Wednesday, March 13: James Madison (19-9) at Providence (17-12); Ball State (21-9) at Cincinnati (17-11); Bowling Green (17-12) at Wisconsin (14-14); Michigan (14-14) at Colorado (15-13); Southern Illinois (16-13) at Boise State (18-10); Houston (18-10) at Stanford (15-13).

Thursday, March 14: Fairleigh Dickenson (22-8) at Siena (23-9); Fordham (24-7) at South Florida (19-10); Coppin State (19-10) at Southwest Missouri State (21-11); Alabama-Birmingham (18-12) at Memphis State (16-14); Rice (16-13) at Arkansas State (21-8); Tulsa (18-11) at Oklahoma (16-14).

Friday, March 15: Furman (20-8) at West Virginia (16-13); George Washington (19-11) at South Carolina (19-12); La Salle (19-9) at Massachusetts (17-11); Butler (18-10) at Wyoming (19-11).

Unlike the NCAA Tournament, which places participating teams in brackets, the NIT re-seeds the remaining teams between the first and second rounds. What this means is that nobody knows who the Minutemen would play in the second round if they were to beat La Salle on Friday. Nobody knows who anyone will play in the second round.

Games will be played at the home site of the higher-seeded team in the first round, second round and quarterfinal round. The semi-finals and finals will be played in Madison Square Garden in New York City on March 25-26.

SPORTS

It's time again for March Madness

By MICHAEL MORRISSEY
Collegian Correspondent

March Madness has finally arrived, and for many sports fans, this is as close as they will ever get to Nirvana. With much hoopla and hype, CBS Sports announced the 64-team field, sponsored by Pizza Hut, of course.

Bank on this: UNLV will NOT repeat as the champs of college hoop. The reason: their bracket is too difficult. Of course, April 1, the date of the championship game, is Jerry Tarkanian's favorite day of the year.

Another laughter for any UMass student came when Bill Cosby proclaimed on ESPN that Temple, his alma mater, will face UNLV in the finals. For this fan, at least, a Temple win over Syracuse in the second round would be greatly appreciated. The Orangemen have to be the number one example of how not to build a basketball program. Nice mascot!

You have to look deep for a real contender after the Runnin' Rebels. Arkansas may have motivation for a title, even if they don't have a cake walk. Pundit Predicts: Todd Day and Lee Mayberry will come out of March like lions.

Ohio State, on the decline recently, may have gotten the wake-up call they needed, and the seed they wanted. Jimmy Jackson is just sick in clutch situations, and he's all the experience that team needs.

Arizona may be the team to win this year, especially with the front line combo of Chris Mills and Brian Williams. If this happens, bandwagon prognosticators will come out of the woodwork like Charlestown rats, saying, "I knew it all along."

The North Carolina Tar Heels look like my team to win the big dance. They have the senior leadership in center Pete Chilcutt, forward Rick Fox and guard King Rice. They have the best freshmen class in the country, and the world's best basketball coach, Dean Smith. If they avoid Princeton, they're a lock for the final four, at least.

With the possible exception of Syracuse, all of the other Big East teams will scrub out, just like last year. Some of the possible second round games involving number one seeds look interesting, notably UNLV-Georgetown and UNC-Princeton.

New Mexico, Southern Mississippi, East Tennessee State and Missisippi State may be some teams with designs on wearing Cinderella's slipper. Teams ripe for a big fall include Seton Hall (Did they impress you?), Syracuse, Oklahoma State (Will the last Sutton to leave that place please turn off the lights?) and Wake Forest.

Of course, once the band starts playing, everything goes out the window. It's a case of who has it, and who doesn't. If UNLV proves me wrong, they'll secure their rightful place in history among the best teams ever. They would certainly deserve the comparison, but until then, there are 63 other teams with some chance.

My Final Four right now stands: North Carolina, Ohio State, Arizona and Arkansas. I see a match-up of Arizona and UNC, with a close game down to the wire. Hubert Davis will hit a trey to give the Tar Heels a National Championship.

HoopContest V Rules

Welcome to the fifth annual NCAA men's hoop contest, or HoopContest V, sponsored by Sound and Music in Northampton. As in basketball, the one with the most points wins.

Read on because you could win a $200, $100 or $50 gift certificate from Sound and Music. The points earned will be broken down by rounds: wins in round one will be worth one point; round two, two points; round three, three points; round four, four points; round five, five points; finals, seven points. Thus the total possible points adds up to 121. In case of a tie, prizes will be split.

Fill in the teams you think will win, using this form or a xerox of this and bring the filled form down to the Collegian during working hours by 11 a.m. Thursday. You can also fax us a copy of your entry (413-545-1592) or mail it (113 Campus Center, Amherst, MA 01003). Be sure to include your name, address and phone number on the entry form.

SAO may have influenced SGA restructuring

By MARC ELLIOTT
Collegian Staff

The Student Activities Office was aware of, and may have influenced, the Undergraduate Student Senate officers' plans to ask the administration to suspend and restructure UMass' student government well before the officers made the request public Jan. 30, according to a confidential document obtained by the Collegian.

The 13-page memo, written by SAO Director Irene Carew sometime in January, includes a proposed time-line for the restructuring of the Student Government Association.

The memo suggested that on Feb. 6 "Student leaders hold an on-campus press conference to state their concerns about SGA structure, call for the suspension of the SGA, and call for the establishment of a Study Committee."

Carew recommended in the memo that Vice-Chancellor for Student Affairs Dennis Madson, now at Lewis and Clark University in Portland, Ore., and President-Chancellor Joseph Duffey make a formal announcement on Feb. 11 suspending the SGA and establishing a study committee for the restructuring of student government.

That the SAO knew about the officers' request in advance raises fears that the administration somehow influenced the officers' decision to ask for the administration's intervention, according to Patricia Donaghue, Donaghue has been elected interim Treasurer by the Student Sentate, but has not been recognized by the administration as the new treasurer.

"By developing a relationship that was far too intimate with the officers, Dr. Carew deliberately manipulated the minds of our student government," she said.

Said Northeast Area President Alan Van Tassel, "We've had concerns for some time that the SAO was playing more than a support role for the SGA leadership."

Carew said the officers' request was their own idea and she had no part of the decision-making process, despite the fact that she knew prior to Jan. 30 that it would happen.

"I did not orchestrate this," Carew said. "This was initiated and thought out by the student leaders and it's really undermining to the student leaders not to give them credit for their ability to analyze and to develop strategies for addressing problems."

Carew said she wrote the memo for her own benefit and that many scenarios were considered. She conceded, however, that she did not write any other memos with different scenarios.

Carew refused to say whether or not the memo had been sent to either President-Chancellor Duffey or the former Vice-Chancellor of Student Affairs Madson, saying the document was confidential.

Angus McQuilken and Daniel Chesnicka, two of the officers who made the request, denied that the administration was any influence on their decision.

McQuilken said the memo looked more like a proposal to the administration than a plan written by the administration to be followed to the letter. McQuilken cited as evidence the fact that events did not happen exactly as detailed in the time-line.

"This time-line, in that it didn't happen as it is laid out, clearly wasn't the time-line of the administration," McQuilken said.

Chesnicka, who was removed from his position as Student Speaker two weeks ago by the Student Senate, said that the administration did not know "exactly" what the officers were going to do, and that the officers themselves did not know exactly what they were going to ask the administration until two days before the press conference.

Chesnicka acknowledged, however, that the administration knew the officers would ask for the suspension of the SGA and the creation of a commission charged with the restructuring of student government.

"The administration knew on a lot of levels that we were going to do a press conference, that we were going to ask for a suspension of the SGA on some level, and that we would would hope that they would work with us in forming a new stronger student government," Chesnicka said.

Student arrested for assault

A University of Massachusetts student was arrested Monday morning in Holdsworth Hall and charged with two counts of alleged indecent assault and battery on a person over 14 and two counts of alleged assault and battery.

John Richard Murphy, 20, of Easton, was arrested for the alleged incidents which occurred in the past three months in Central Residential Area at UMass, police said. The matter is still under investigation.

Arrests

- Marc M. Bessler-Fromm, 20, of Hartford, Conn., and Nathan J. Robinson, 20, of Glenns Falls, N.Y., were arrested Tuesday in Lot 44 for allegedly being minors carrying alcohol

Theft

- A man reported Monday his car window had been broken in Lot 44 and his stereo valued at $200 stolen.
- A man reported Monday his telephone valued at $94 was stolen from Kennedy residence hall.

Expert: Middle East bloodshed caught some by surprise

By EMILY HAYES
Collegian Correspondent

Most experts did not believe there was going to be a war in the Persian Gulf, said a former ambassador to Saudi Arabia last night at Amherst College.

Former Ambassador James Akins said most experts, including himself, thought there would be no battles in the gulf on the premise either Saddam Hussein or George Bush would back down from their positions before the Jan. 15 deadline for withdrawal.

"Most of the people here in this room thought there would be a war in November but those who knew most about the Middle East — the experts — did not," Akins said.

"I know the CIA, and I know how really incompetent they are. This is not an extraordinarily elaborate Machiavellian plot. Bush, Baker and Cheney aren't that clever."

Ambassador Akins served in Saudi Arabia from 1973-76 and while in the Foreign Service served in Naples, Paris, Strasbourg, Damascus, Beirut, Kuwait and Baghdad. He was appointed Director of the Office of Fuels and Energy in the Department of State in 1968.

Akins discussed the political conditions that preceded Iraq's Aug. 2 invasion of Kuwait. He said April Glaspie, U.S. Ambassador in Iraq, has become Secretary of State James Baker's "scapegoat," blamed for causing the invasion.

"She [Glaspie] is an ex-colleague of mine. She is extremely intelligent and professional and acted under orders," he said.

Glaspie has not been in contact with her colleagues since she returned to the United States. There will be an investigation into her part in the Gulf War, and Akins said the question of whether she will testify could reach the Supreme Court.

Akins asked, "Did Kuwait take action on its own or was it provoked by the United States to insure an invasion and provide an excuse to bring the United States into Saudi Arabia?"

He said the administration was more likely to be called stupid and incompetent than capable of such a conspiracy.

"Those who were trying to prevent war never had a chance.

Congress members who opposed it said they did so to give Bush the OK the show of support he needed to show Saddam Hussein," he said.

Destruction of Baghdad, shown by the media to be "neat and bloodless as a Nintendo game" should not be taken lightly, he said.

For example, the Defense Department's figures about the bombing of the country's bridges are startling. There were 750 sorties targeted against 60 bridges. Of the 3,000 bombs dropped only 120 were needed to destroy the bridges, leaving 2,880 extra hits.

The destruction of water purification plants, oil refineries and drainage systems for irrigation will have severe environmental repercussions in Iraq, he said. An increase in infantile dysentery, typhoid, and

Author calls Australian Aborigines 'role models'

Says Aborigine 'visionary' view of Earth is key to future

By HEIDI McCANN
Collegian Correspondent

Speaking to a filled lecture hall at Smith College Monday afternoon, Australian anthropologist, author and poet James Cowan, presented the Aborigines of Australia as role models for a world "which must begin to take heed of the Earth's messages."

His illustrated presentation entitled "Mysteries of the Dreaming: Anthropology, Literature, and the Australian Aborigine" focused on Cowan's 15-year study of the Aborigine's spiritual beliefs and metaphysical view of the Australian landscape.

Cowan, author of Letters from a Wild State, and The River People, was introduced by former Smith College president Jill Ker Conway as both a friend and "a man hard to characterize as anthropologist, author, or philosopher."

Such broad fields of interest helped Cowan study the Aborigines and "how they believe."

By submerging himself in this "mythopoetic universe of the Aborigines" was he able to put aside "the European perspective and enter the philosophic framework of these traditional peoples."

He offered this vantage point to the audience, and asked them to view the Earth as the "embodiment of myth," Modern society must begin to "look upon landscape in visionary terms," Cowan said.

Cowan suggested the key to the world's survival is found in the Aborigine and other "classic cultures," that use myths to "link the past closely with the present."

In tracing the history of Western contact with Africa, South America and Australia, racism was described by Cowan as a by-product of European influence and the result of the consequential destruction of native peoples' culture and lands

What Cowan sees as a cure for this disregard of non-Western lands lies in "visionary geography," the essential emotional catalyst needed to heighten environmental awareness worldwide.

EDITORIAL/OPINION

The opinions on this page are those of the individual writer or cartoonist and do not necessarily reflect the views of the Collegian or the University unless otherwise noted.

There exists no 'right' to make people live in fear

Trystan Skeigh

Last Thursday's counter-demonstration against the "straight-pride rally," was not a stand-off by gays against straights. It was a collective group that included gays, straights, bisexuals and even some conservatives (yes, I know at least two who counter-demonstrated), of different races, religions and nationalities, who stood together and raised a collective voice in a powerful condemnation of bigotry and an equally powerful affirmation of diversity on this campus.

How can a gay student, or any student with a sensitive heart and an open mind, possibly study after hearing or reading about a student group on campus actively campaigning against homosexual students' rights to exist as equal human beings? I couldn't sleep after listening to the conservatives at the "talk show" brand homosexuals as "sexual deviants" unfit to serve in government, "criminals" who should be barred from society.

A resident assistant in Brett reported that the night after the talk show a resident on her floor awakened from nightmares of "conservatives" attacking her and her friends with baseball bats.

An Assistant Dean of Students expressed the official view that everyone is free to speak their opinions. I asked if this meant the Ku Klux Klan would be allowed to hold rallies on campus. She said "probably." Then she went on to explain that until UMass was sure it couldn't be sued, the administration was hesitant to enforce any kind of "hate speech" guidelines.

Shouldn't a university with a clear Affirmative Action policy and a clear Student Code of Conduct that prohibits discrimination and harassment on the basis of sex, race, religion and sexual orientation be a leader in the legal battle to provide guarantees to minority students that their campus will be kept a safe place for them to study?

Does anyone really believe that the First Amendment protects the rights of a student organization to actively campaign, and legislate against the rights, opportunities, and peaceful existence of other students? Of course it doesn't.

Yet the administration has ignored a clear pattern of homophobic discrimination perpetuated by the Republican Club. And the record of their motives and intent over the course of this year has been painfully clear:

During a public Citizens for Limited Taxation debate, Ted Marvelias, club spokesman, argued that UMass' $100,000 spending allotment on gay, lesbian, and bisexual issues "was a glaring example of spending waste." Marvelias went on to ask, "Where is it in the state constitution that public universities should financially support filth and immorality?"

Marvelias and Ed Corrigan, both staunch Republican Club members, fought to have the non-discrimination statement removed from the Campus Center Board of Governor's handbook last semester. Then, they cleverly maneuvered to remove the two LBGA seats.

Marvelias argued at the Guy Glodis Talk Show that if Massachusetts Law was enforced on this campus, no gay student could hold an position in student government because gay men are all "sodomites" and therefore "criminals."

It has been no secret to students on this campus that the small group of men who compose the Republican Club don't like gays. If Republican Club President Glen Caroline really believes otherwise, as he asserted at the "Straight Pride Rally," then it is up to him to rid his club of its homophobic elements, or at least speak out against the views of his homophobic club members.

If the Republican Club had kept their dislike limited to statements of opinion, perhaps their behavior would not be so objectionable. But they have actively worked, in student political arenas, to take away funding, representation and legal rights for gay students.

I believe this administration has a moral, legal, and financial obligation to step in soon and say "Stop" to organized bigotry on this campus, and take steps to protect the right of gay, lesbian, and bisexual students to live and study on this campus without fear.

To the Repunlican club — I'm sorry boys, but your "right" to hate gay students ends where our right to live and study in peace begins.

Don't rightists have rights?

Christopher Woods

"The First Amendment was not Intended to Protect Gay Bashers." This was a sign carried by one of the numerous counter-protesters at last week's now-famous "Straight Pride" rally. Judging by the response of the campus community it seems that most would agree to that sentiment.

"Congress shall make no law respecting an establishment of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof, or abridging the freedom of speech, or the press, or the right of the people peaceably to assemble, and to petition the government for a redress of grievances."

This is the First Amendment as it appears in the Constitution of the United States. Again, judging by the response of the campus community, it seems that most would agree to this sentiment.

On the surface, these are two ideals that are purported to be the cornerstone of liberal ideology are fairly convincing, and rather difficult to argue with. That is, if one is to ignore logic and peacefully go about the business of becoming liberally indoctrinated.

It is truly frightening that few in this community recognize the inherent contradiction in these two statements and in much of all liberal philosophy, "The First Amendment was not Intended to Protect Gay Bashers." At the risk of being labeled as a homophobe (as the liberal contingent is quick to do with those who refuse to follow their teachings blindly) the logical, sentient being is compelled to disagree.

The First Amendment was created so that ALL ideas may be voiced in our society. As distasteful as it may be to many of us, it is truly the only safeguard in our society to protect us from the "Big Brother" that so many liberals regard as the "Boogey-Man." Without the freedom to express ideas, we condemn ourselves to perpetual lemming status.

To suggest that only certain, carefully screened, politically correct statements are protected by the First Amendment is patently absurd. The authors of the U.S. Constitution granted such freedoms on the premise that in the heat of public debate only such ideas that were truly in the best interest of the people could long stand.

While many may not support the ideas that were presented at the "Straight Pride" rally, it was quite decidedly protected as an act of free speech. The individual bearing the aforementioned sign was exercising the same rights as well. Nonetheless, the individual carrying the sign purports to decide for society just what it may and may not say.

Admittedly this editorial is constructed to intentionally use some rather over-used and rather trite liberal arguments to show the contradictions and inadequacies inherent in much of left-wing theory. Yet it is important for society to recognize that such persuasive and politically correct arguments are actually a much greater hazard to liberty and personal freedom than merely a few individuals freely speaking their minds in public.

Tock-tick: It's high time to address UMass' clock woes

A.R. Santiago

When it's 7:30 at Machmer's east wing, it's around 6:00 at its west and approximately 4:45 at Health Services. Bartlett 109, the journalism computer lab, has a clock that once it reaches 9:05 turns BACKWARD. Just yesterday I discovered that there's actually a clock on the Campus Center Concourse. But don't bother checking it out. It doesn't work, either.

From the weight-driven ones of the 14th century to today's electric ones, clocks have provided the most dependable form of measuring time. We have come a long way from those days of having to stare at the Sun, Moon and the stars just to figure out the time. Little did the ancient Babylonians and Egyptians know that centuries later the idea of having separate instruments for telling time in the daytime and at night would be laughable. Have you overheard someone asking, "Could you look at your sundial and see what time it is?" lately? Didn't think so.

Our old reliable clocks at UMass are beginning to show signs of a slow and painful death. A brief call to the Physical Plant provided little encouragement. The clocks are apparently operated by some Master Clock somewhere that dictates whether they should run counterclockwise one day and clockwise the other or if every hour will last for 65 minutes. No more waiting around for some frail old man to wind them, one by one. No, no. We're talking high-tech here.

Because our clocks do use electric current as their power source, they are, needless to say, entirely dependent upon the stability of that source. Because these UMass clocks are subject to frequent power shutdowns, they get a little confused. If you happen to see movement where there wasn't before, it means that the clock is merely trying to recuperate. It doesn't mean that the darn thing has a mind of its own; just that it's still a little dazed. If someone pulled your plug every time they felt like it, wouldn't you be, too?

Still that's no excuse. Most of the clocks on this campus don't tell the right time, which leads me to the conclusion that, uh, they're pretty useless. This has presented a nagging dilemma. It is now virtually impossible to sit in class and count down to the end of the class, which is in many cases just about the most stimulating part of the class. Somebody has taken the fun out of thinking of creative ways to make time pass quicker. Now, we have to sit in class and stare at a motionless clock. Nothing could be more depressing.

Get a watch then, you say? C'mon. Wouldn't you rather have the right time staring right at you, in big bold numbers, than having to roll up your bulky sleeves every two minutes?

And another thing. The PVTA must be relying on the same Master Clock. I will gladly sacrifice all my remaining Saturday nights on this Earth just to never have to sit and wait for my bus to get off its ass and leave its Puffton Village stop on time.

The Physical Plant says the clocks will "eventually catch up" with the right time. In any case, we have to wait. Like most things at the university these days, first things first. After all, there are more important repairs to be done, and unsynchronized clocks are the last thing on their minds.

If you frequent the Collegian, Bluewall, Morrill 329, Hasbrouck 134 or the Physical Plant — just about the only places on campus that do tell the right time — you should feel so lucky.

The Bible actually commands equality

I was disturbed upon reading Jessame Hannus' column ("Who's Flag Anyway?" March 11) by her negative and narrow-minded criticism of the Bible. One of her claims is that if you believe the Bible, "you must believe that women are not real human beings, never mind equal citizens." This claim is nowhere in the Bible nor is it a logical conclusion of what the Bible teaches. Although there are texts by appeal to which some have rationalized their exploitation of women, this should not lead one to ignore the fact that the meaning and implications of these texts are still being debated. Nor should it blind one to the fact that there are texts which clearly depict women and men as equals. For example, the apostle Paul wrote, "There is neither Jew nor Greek, slave nor free, male nor female, for you are all one in Christ Jesus." (Galatians 3:28)

Contrary to what Ms. Hannus thinks, the Bible challenges me to take women seriously. Before I became a Christian, the dominating force in my life was my sex drive, and women to me were merely a means to an orgasm. I used to play the "sensitive guy," even though I wasn't at the time, just to have sex. The Bible, however, gives me good reasons to keep my sex drive under control and to treat people with respect and honesty.

Perhaps the Bible has more insight regarding these issues than Ms. Hannus gives it credit for. Maybe she should rethink her views.

cholera could result from damage to water purification plants, he said.

In the aftermath of the war, other environmental issues will be at the front, such as which kinds of measures the US should impose to reduce the dependency on Arab oil.

Akins said though our imports could be reduced by 50-70 percent in 10 years, a more likely scenario is to forgo "belt-tightening measures" in favor of a "short-term alternative of getting the Saudis to sell oil cheaper," he said.

After the cheap oil is enjoyed and political order in the region changes Akins said, "prepare for a nasty war for resources."

YOUR DAILY HOROSCOPE
By JEANE DIXON

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Stay close to your business base today. A creative enterprise could cost you more than you bargained for. Postpone signing any papers until you can consult your partner or legal counsel.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Other people are ready to lend a hand, yet you hesitate to accept their assistance. Perhaps you are more accustomed to giving than receiving. Give a friend the opportunity to repay a favor.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): You are elected to an important post. Your associates are impressed by your ability to handle several projects at one time. Mate is concerned that you are pushing yourself too hard.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Your patience will be tested today. Keep cool and sign nothing. A message brings good news. Someone from your past reappears. Let others do as they please.

LEO (July 23-Aug 22): A personal relationship is easier to understand now. Put your thinking cap on and devise new ways to save money. A family member shows interest in your credit rating. Put romance on hold.

VIRGO (Aug 23-Sept 22): Someone's stubbornness can work to your advantage. An influential associate is impressed by your style. There is new emphasis on the ability to work well when under pressure.

LIBRA (Sept 23-Oct 22): Now is the time to conquer any financial worries. Choose your advisers with care. Loved ones are supportive. You make the correct decision regarding a trust or security. A dream could come true!

SCORPIO (Oct 23-Nov 21): Your natural good taste will guide you in the right direction now. The key word is "moderation." Your mate or partner may become embroiled in a family argument. Refuse to be the mediator.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov 22-Dec 21): Move with the times. A tendency to cling to the past will slow financial growth. To prevent future embarrassment, check all business details, no matter how small. Romance looks rosy.

CAPRICORN (Dec 22-Jan 19): A missing paper or document comes to light. Romance may have to take a temporary backseat to your career. Do not let loved ones distract you during work hours. Curb spending.

AQUARIUS (Jan 20-Feb 18): Any extra funds should be invested for your family's welfare. Previous endeavors begin to pay off. It is surprising how much can be achieved through talks and travel today. Go all out!

PISCES (Feb 19-March 20): Conditions are favorable for you to enhance your reputation today. Meet with influential people. A deteriorating relationship can be salvaged by careful nurturing.

What is a Textbook Buyback?

Three times during each semester the Textbook Annex brings in a wholesaler to buy textbooks from students. Wholesalers are in the business of selling used books to colleges and universities across the country. Therefore, in determining how much they will pay a student for a book they must consider the demand for that book as well as the shipping and handling costs involved in processing and reselling the book. This is why prices vary and indeed change frequently.

The best time to sell books is at the end of the semester. At that time the Annex will pay 50% of the new price for a book if we have an order for that book for the following semester. If we do not, the wholesaler may make you an offer.

We also realize that for a variety of reasons some students want to sell books at times other than the end of the semester. That is why we sponsor buybacks at the beginning and middle of the semester.

If you have questions please ask the people doing the buyback or the Annex staff. They will be more than happy to answer your questions and give you any tips that may be applicable to your situation.

When is the next Textbook Buyback?

The next Textbook Buyback to be held at the TEXTBOOK ANNEX, is:

March 13 & 14:
9:00 am-4:00 pm

March 15:
9:00 am-2:00 pm

AVOID PROBLEMS —
BUY YOUR BOOKS NOW!!

To avoid problems with getting the books that you need for the rest of the semester buy them now. This will give us time to order books that may be sold out, so that you have them before you need them. Also, the return of unsold books will begin March 25.

Ear-bashing music for family entertainment

By MARK STURM
Collegian Staff
and PHIL STRAUB
Collegian Correspondent

When Spring Break hits, wandering lust will no doubt drag all you music addicts into the deep seductive caverns of record emporiums. While there, move your sorry asses over to the misunderstood section and relieve the bins of the heftiest slab o' vinyl to be released in quite some time. Of course I'm talking about Last Home, a noise onslaught by Peter Brotzmann and his son, Caspar. If you can't bring yourself to kill for these succulent beauties, then I suggest you at least pick up recordings by Last Exit, an ensemble to which he lends his tasty saxophone licks. Brotzmann, Jr. also leads his own group, a guitar-based trio under the aegis of Massaker.

Together they pound out a massive wall of musical cacophony that will send your neighbors running for the hills. And with each solo working so well against the other, adding to and then moving beyond, you might wonder if they weren't just genetically linked, but physically.

Members of Chrystalized Movements and Love Child have recently got together and produced a love child of their own, the hairy and grotesque Vermonster. This puppy'll leave any pop hungry wimp yelping as seemingly listenable spurts of indie rock rapidly depart from the sound. The aforementioned fan will no doubt feel teased for a moment before hurriedly exiting the room. Types like that never did have the stomach for a serious guitar overlay.

They no doubt would also have severe difficulties enjoying the extremely satisfying new single from the Reverb Motherfuckers entitled "L.S.D. 25." All you parental types out there can rest assured, at the beginning of the record a voice cautions that enjoyment will not be maximized by the ingestion of illicit drugs while listening, but will be most enjoyed if the drugs are ingested "prior to listening."

It is a matter of deep importance to me that I am able to recommend records that parents and teens or college students can enjoy together. This week I suggest you pick up the latest single from easy listening greats the Strangulated Beatoffs. It's called Practicing Hard to be a Doctor and may be just the boost your brat requires to push him, her, or it over the edge of academic mediocrity and into the potentially lucrative field of pre-medical studies.

While they are studying anatomy or physiology you might encourage them by playing auto-suggestive recordings for them, either of the two new singles from Skullflower, Slaves and Rift. If your kid doesn't learn body parts quicker with these in it's headphones, I advise you to resort to the latest seven inch from the Dwarves, Satan's Crank.

Noise veteran from the 70s unknown new wave disco band Red Transistor Rudolph Grey, has recently teamed up with reputable Jazz percussionist Rashied Ali, and the result is nothing short of a barbed wire enema twixt the cavities of excellence. Rashied Ali fans and jazz purists may find Grey's twisted six string ramblings to be a bit disconcerting, but who cares? The rest of us are eating this single up like vinyl was going out of style. Vinyl is going the way of the affordable glass of beer, so snag all this stuff up before you get another damned "post modern" compact disc rammed down your consumer throat.

Jake in WCCC contest

The local band One Eyed Jake will appear on Wednesday, March 13, at the club Goodnight Hartford in Hartford, CN., as a part of a competition sponsored by WCCC 106.9 FM.

The group submitted a tape to the radio station and was chosen as one of 15 finalists out of 100 applicants. The five-piece pop blues band was the winner of the 1989 UMass Southwest Battle of the Bands by unanimous decision and were also selected as runners-up in the national Daytona Beach Contest over the summer.

The competiton started last week and now it's One Eyed Jake's turn to go up against two other competing groups. If they win, they will rock on to the next round of competition with the final five bands.

A showcase of great young talent

By JAMES MOLESWORTH

Renee Rosnes Quintet
Hampden Theatre
Thursday, March 7

"You can't judge a book by its cover" is perhaps the best thing to say about Renee Rosnes. You might think that someone classically trained at the piano with no real formal training in jazz wouldn't be too hot. Wrong. Renee Rosnes put out music with a vibrancy and intelligence that defies all stereotypes of how jazz musicians learn to play. Reeling off swirls of notes, Rosnes showed the way for the rest of her quintet, as they played a cohesive and exiting night of music.

Steve Wilson on alto and soprano saxes was a monster, with solos that made you think, "Why isn't this guy famous?" Tony Reedus on drums traded fours with everyone throughout the night, with a graceful strength that pushed his counterparts to search for new things, while at the same time, allowing them to play just what they felt.

James Genus on bass. What can you say? He's only been playing bass for five years, has played with Don Pullen, and is about to tour overseas with Roy Haynes. Yet he plays with the experience and confidence of an old master, floating through solos with the ease of one lying in the sun. Not overconfident, but emitting a feeling of knowing one's ability, and stopping before getting sunburned. Genus' future is as bright as that sun he is lying in.

Walt Weiskopf on tenor also displayed some abilities that you might not be able to hear when he is doing his regular gig as fourth tenor in Toshiko Akiyoshi's big band. Teamed with Steve Wilson, Weiskopf looked truly at ease, and helped to give some fine voicings at the heads of tunes.

It was a solid evening; a super opportunity to see some great young talent in the kind of setting, where if all goes well for their future, you may not be able to see them in again.

Men's swimming wraps up yet another dominant season

By THOMAS A. GEORGE
Collegian Correspondent

Male swimmers thought they had gained some breathing space in New England with the graduation of four University of Massachusetts speed demons.

Get some oxygen, the field is now screaming for air.

Five consecutive New England Championships and a 56-4 record later, the most promising aspect of the team's future is the strength of the underclassmen. After the depth of the squad secured the New England title, a group of qualifiers including three underclassmen went on the compete in the Eastern Seaboard Conference Championship, held in Princeton, N.J.

Swimming in its brand new competition pool, Princeton University won the meet, as the heavy favorite.

In the 800-yard freestyle relay, seniors Pete Reich and Jim Robertson with sophomores Curt Sawin and Chris Barrett nearly duplicated their New England Championship performance, finishing at six minutes, 51.78 seconds earning a 15th place, only four days later.

Split times of 1:41.59 from Sawin and 1:42.8 from Robertson represent personal bests.

"I was extremely pleased to see Jim [Robertson] achieve a personal best in his last collegiate race," said coach Russ Yarworth.

Freshman Mark Stoelting, who qualified in both the 100 and 200 backstroke, failed to place. Stoelting has been plagued by injuries throughout his career.

"Mark was not in as good a shape as possible for the events, [due to the proximity of the New Englands] he was simply exhausted," said Yarworth.

Stoelting's New England times would have equated to top 10 in the Eastern Seabord Conference meet.

"There was a lot of pressure, being the favorite," Yarworth said. "They swam to their potential, and I'm proud to say I'm their coach."

Yarworth stressed the need for the team to be able to swim unrested, when championship time rolls around.

"We need to be able to develop a killer instinct throughout the season, especially in practices. My role now as a coach is to replenish some of the depth that we will be losing this year through recruiting," he said.

Yarworth said he has had difficulty inticing prospective swimmers. "The budget cuts hurt, but I can't understand why any student would choose to attend anywhere else," he said.

For the future of the competition, University of Rhode Island will be fielding a strong team next season, as well as the Big East teams of Providence College, Boston College and the University of Connecticut said Yarworth.

La Salle's Overton has NBA potential

By SAM SILVERSTEIN
Collegian Staff

The best basketball players in Philadelphia would play pickup in the Gustine Lake recreation center, late into the night.

Lionel Simmons, Bo Kimble, Howard Evans, Pooh Richardson, the late Hank Gathers, St. Joseph's star James "Bruiser" Flint, and a young point guard named Doug Overton: a once-in-a-lifetime collection of talent that, in the five or so years since, has gone on to college and NBA fame, or in Gathers' case, tragic death.

Friday night's University of Massachusetts-La Salle National Invitational Tournament game at the Cage will reunite Flint, now an assistant coach for UMass, and Overton, a senior point guard for the Explorers.

"The games were a little intense at times. There was a lot talking, that's for sure," remembers Flint. "But [Overton] held his own. You knew he was going to be a great player because he had the work ethic."

Overton is projected as a possible first round pick in this spring's NBA draft. He is La Salle's all-time leader in assists and steals, and has been ranked among the nation's top scorers for most of the season.

Overton averages 22.5 points and five rebounds a game for the 19-9 Explorers, paired with with junior off-guard Randy Woods (21.4 points per game) in what the Sporting News described as the third-best backcourt in college basketball.

Four of La Salle's nine losses came when one or the other was out of the lineup. Woods was suspended by coach Speedy Morris for breaking a team rule early in the season and missed several games, and a sprained ankle sidelined Overton for the final two weeks of the regular season.

"We've never played against guards like these two. They shoot the ball from anywhere on the floor," Flint said.

In a 123-118 win over Loyola-Marymount in late December, Woods rang up a career high 46 points, and Overton scored 45.

There are less than 900 tickets remaining for Friday's game, according to Acting Athletic Ticket Manager Thorr Bjorn. Tickets are on sale at the Athletic Ticket Office, Boyden room 255.

The office will be open today between 8:30 a.m. and 6 p.m. Tickets cost $4 for students and $10 for adults. Tickets may be paid for with check, Visa and Mastercard, or cash.

All seats for Friday's game will be reserved; there will be no general admission student section.

Cage doors will open at 6 p.m. Tipoff is 7:30 p.m.

Near-misses, unlucky teams fill NIT ranks

By GREG SUKIENNIK
Collegian Staff

Who are these guys, anyway?

That is the question many University of Massachusetts men's basketball fans might be asking as the National Invitational Tournament gets underway tonight with six first-round games.

Sure, the Minutemen faithful know all about Atlantic-10 Conference rivals West Virginia and George Washington. They are familiar with other local teams like Siena and Providence, or big name schools like Michigan and Memphis State.

But Butler? Fairleigh Dickenson? Unless one reads Street and Smith's, Dick Vitale's Basketball and Eastern Basketball regularly, one's knowledge of some of the teams in the 32-team field may be a little hazy.

With that in mind, here's a look at some of the lesser-known teams in the NIT, and why they made it to the NIT instead of the NCAA, or for that matter to the NIT instead of the golf course.

There are two distinct categories of teams in the NIT. Some teams get in by the skin of their nose, while others were snubbed by the NCAA for various reasons. The second group tends to be the larger one — which is somewhat surprising, given that the NCAA gives out 64 invitations to their party.

A lot has to do with the strength of a team's conference. You could have 20 wins, but if you beat up on patsies all season long in a poorly-regarded conference and you got upset in the conference tournament, the NCAA has no pity for you.

That's what happened to Siena and La Salle, all of the Metro Atlantic Athletic Conference. Both did well in league play; Siena won 23 games while La Salle won 19. However, neither won the MAAC conference tournament and the automatic NCAA bid that goes with it. Because the MAAC is not as strong a conference as the Big East or the Atlantic Coast Conference, it's NIT time for both of these schools.

Ditto for Southern Illinois, Southwest Missouri State and Tulsa. Those teams hail from the Missouri Valley Conference, which apparently didn't cut the mustard in the NCAA selection committee's view — tournament champion Creighton is the MVC's lone NCAA representitive.

Fairleigh Dickenson won 22 games, but they play in the ultra-weak Northeast Conference and didn't win their tournament. The same holds true for Coppin State, who failed to win the Mid-Eastern Athletic Conference (known as the MEAC, aptly pronounced "meek"). But both made the NIT.

Another way to make it to the NIT is to be a decent (read: better than mediocre, but not by much) team from an outstanding conference. Michigan and Wisconsin are both 14-14, but because they play in the rugged Big Ten, they get respect, and therefore were invited to the NIT. The same holds true for Stanford, Memphis State, Colorado, Oklahoma and Rice.

Of the 32 teams in the NIT, a quick look at overall records and conference affiliation suggests that Providence, Stanford, Houston, SW Missouri State, Michigan and Alabama-Birmingham are among the teams to beat.

Teams with strong home court advantages have the inside track as well, since the NIT plays all but the last two rounds at home sites. UMass, Wyoming, West Virginia and Wisconsin all fit this mold. Only strong road teams will survive against these squads.

Baker meets with Assad, discusses hostages

By BARRY SCHWEID
The Associated Press

DAMASCUS, Syria — Secretary of State James A. Baker III held extended talks last night with Syrian President Hafez Assad on a U.S. formula to bring peace to the Middle East, by having Israel give up territory in exchange for Arab recognition.

Nearing the end of a five-nation trip to the Middle East, Baker also discussed with Assad a flurry of rumors regarding American hostages in Lebanon and a burgeoning plan to guard the Persian Gulf oil fields with an alliance of Egyptian, Syrian and American troops.

The session in Assad's office completed Baker's consultations with the key figures in the Arab-Israeli dispute.

He added Lebanese Foreign Minister Fares Bouez to his schedule on Thursday morning, before flying to Moscow to measure the situation in the restive Soviet Union.

The American and other Western hostages are believed to be held in Lebanon by Hezbollah, an Iranian-backed group, and Baker wants to get the latest word from the Beirut government on the situation.

He also appealed to Assad for help, but U.S. officials said Syria's intervention may not be enough to gain the hostages' freedom. Iran, they said, holds the key.

The Unites States has no direct relations with Tehran and depends largely on intermediaries such as Assad on behalf of the hostages.

The officials, who spoke on condition of anonymity, said they had no evidence of the break in the situation, but President Bush and Baker have vowed to persist, hoping the postwar climate in the region might produce results.

There was no immediate information on possible progress from the Baker-Assad meeting.

"I think that the secretary feels that the climate is now better than it has been in a long time for making progress" in the region. Bush said in Ottawa, Canada, first stop on a diplomatic journey to discuss the postwar gulf with the leaders of Canada, France and Britain.

"I haven't seen anything pessimistic coming out of the Baker reports," Bush said. "There is some kind of change," he said, following the war in which the army of one of Israel's most threatening enemies was vanquished.

Bush said it was "impossible to have normalized relations" with Iraq as long as Saddam Hussein remained in power. Still, he said, he was concerned about instability in the region because of internal unrest in Iraq.

Bush also cautioned Iran against trying to take any Iraqi territory.

A day before Baker's arrival in Moscow, Soviet Foreign Ministry spokesperson Vitaly Churkin said that Gorbachev had sent messages to Arab leaders outlining Soviet views on security in the Persian Gulf and soliciting their views. Churkin said the messages were sent to a "wide range of Arab states," but he would not list them nor say whether Saddam was among them.

Harvard boss speaks out

Bok sides with First Amendment in flag fracas

By EVE EPSTEIN
Associated Press

CAMBRIDGE (AP) — Harvard University's president backed free speech over censorship in a campus brouhaha over displays of Confederate flags and a swastika, but urged voluntary removal of the symbols yesterday.

"Under the Supreme Court's rulings, as I read them, the display of swastikas or Confederate flags clearly falls within the protection of the...clause of the First Amendment and cannot be forbidden simply because it offends the feelings of many members of the community," President Derek Bok said.

In a two-page letter, entitled "Freedom of Speech in the Harvard Community," Bok said it is more dangerous to censor offensive expressions than to allow such displays. He also said the best way to protest such displays is to ignore them.

His advice came too late. Ever since the first Confederate flag was displayed two weeks ago, those who found the flags offensive have raised protests.

One Black student found the Confederate flag so distasteful that she hung a swastika out her window in protest, to make the point that the Confederate flag was as offensive to her as a swastika is to Jews.

Bok made it clear he disapproved of the displays.

"The fact that free speech is protected by the First Amendment does not necessarily mean that it is right, proper or civil," Bok said in his letter.

He also said it is unclear whether full free speech protections extend to private institutions like Harvard, but added that the University stands behind the concept.

"By the nature of their mission, all universities should be at least as concerned with protecting freedom of expression as the rest of society," he said.

The debate at the Ivy League school began when 21-year-old Bridget Kerrigan, of Virginia, hung a Confederate flag outside her window. Since then, two other students have also hung Confederate flags.

Jacinda Townsend, 19, a Black student from Kentucky, responded by hanging a swastika. She removed the Nazi symbol last week, because she feared it might cause conflict between Black and Jewish students.

"I didn't really like what he had to say because I feel as a private institution, they could do more to protect the students," Townsend said. "I can't ignore the blazing rebel flag. It's a symbol of physical violence."

Dianne M. Reeder, who said she put up a Confederate flag as a symbol of free speech and not of Southern pride, said Bok's statement was ambiguous.

"The flag has become a symbol of freedom of speech in this past few weeks," Reeder said. "How can you say 'I support this, and I'm not going to take it down, but I think you should take it down.' That's a contradiction."

Kerrigan, who first hung the Confederate flag, said it is an expression of her heritage. She said Bok's statement should have stopped with a discussion of First Amendment rights.

"His disapproval of the content of my flag is totally inappropriate," Kerrigan said.

Senate dissolves itself after three senators resign

By MARC ELLIOTT
Collegian Staff

The Undergraduate Student Senate dissolved itself last night, relinquishing all of its power to its coordinating committee, after three senators resigned, leaving the body with 58 senators, two short of the total required to operate.

The Senate may not act if the total number of senators on the roll drops below 60, the number needed to put quorum at 31, according to the Student Government Association constitution.

"Under no circumstances may the Senate conduct business if quorum is less than 31," reads the constitution. "Exempted from this rule is the coordinating committee which will act as it normally does when the Senate is not in session and the Senate itself when ratifying election results."

The coordinating committee, which is composed of committee chairpersons, the speaker, the treasurer, the president, and appointments of the coordinating subcommittee, met immediately after interim Speaker Jeff Turco adjourned the Senate. The committee then passed a motion to recommend the Senate, when it reconvenes, to delete the section of the constitution which demanded the Senate's suspension last night.

Former senators Richard Sugarman (Wheeler), Kathy Flaherty (Gorman), and Christine Lawler (Commuter Area) resigned in order to shut down the Senate and make a statement about the Senate's claim to represent the student body.

"The [Senate] tonight does not represent the student body but instead represents individual goals," Sugarman said. "I resigned in the hopes that what comes out of this will be more representative of the student body, things will be accomplished, and the infighting will cease."

Turco, who has not been recognized as the speaker by the administration, refused to accept the resignations of senators Anthony Hein and Amy Lesen (Third World Caucus), which were handed to him by Sen. Daniel Cohen (Third World Caucus), unless he was provided with proof that the senators had actually written the resignations.

"I believe Danny Cohen wrote them up himself without the knowledge of the senators," he said.

Hein, however, arrived later in the meeting to confirm his resignation, bringing the total number of senators down to 57.

"The letters are written in the hand and signed by the very individuals that resigned and I question [Turco's] judgment in such matters," Cohen said. "I consider Jeff Turco's comments to be slander, proven by the arrival of Anthony Hein."

Cohen applauded the resignations and said the Senate is not representative of students and should be "shut down."

Lawler said it is a "shame that the SGA can't work for students on student issues and that they waste their Wednesday nights fighting among themselves."

Turco accused the resigning senators of working for the administration's interests and not the students'. He also announced that the coordinating committee will meet at 7 p.m. on the first Wednesday after spring break and take Senate appointments from house councils to fill the seats needed for the Senate to meet again.

Student Attorney General Adam Scales said he thought the resigning senators were playing political games.

Women decry lack of freedom in occupied territories

By BRETT MORRIS
Collegian Staff

Women who live in occupied territories cannot be free, said a female resident of Northern Ireland who addressed a group of about 60 people at a panel discussion this week at the University of Massachusetts.

"Women can't have any true liberty, true freedom in any country that is occupied," said Chrissie McCauley.

McCauley, along with South Africa native Sabi Mthewcu and a Palestinian woman from the West Bank, who asked to not be named, led an international panel talk in the Campus Center titled, "Women in Occupied Territories."

Each woman discussed her separate nation's history of occupation and its affect on the female gender. Each said they have an inner desire to combat the occupation and discussed women's past, present and future role in the "struggle."

The Palestinian woman is in the United States to obtain a degree in Early Childhood Education from UMass. She described the past position of women in the resistance against Israeli occupation as, "traditional...providing meals for the man." However, she said, since the middle of the century, education has been a high priority Palestinian women's lives.

Today, she explained, women are educating the imprisoned, are the leading decisionmakers in the Palestinian struggle and are key supporters of the Palestinian Liberation Organization.

"Women are an active agent in everything," she said.

Mthewcu has been in the United States for more than one year and is presently a graduate student at American International University at Springfield. She stated that Black women constitute the majority of the people in South Africa and described them as the "breadwinners" in a society where the husband works in hard labor.

Nonetheless, she said, Black women remain at the "bottom rung of the social, economic ladder."

Black women are oppressed by the White government as well as Black males, she said. "They don't want women to be educated, to drive cars, have better jobs or to raise children."

Regardless, she said, women are now the majority in universities, and are filling positions in Black movement groups.

"Women have risen above a level and are taking leading roles inside and outside the home," she said.

McCauley is a founding member of the woman's department of Sien-Fein, a Republican party for the national liberation of Ireland from British occupation. She extended her belief that the woman's future lies in addressing and combatting the problems of British interrogation through "passive" torture.

Her specific concern within Sien-Fein is the battle against censorship, as women's history has been "written out," and the need for the future, or children, to be knowledgeable about the past.

"It's time these issues were addressed, once and for all so we can move forward as a nation for the first time in our history," she said.

Public schools burdened by bogus students

BOSTON (AP) — It may be flattering, but school officials say they can't afford to take students from other school districts.

The recent suspension of a Boston principal who allegedly helped the student illegally attend the prestigious Boston Latin School illustrates the problem, school officials say.

They say parents often lie about their addresses so their children can get into the best schools, mainly in the Boston suburbs.

Some parents, for example, make legal guardians for their children out of friends and relatives who live in Newton or Brookline, thereby making the students eligible to attend the prestigious suburban systems.

"It's a compliment to the Newton public schools, except we cannot afford the compliment," said superintendent Irwin Blumer.

"If we had the space, it would be wonderful to take them all, but we don't have the space or the money."

The arrest of a Rindge and Latin student in connection with a shooting in Attleboro recently was doubly embarrassing to school officials, who learned the youth was a resident of Boston, not Cambridge.

"A good number of kids get on the bus in Boston and get off in front of Cambridge Rindge and Latin," James Rafferty, a Cambridge school committee member, told the Boston Globe.

James Walsh, Brookline superintendent, said about 40 students a year are rooted out there because it is discovered that their families don't really live in Brookline.

The principal of the Martin Luther King Middle School in Boston, Steven C. Leonard, has been suspended without pay for helping another school employee to get her 11-year-old daughter considered for admission to the Boston Latin School.

The girl actually lived in Brockton, but Leonard allegedly signed a document saying she was a student at the King school.

'Coming out' manuscripts sought for anthology

By TRYSTAN SKEIGH
Collegian Staff

Three University of Massachusetts undergraduate women are soliciting manuscripts from the gay, lesbian, and bisexual community for an anthology of poems, essays, and "coming out" stories. Their project is part of an independent study for the Women's Studies Department.

Carrie Fisher, Sarah Getoff, and Jackie Griffith said they hope to publish the anthology to provide gay students with a record of their personal experiences.

"As an out lesbian/bisexual, or 'BYKE' woman on this campus, I have an interest in hearing the stories of my peers," Getoff said. "As a creative writer and GLB activist, making an anthology would give us all a voice for our life stories."

Griffith, who is Venezualan, says the anthology will include works in Spanish and English.

"There are quite a few gay Latino students here. Our first language is Spanish," Griffith said. "It's best to tell your own story in your own language.

I think the LBGA on this campus is not representative of all of the GLB community," Griffith said. "For instance, Latinos and people of color aren't well represented there."

The anthology will offer a more diverse view of the UMass gay community, Griffith said.

Submissions will be accepted through 5 p.m. Wednesday, April 24. They may be dropped off or mailed to the LBGA Office, 413 B Student Union, UMass. Submissions may be submitted anonymously.

Local towns tag kegs to help identify underage drinkers

By KURT MOFFETT
Collegian Correspondent

As of April 1, 1991, the towns of Northampton, Southampton, Easthampton, Huntington, Cummington, Granby, and Amherst will have put a keg tag law into effect.

There has been some hesitation, however, by Amherst and Granby police to enforce such a law unless neighboring Hadley and South Hadley obtain the law as well.

According to Chief Donald Maia of the Amherst Police Department, the seven communities "want to do it all together so that the area will be consistent."

Maia said the keg tag law "will identify where the problems are and help prevent underage drinking."

The tag law refers to an extra $50 refundable deposit which is put on the purchase of all kegs. The consumer must also pay the liquor stores' regular deposit.

A tag is placed on each keg sold. The consumer must then fill out an information sheet, connecting the purchaser to the sold keg. This system aids the tracking down of a keg, if necessary.

Consumers can only have their deposit returned with the return of an empty keg, he said.

Only the person who purchased the keg can return it and get his or her money back. If liquor stores do not comply with the tag law then they chance losing their liquor licenses, Maia said.

The purpose of the tag law is to help prevent serving alcohol to minors at large parties, said Maia. If the police break up a party in which minors are drinking beer from kegs, then the police can check the tag on the keg and track it back to the supplier. The vendor is then responsible, he said.

Several students on the UMass campus feel the police are just trying to find someone to put the blame on for underage drinking.

Although many students feel that while the number of kegs sold will be reduced, it will not prevent minors from drinking.

"It's just a silly theory. It's like they're trying to be Big Brother," said David Denny, a resident of Sylvan.

Christopher Johnson, from the Delta Upsilon fraternity said, "The tag law is not a good idea. Kegs are expensive enough as it is. Maybe in the long run after some people get caught, it will help prevent underage drinking. But I don't think one person should be held responsible."

However, Carl Rossow, of the Alpha Epsilon Pi fraternity, who attended a meeting regarding the tag law policy, said since UMass prohibits kegs on campus anyway, the law emphasizes preventing high school keg parties.

However, Debbie Fuckney, the social chair at the Sigma Kappa sorority, had different concerns. She worried that "hot alcohol [vodka and grain alcohol] is more dangerous." She said when members of her sorority attend a party at a fraternity, they are often served drinks from a punch bowl and at times are not told correctly what the punch contains.

In other words, they prefer beer because they can more easily control their alcohol intake.

In the case of the local liquor store owners, the attitude has been alcohol consumers that are 21 or older should have the right to choose what they want to buy without worrying about a tag law.

Those who are old enough should be responsible for their own actions, they said.

Some liquor store managers, like Pat Kelly of Scott's Liquors and Matt Quinlan of Spirit Haus, both in Amherst, said they are not worried about the tag law affecting their businesses. Most students will decide to purchase cases of beer rather than kegs, because they will want to avoid the responsibility and hassle of the tag law, they said. Since cases of beer generally cost more than kegs, they hope that their profits will rise.

Steve Snover, the manager of Liquors 44 in Hadley, said the law apparently will not be implemented in that town. He said he is "not aware of a problem" with selling and serving to minors.

Maia, however, said Hadley will eventually pass the tag law as well.

Candidate Collins criticizes 'destruction' of higher ed.

By JOHN SUTTON
Collegian Correspondent

James G. Collins, former Democratic state representative from Amherst, said the state has done next to nothing to do away with educational disadvantage.

Collins is seeking the Democratic nomination for the vacant congressional seat which was held by the late U.S. Rep. Silvio O. Conte (R-Pittsfield).

"Over the past four years, this state has been downright destructive to public education," Collins said. "As a very proud graduate of the University of Massachusetts at Amherst, I am angry at the ongoing destruction of this campus."

James G. Collins

Collins, 45, an attorney with an Amherst partnership, said he wants to be the first UMass alumnus to represent the Western Massachusetts district in the U.S. Congress.

Through 1986, UMass was on its way to becoming one of the world's greatest universities, according to Collins, who was chairperson of the Joint Committee on Education when he was in the state Legislature.

He graduated from UMass-Amherst in 1968, where he served as president of the Student Government Association.

He went on to serve terms in the state legislature, from 1973 until the summer of 1986, when he resigned his seat in order to serve as chancellor of the Board of Regents of Higher Education.

Since 1989, the state has cut the University's funds by 25 percent, depriving UMass of $42 million. At the same time, student tuition and fees have gone up 52 percent.

"The whole approach to tuition retention, which I used to kill in the legislature every year, is an absolute rip-off for students because it forces students that are already working and on financial aid to have to pay for the state's unwillingness to fund education," he said.

"I believe the state's most important duty is to supply everyone with a quality public education from preschool right through college, and on throughout a man and a woman's worklife, because our future is going to be in a knowledge-based economy," Collins said.

Collins praised Conte's leadership, and said he was always a gentleman, who kept a sense of humor and didn't take himself too seriously, but also managed to be in touch with the people he represented.

"The people [Conte] represented knew he would fight for them," he said. "If he got knocked down five times, he would get right back up. That is the spirit and tradition I would like to continue in Congress. It's the way I practiced the art of politics when I was in public life.

We are talking about letting people become part of the American Dream. That is worth fighting for, in Conte's tradition of scrapping and fighting. The next congressman or congresswoman from this district must be willing to engage in honorable battle for this University in this district and be satisfied with nothing less than success. That is the great legacy," he said.

Collins said he intends to raise $200,000 for the campaign's primary which is April 30. After the primary, Democratic and Republican parties would pour in $400,000 to $500,000 for the final election. If he wins the seat in Congress, he said he will first put his name on the campaign finance reform bill.

Collins was removed from his three-week position as chancellor by a group of new members to the Board of Regents, who Collins said were acting on behalf of Gov. Michael Dukakis.

Collins said he and the governor did not see eye-to-eye on recent tuition raises Dukakis instituted.

Collins said in 1985 he dounced on the floor of the House Dukakis' public education program as a "charade" and a "fraud." In 1984, Collins refused to compromise on an education bill, which was supposed to add $400 million to public education for kindergarten through 12th grade and higher education.

"As a congressman, I am going to be a fighter," he said. "I'm not going to make compromises with people who want to destroy opportunities and I'm not going to appease those who want to cut federal and state money to this University."

In 1986, when Regents Chancellor John Duff resigned, the board searched for a replacement. After six months of the search, supporters decided to put Collins' name into consideration.

According to Collins the board vote on the four candidates was deadlocked. The board then added two others, among them, Collins. Collins won with eight of the total 16 votes.

Many people incorrectly perceive Collins' educational interest as an end in itself, according to Jon Hite, director of the Northampton Housing Authority.

"He comes from a working class background. He understands that keeping tuition at a reasonable level translates into educational opportunity, which leads to a successful economic future for individuals and Massachusetts, " Hite said.

"He has the independence to fight against enormous odds," he said, referring to Collins' bid to remain as chancellor against the political pressure of the Dukakis administration.

"In politics so often, it seems candidates are only interested in votes and targeting groups. He shows a real sense of caring for all people and students in the town," said Eric Nakajima, formerly Gov. Dukakis policy coordinator for K-12 educational affairs and a former student trustee at UMass-Amherst.

"He's able to take problems and concerns and transfer that into what's going on in day-to-day politics without losing the human element of what's going on," Nakajima said.

Lesbians with 'feminine touch' find a group

By AMY HENRY
Collegian Staff

Feeling repressed by the lesbian community for wanting to have stylish hair, or wear makeup or a skirt? Do you want to socialize with other women who feel this way? The Lesbian Ladies Society for Lesbian and Bisexual women aims to create a space for you.

Cynthia Yockey, a freelance writer and computer consultant, said she felt she was being repressed by the lesbian community for wearing skirts and makeup and decided to form a group to accommodate other women who also felt this way. She had an article published in the Washington Blade, a gay newspaper, discussing the issue. She said she got several positive responses, and in 1988 founded the society in Silver Springs, Maryland.

"My experience is that feminine lesbians are discriminated against in the lesbian community as dupes of the patriarchy. We say our feminity is an expression of our being and is freely chosen. We have the right to define ourselves as both lesbians and feminine," Yockey said. "There's no statement that expresses more hatred for women and more misunderstanding then that statement.

"[I think that] because women are creators of feminity, to say they aren't is to say they have no self-authority at all."

The society is a social club that provides a place for Lesbians to "dress up" in a non-alcoholic and non-smoking environment. Women who attend meetings are required to wear a skirt or dress. "It's the easiest way to create a feminine atmosphere without getting into arguments about what's feminine and what isn't. The skirt/dress rule applies only to our meetings and we don't care what you wear any other time."

The group consists of 40 members and has a mailing list of 240. They meet once a month and are required to pay a membership fee of $12 a year to pay for directions and announcements of the meetings.

The meetings do not always surround issues of repression of being "feminine" said Yockey. "We talk about whatever issues people are dealing with at the time."

Yockey said she feels lesbians that are more masculine resented being made to feel inadequate for not being feminine when they were growing up. "I believe this association makes lesbians reject feminity and therefore find it hard to believe a woman could be a lesbian and not reject feminity," she said.

Yockey said she includes bisexuals in her group because they may have come to this identification out of lack of seeing any "feminine" women in the lesbian community.

"Some women who are in the group have come to us saying they got married because they didn't think they were lesbian, because all they saw at lesbian meetings were masculine women."

men's gymnastics

Junior Bill Sayman also said his next performance on the parallel bars would have to be spectacular to qualify.

Interestingly enough, the UMass gymnast with possibly the best chance of making the Regionals said he does not want to go.

"I don't want to go to regionals really," said sophomore Steve Christensen. "It's just an individual meet and it doesn't mean that much."

The Eastern Intercollegiate Gymnastics League Championships means a whole lot for the UMass team. The three-day meet (April 22-24) at Rutgers determines who wins the league title – something the team has worked hard for.

The team said they don't really mind the fact that they have to stay in Amherst over spring break, instead of some far off, exotic destination in the sun with their fellow students.

"I don't mind not having a real vacation," said Dave DiNucci. "It's just part of college gymnastics."

"When you're growing up you learn that college gymnasts just don't get breaks," said freshman Adam Gould.

One reason UMass has a good shot at the EIGLs is Temple's loss of junior Bill Roth. Roth, an all-American, blew out his knee in a meet against Cortland, according to Johnson. Roth, rated as the top all-around gymnast in the country, is also on the U.S. team.

"It's too bad. Temple was clearly favored in the E.I.G.L championships," Johnson said. "Without [Roth], any of the six teams Temple, Syracuse, us, Navy, Army or Southern Connecticut could win."

"I thought a big blow was dealt to U.S. gymnastics," DiNucci said. "We need people like that in our sport...but injuries are just a fact of gymnastics."

"I think it's a shame because the Olympics are coming up," Christensen said. "It would be tough for [Temple] to pick up the slack, but they're gonna try like hell."

The Minutemen have been on a roll lately, and with the final meet coming up, they look to prove why they should be champs.

"If everybody goes in and hits their routines clean, then we'll win [the E.I.G.Ls]." DiNucci said.

"If we put it all together and come together," Sullivan said. "I think we can win."

EDITORIAL/OPINION

The opinions on this page are those of the individual writer or cartoonist and do not necessarily reflect the views of the Collegian or the University unless otherwise noted.

Arrogance has its price

What has been the response to the end of the war?

Eighty-nine percent (Newsweek poll, week of March 11) of the American people support President Bush.

Life is back to 'normal' for most people. For some it is a relief that the 'war' is over and we do not have to think about it anymore. But the war has not ended. It's going on even as I write this column.

It's a battle of the minds, for life and for feeling. What has happened to us as American people? How is it that we can so easily disregard the Iraqis who have died. We bombed them for 44 days! Yet most of us do not know how many have died. Was this war worth it?

Minu Sebastian

Some will wonder why they should think about the Iraqis who have died or the destruction of Iraq. At least not many Americans died, it could have been much worse for us, right? This attitude is so pervasive — this inability to think about or reflect upon the experiences of another person.

Why don't we care? Why are we so arrogant? Why is it that we can't feel anything unless it is our own people, our own homes or our own country?

Many of us do not feel for someone unless that person is defined under our terms. If we can relate to the experience of another person, then we feel for them. Otherwise forget it.

Most of us have limited knowledge of history, geography, math and science. Yet we have the arrogance to believe that we know everything and that we are right. How can we believe in the actions of our government when we do not know what is going on?

The leaders of our government are generally well-educated. Many of them know the history of this country, geography and much about the outside world. They have strategic reasons for the decisions they make.

But what are the rest of the masses of us basing our judgments on? How can we so easily dehumanize Saddam Hussein and the Iraqi people? What do we really know about Saddam Hussein, Iraq or the Middle East? How can we so willingly accept that he is like Hitler and will take over the world?

What are we — stupid?

Who is the dominant force that shapes, controls and dominates the wealth of this world? Who has the most powerful military capability?

The United States of America.

But it's our home, it's where we and our families live, it's where we play baseball, eat pizza and drink beer. That's America and if ANYONE dares to question it, that person is inhuman, irrational and crazy. Who cares about history? Who cares about understanding what is behind our wealth? Who cares about what is behind our existence?

Where are our minds? Where is our feeling? Why can't we THINK? Think about someone else's reality and why that reality is different from our experiences.

For those few Americans who dare to question, dare to think and dare to feel, it must be recognized that our people are not behind us.

There is only one thing which can challenge the status quo.

Military Technology.

The battle lives on. Which side do you represent?

Exploding myths about women in the Arab world

I have had it up to here with ignorant individuals in this part of the world sounding off about their misconceptions of what the way of life in the Middle East is like.

I refer specifically to those who do not take the trouble to certify what comes out of their mouths, carelessly splatter it on paper, and then send it off to the Collegian to add to the barrage of nonsensical rumors already afloat.

I am sick of reading claims that the Kuwaiti royal family is not worth saving because The Emir has 70 wives and seven personal 747s. Other equally ridiculous notions include the belief that women in Arab cultures are oppressed and mistreated.

Farrah Sadiq

Let me tell all of you who consider themselves the 'champions' of Arab women and worshippers of the American way of life that I have grown up in an Arab country and that I loved every moment of it. Everywhere I went, I was treated with respect and honor. I was rightfully treated to exactly the same education and opportunities as the men in my family. Nothing ever made me feel as if I was in any way less important or wonderful than any male. On the other hand, I was made to feel special: My brothers could always be depended on to help me should the need arise, and even perfect strangers would treat me as if I were their own sister. Rape, battering, and other crimes against women were never anything more than words in Western newspapers to me.

As for the myths about multiple wives, allow me to clarify that this is the exception and not the rule. Only men whose wives are unable to have children may marry another woman, WITH THE PERMISSION OF THE FIRST WIFE. Remarriage is also allowed if a man finds a woman unable to satisfy his sexual desires; instead of having an extramarital affair, he is alowed to legally have more than one woman. And no man may marry more than four women.

Remarriage is also forbidden if the man is not absolutely sure he is going to treat each wife exactly the same, even down to the time he spends with each woman.

The obvious question is why women aren't given the same opportunity to remarry. Traditionally, the death rate of men has been considerably higher than that of women, due to wars and the nature of work men used to do. That left many widows or unmarried young women in the community. As an act of kindness not only to these women but also their children, surviving men were permitted to marry them and give them a family atmosphere and financial security. Since there is a reduced difference in the number of men and women nowadays, this phenomenon no longer applies. Hence, the decline of this tradition.

The final issue I want to address is the pet peeve of many who think that many Arabs are filthy rich. If you look at a tiny nation like Kuwait, the national gross product per capita is inevitably going to be immense, since there are so few people to spread the money.

Collegian article misrepresents status of Jews at Hampshire College

Alison Buckholtz's article, "Jewish Students At Hampshire Struggle For Acceptance" (March 12, 1991), should have been titled: "Members Of Student Jewish Group At Hampshire Bellow, In Unison With Every Other Group On Campus, About The Lack Of Attention And Respect They Get."

Buckholtz consistently quotes student Michael Seltzer throughout her article, but manages to put his most pertinent statement ("We don't represent the Jewish community at Hampshire") in her last paragraph. Instead, she chose to highlight such insecure and absurd statements as "We're nothing in the eyes of other people" and "There's a tremendous amount of insensitivity about the Holocaust at Hampshire, to the point where people trivialize it."

We have been at Hampshire for four years and we have never seen anti-Semitic graffiti. This is not to say that it doesn't exist, but that it doesn't exist to the extent which Buckholtz suggests. First year student Brooke Leviton claims that "Kill the Jews" and "Destroy Israel" were scrawled in bathrooms across campus. Well, either we didn't urinate for four months or Hampshire students wanted another cause for which to martyr.

Second year student Isaac Bromberg complains that "We're always having to prove a valid reason for (the group's) existence...what this group can do that others can't, why we need a certain space to have meetings." He feels that "money and distribution of resources should be proportionate for all groups." What Bromberg ignores, Buckholtz neglects to ask, and ex-chairperson for Hampshire's Community Council Finance Committee Stephan Jost points out is that those questions must be answered by every group who requests funding. Each student group must sit for hours at a time and haggle over the legitimacy of their own cause and the limited funds that are available. The Jewish Student Group on this campus is no exception.

Buckholtz also suggests that the views of Jewish students at Hampshire "(were) until recently, unspoken." However, this Jewish group has been together for two years, and there have been other Jewish groups in the past. Jost explains that "in the fine tradition of Hampshire organizations, not Jewish organizations, they often don't last more than a year or two."

On a campus of 1,200 students, where about 30 percent are Jewish, Buckholtz managed to find and focus on the very few who feel unaccepted and attacked for their culture and religion. Classes on the Judeo-Christian tradition and even on the Holocaust are taught each year. Seders and Shabbat gatherings are well publicized. The anti-Semitic graffiti is an aberration on a campus that is no less sensitive to the Jewish students than to any other cultural, religious, or political group that vies for specialized attention.

PARADE

Against tunnel-vision

"So do me a favor. Shut up about the poor, oppressed people in Northern Ireland. We don't live there. We're Yankees now, and like most White Yanks, we are spoiled rotten. We are the colonizers. This time we are the oppressors."

The above quote is taken from Pamela McCarthy's editorial ("What's acceptable in the US is an outrage in Belfast," March 1). While reading this editorial, a question came to mind that I would like to pose to Ms. McCarthy: Black people are being oppressed in South Africa, Chinese students who want democracy are being oppressed in China, Syrian President Assad is gassing people to death in Lebanon, the Soviet Union has attacked innocent citizens in Lithuania; should I shut up about these people because I do not reside where they do? Of course not. Ms. McCarthy is in dire need of a history lesson: Ignorance/apathy yields oppression and even death; remember the Holocaust?

Ms. McCarthy is using the Belfast issue as a springboard to complain about the double standard between foreign and domestic issues in the United States. While I agree that there is a lack of emphasis on our domestic issues, the advocation of ignoring foreign issues will only breed ignorance in domestic affairs. If someone is told "not to worry about what happens over there" because they don't live there, what happens when the "over there" is a local city, town or even a nearby neighborhood?

Americans must not only concern themselves with America, but also with the rest of the world. What Ms. McCarthy is advocating is isolationism, which will lead to ignorance. Ignorance breeds bigotry and false perceptions. Apparently, Ms. McCarthy is the victim of her own erroneous philosophy.

Beyond the 1st Amendment

For the past several years institutions like this University have been trying to find a way to legally suppress racist, misogynist, anti-gay and anti-semitic speech. 'Conservative Awareness Week' seems to have brought the issue to a head.

Some think that the gay-bashing that went on under the guise of "Straight pride" should have been suppressed by the University administration. And, the bigots that took part in the weeklong hate session claim that their 'rights' were violated by the angry mob that out-shouted their speakers at rallies.

Jeremy P. Levinson

Is hate-filled speech protected by the often invoked First Amendment? Is speech that is clearly designed only to offend protected? Is "You faggot!" a political statement? Does 'offensive' really convey the problems with offensive speech?

The issues here are complex. For example, the First Amendment only states that 'Congress shall make no law' abridging freedom of expression. Some take this to mean that people can do anything they like in public as long as no one gets physically damaged. Others say that constitutional protections do not extend to what is euphemistically called 'offensive speech.' In reality, most folks seem to think that all expression — except that which offends them — is protected.

And, there lies the rub. No one, especially progressives, should want to empower the government or the administration to suppress any expression — not because of some abstract legal principle, but because the government has shown that it construes as offensive that expression which threatens it. The government cannot be expected to decide what 'obscene' is, or what 'offensive' is, etc.

Moreover, laws and codes of conduct have never been able to suppress speech. Universities around the nation are bending over backwards to find bureaucratic/legalistic ways to suppress certain expression. And, they always fail — shot down by the courts or simply ignored by bigots. The search for a properly-worded policy goes on as if suppression by any other name were not suppression.

This discussion of 'rights' is a non-discussion.

One problem is that we use words without fully knowing what they mean or what they are supposed to mean. Do we really think that a gay person will merely feel 'offended' when they hear "Fags are all sick!" screamed at a public forum? Are swastikas and burning crosses merely 'offensive?' No. They are symbols and speech designed to threaten people and make them feel outside of the community. And, they do their job well.

So, the question becomes, "Do people have a right to live without fear, to feel a part of the community without having to be on guard all the time?" Clearly, the answer is yes.

How do we go about protecting that right without violating freedom of expression? The government — no government — has ever been able to do it. The UMass administration can't do it.

You can't legislate community standards — look at the plethora of pornography that came out of Victorian England. Community standards are just that; standards of behavior and conduct that arise informally. They even affect the way we think. Remember, 'nigger' has gone out of style as community standards have been changed through struggle. Community standards are the only important ones — they can't be written down yet they have much more force than law.

That's why everyone who turned out to shout down bigotry last week deserves a hand. I say with great pride that I live in a community that will not accept bigotry, that will beat it back so that all people might feel safe and at home here.

And, for you traditionalists — this isn't tyranny of the majority. The majority doesn't want the government or the administration to suppress the minority. Rather, people will directly fight for everyone's right to live unthreatened.

The University didn't have to stop last week's hate-session. Our community did the job. If enough people feel strong enough to put themselves on the line for justice, it's not censorship — it's democracy. Real democracy.

So to the few bigots among us: Say your piece. But, don't be surprised if a pissed-off mob shuts you down. It doesn't mean that your rights have been violated — it means you asked a question and the people responded.

Into the UMass morass

New Registered Student Organizations are not being registered until next fall. By that time, there should be even more groups ready to join the swollen ranks of the RSOs. Here are my suggestions for RSOs that aren't, but should be:

The Political Clubs:

● The I don't care what you say about me as long as you spell my name right club: You can hate them and say the most evil things about them. You accuse them (rightly) of being total bigots. They don't care, because it's all a big joke to us and please mention their names in the newspaper, preferably, the Times. The president is Ted Maravelias. See Ted! There's your name in print again!

● The Moderates Club: Everyone on campus is welcome to join. In fact, the 90 percent of the students who are sick of hearing about rallies would probably join. We would campaign for no rallies, the disbanding of political clubs (except ours) and the elimination of the SATF. I'm the president.

● The Official Gaybashers Club: Let's be honest. Not all of the homophobes are Young Republicans. Fear and ignorance transcend all political boundaries. Let's give those idiots official status, so we can really be angry at someone specific.

Mark B. Adler

The Support Networks:

● The Hassled Columnists Support Group: We get no respect from the UMass community and few of you folks even admit to reading the Collegian. Well, clearly you do because here you are and if you don't like what you read here, then you do better, damn it!

● Students for Respectable Religion: The SRR would try to restore respect for religion after all the notoriety that many radical fringe religious groups have given us. You may join our group which meets Mondays at 6 a.m. at the Hillel House and Fridays at 10 p.m. at the Newman Center.

The Nouvelle Athletics:

● Skateboard Punks to End the War: SPEW is actually a coalition of teenagers who menace FAC passers-by along with radical anti-war protesters who only want to remind you that even though the war is over, it's still nasty and everything is George Bush's fault. Their motto is 'Skateboarding is not a crime. War is.'

● The Arcade Lovers Club: You've seen us. You know who we are. Make it official, join us. We meet from 10 a.m. to midnight EVERY DAMN DAY OF THE YEAR. Dues are only $10 a day, in quarters only.

● HOOP — The Basketball Fanatics Club: Members include all those guys with painted faces who cheer better than the cheerleaders and know exactly how to humiliate the opponents and refs. Well, you may not know it, but they practice three times a week during the fall just to get ready for the season. Hopefully you will see an encore performance tomorrow at the National Invitational Tournament.

Other Groups:

● The Bookworms: These outcasts of society would only encourage reading, studying, writing, and other academics. Their membership is critically low right now, but maybe you could join them and double it. They meet every Friday and Saturday night in my room.

● The Mainstream Vigilantes Against Political Correctness: We don't advocate destroying the environment, being oppressive or loving war. We are just tired of those hypocrites who don't use plastic bags at Stop & Shop because they don't biodegrade. Kiddos, where do you think paper bags come from? Our motto: 'Save the Humans.'

Thank you, brother

While the bombs were landing on innocent civilians in Iraq, and while the Palestinians were being starved during the harsh curfew imposed on them as a result of the American-led recolonization campaign, every effort was made on campus to organize against this war.

Most students showed incredible apathy despite the fact that they were directly involved in supporting this war with their tax dollars. Others showed concern from a moral or intellectual viewpoint. Thus they went to lectures and teach-ins in order to engage in endless discourse. Only a minority came out opposing the war, trying to utilize every channel possible to voice a clear protest, sending a message of anger and disapproval of the government's action. Surprisingly, this minority was mostly White.

Eyad Kishawi

When Israeli and American gringos were invading Beirut in the early '80s, brothers and sisters from all over the Third World came to the defense of the Palestinians and Lebanese living there. Beirut was filled with Arabs from all over the Arab world, as well as Cubans, Nicaraguans, Salvadorans, Eritrians, Zambians, and South Africans. They realized that such a massive attack had to be deterred by guerilla resistance from different parts of the world, even if it meant abandoning their struggles and offering their lives. We all knew that the fall of Beirut into either Israeli or American hands meant more colonialism.

During this past invasion, while everyone knew that 40 percent of the frontline troops were Blacks, Latinos, and other people of color, people complained that this war was racist. Of course it wasn't racist because 100,000 innocent Iraqi civilians were killed, nor was it racist because there were approximately half a million casualties; it was racist only because the percentage of the ethnic composition in the army was unrepresentative of the Amercian population. These minorities, mostly Black, were standing shoulder to shoulder with the gringos aiming at the Iraqi troops and participating as enthusiastically in the air campaign. No matter what the conditions or reasons were that made them join the U.S. armed forces, they collaborated with the system, and to us, they are traitors.

Meanwhile, on the UMass campus, the African-American community was watching all of this in just as much apathy as most Whites.

When racist attacks were on the rise at UMass, as they have always been, almost every Third World-er, mostly foreign, including myself, stopped the lip service and came to New Africa House to participate in a takeover. Then, I was called the Palestinian brother. I didn't go there to jeopardize my life by creating an FBI file for myself, nor to get on the TV screen. I went there because I felt strongly that the Black struggle of de-colonization is my struggle. The history is not the same, but it is similar, and the colonizer is one.

During the last invasion, racism against all Arabs was on the rise, including FBI harassment and life-threatening situations. Our people were being slaughtered back home, and we refused to collaborate or watch silently. Meanwhile, the African-Americans at UMass were still calling me the Palestinian brother, and listening to rap and revolution songs. Music and dogma don't mean anything. Three formal invitations came out of the anti-war coalition to all organizations on campus to join the leadership as well as the constituency. Not even one African-American showed up. Most organizations I contacted said they could not take a political stand against this war since they were cultural organizations. Please teach us what culture and politics are, as if we are in a situation where our culture is so unthreatened and untouched that it is divorced from our politics. To me, that was White culture. For the past two years, I've been listening to brother dogma and male bonding and I'm sick of it.

Remember Malcolm X, who came in support of Abdul Nasser in Egypt, and other struggling Third World leaders. At the event commemorating his assassination for taking action against the war there were hardly any UMass Black students. He is probably turning in his grave. There is more to my struggle and culture than bourgeois university life and rap music.

I don't want to be your brother. My brothers and sisters are people who are consistently and actively resisting every White racist action. I believe in Malcolm X, and this is why my true brothers are not racist.

UMass should bring 'civility' to the bargaining table

February was African-American History Month, a time dedicated to remembering the history of African-Americans and their many contributions to American society. Several events took place on campus to commemorate this history and these contributions.

However, support for these events by the University's administration has been inconsistent with its actions.

Take, for a most recent example, University management's current refusal to allow professional staff members who are discriminated against to use the grievance and arbitration procedures of their union contract.

The professional staff union, affiliated with Local 509 of the Service Employees International Union, has proposed contract language regarding equal opportunity and affirmative action which incorporates in large part existing federal and state laws.

These laws were the product of years of struggle by African-Americans and others, and are a central part of the historical legacy which we were supposedly celebrating last month.

Fine, says management, we'll agree to include this language, but violations of these provisions are not enforceable as contract violations!

This would mean that if someone were discriminated against regarding a promotion or transfer, or the University failed to implement its own affirmative action policies, the employee's only option would be to hire an attorney and engage in lengthy, expensive litigation which might last for years while the illegal discrimination continued.

You and I know that this is an effort to discourage employees from enforcing their rights when they are violated.

If an employee could use the grievance and arbitration process in such a case, as s/he could for any other contract violation, s/he could be represented by the union at no cost. Also, if the case is resolved during the grievance process, it would only take a few weeks or months; and even if it went to full arbitration, it would only take a little more than a year, at far less cost to the employee and the University.

Fair and effective enforcement of these policies is in the interest of not only employees, but the University as a whole. When employees cannot afford to protect their rights to fair and equal treatment in the workplace, these rights do not effectively exist.

We urge the University's negotiators to change their position on this issue, and allow UMass professionals the opportunity to efficiently and effectively enforce their civil rights in the workplace.

University of Massachusetts at Amherst

The Coordinating Dean of Arts and Sciences, Dr. Frederick Byron, Jr., and Nu Chapter of Phi Beta Kappa are pleased to announce new members elected from the Junior and Senior classes. Phi Beta Kappa is the oldest and most prestigious American honor society in the Liberal Arts. It was founded at the College of William and Mary on December 5, 1776. Yale's chapter was formed in 1780, Harvard's in 1781. During the next century additional chapters of Phi Beta Kappa were added and in 1883 a national organization called the United Chapters of Phi Beta Kappa was created. At present, only 237 liberal arts colleges or universities have been accredited by the national organization and permitted to form chapters. In New England only six public institutions are so recognized.

Candidates do not apply for membership nor is application made on their behalf. They are nominated by the chapter's faculty members on the basis of their academic records as shown on their transcripts. Candidates must be majors in one of the three faculties of the College of Arts and Sciences and must satisfy certain grade-point, foreign language, and distribution requirements set by the national organization. Approximately 3% of Seniors with the strongest academic records are elected each year, one half of 1% of Juniors are selected.

For information on Phi Beta Kappa and its chapter at the University of Massachusetts-Amherst, visit the Phi Beta Kappa display near the card catalogue in the Tower Library.

YOUR DAILY HOROSCOPE
By JEANE DIXON

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Double-check facts and figures to prevent costly mistakes. Influential people help you make headway with a financial deal. Look for romance in unexpected places.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Steer clear of a tension-generating situation at work. You are ready to take on new projects now. Be wary of an alliance that could damage your credibility. Send someone a love note.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): The financial news is more encouraging than in the recent past. Buckle down to work. Higher-ups discuss advancement opportunities. Be as tactful as possible with the people you love.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): A new feeling of self-confidence is yours today. Educational affairs and banking matters deserve careful attention. Check personnel matters and expense accounts. Long-awaited good news arrives.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Your excellent rapport with a co-worker heightens your creativity. Learn to delegate more authority. A young person is eager to prove his worth. Extravagance could make a dent in your savings.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Welcome a golden opportunity to demonstrate your flexibility. Collect old debts. Dress comfortably but conservatively if you attend an after-hours function with your co-workers.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Your associates are influenced by your commonsense approach. Show true compassion toward a friend in need. Do what you can to help without asking personal questions. A blind date looks promising, but you must practice.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Be certain you catch the drift of what is really going on. Self-improvement projects boost your ego and income. An unusual assignment means an opportunity to learn new skills.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Creative endeavors mean higher earnings. Listen to what your colleagues have to say; much can be learned from pooling your ideas. A promotion rests on your ability to speak up.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Steer clear of joint ventures. Both time and money are at stake, and you cannot afford to lose either right now. Your romantic partner feels that you underestimate yourself. Take a few risks.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Avoid saying anything that smacks of envy or hard feelings today. Your associates look to you for leadership. A community campaign could introduce you to some interesting new people.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Greater teamwork will boost profits considerably. Take care of routine correspondence. Sincerity and loyalty count big with your romantic partner. Take Penn State over UCLA.

Babies at the Horse

By AMIE FINKELSTEIN
Collegian Staff

If you missed them last semester, maybe you didn't know who they were. They are one of the fastest-moving chart busters on the CMJ chart. They are the Boston trio, The Blake Babies.

The Blake Babies are John, Freda and Juliana, playing guitar, drums and bass, respectively. Bloomington, Indiana was where John and Freda called home until 1985 when they headed for Boston and happened upon Juliana, then attending the Berklee School of Music. In late '87 the Blakes released an EP, called Nicely, Nicely on their own label.

They then hooked up with Boston producer Gary Smith in 1988, who played a Blake demo for Billy Bragg and recorded seven songs to be their first European release, Slow Learner on Bragg's Utility label.

Signed to Mammoth Records in 1989, the Blakes recorded their album Earwig featuring such twang tunes as "Take Your Head Off My Shoulder," "Don't Suck My Breath," and "Cesspool." Earwig attracted national attention upon its release drawing enthusiastic raves from Rolling Stone, Melody Maker, Tower Pulse, and solid commercial alternative and college airplay, and lots of people began humming the Blake's brand of subtly ironic and biting pop.

The Blake Babies spent the first half of 1990 touring extensively and moonlighting on various projects ranging from training for the Boston Marathon to guesting on Susannah Hoffs', The Lemonheads', and Giant Sand's newest records.

The summer of 1990 brought the third American release, Sunburn, also on Mammoth, which showcases twelve new songs and in support of the Sunburn tour, the fabulous Blake Babies will be appearing live tonight at the Ironhorse with Atlantic recording artists Eleventh Dream Day.

The Blake Babies will play at the Iron Horse in Northampton tonight at 8:30 p.m.

Into the Woods

By DANIEL JOKELSON
Collegian Correspondent

Into the Woods is a personal piece of musical theater, and the ensemble of young and old faces in the UMass Theater Guild's production of this tragicomic musical will evoke an intimate response from each audience member. This is the l e of director Nicole Ch son, 20 cast members, and the large team of organizers and designers for the UMass Theater Guild's premier production this Spring. In all, over 70 students from the Five-College area have merged, submerged for the last month and a half, and hope to emerge with a challenging, poignant and hysterically funny version of this difficult Stephen Sondheim musical.

The musical is a mix of many Grimm fairy tales, including Cinderella, Rapunzel, Little Red Riding Hood, and Jack and the Beanstalk. In the first act everyone happily marries and the future looks rosy for them all, just like we've all been told by our parents as children. However, the second act proves to be a more even mix of laughter, brutality and disappointment, as the characters deal with responsibility and experience boredom, married life and death. The show maintains its humor throughout, but hopes to bring a clear message: "Be careful what you say, for children will listen" — a lyric from the show. "What a parent says to a child will always stay with them," says Chiasson, "and it's up to us to decide what [of what we've been told] applies, and in turn what as good parents to say to our own children."

Some musical highlights are "Agony" (sung by Rapunzel and Cinderella's princes), a satirical lament about married life, "Hello Little Girl" (The Wolf to Little Red Riding Hood), and "Stay With Me" (The Witch and Rapunzel). The characters have twists that will surprise and inject some realism into fairyland. Little Red Riding Hood, for instance, is as Chiasson puts it, "a blood-thirsty, sarcastic, Bart Simpsonish character."

No one character carries this show. It is an ensemble piece and because all 20 actors are putting in their complete energy and vision, the show is able to pick up the tempo after intermission and build the second half of the show into the focal point of the audience's hopes, realizations, and memories.

Into the Woods will be performed March 25-28 in Bowker Auditorium, UMass. $5 for the general public, $3 students/elders.

Deidre McCalla brings warmth and humor to political issues

By DAVID B. MASSEY
Collegian Staff

Deidre McCalla
Iron Horse
Monday, March 11

Transcending traditional musical boundaries, the self-identified "lesbian-feminist" folk singer Deidre McCalla brought her vibrant and emotional show to the Iron Horse Music Hall Monday night.

In an uplifting hour and a half of "acoustically-based pop music," McCalla, armed solely with a guitar and a mighty singing voice, performed to a primarily female audience of about 40. She played songs from her first two albums on Olivia Records, Don't Doubt It and With a Little Luck, as well as some new songs McCalla hopes will be recorded next year.

Currently on tour celebrating the release of her highly-praised second album With a Little Luck, McCalla masterfully blended beautiful lyrics, a sharp sense of humor, and inspiring vocals.

Some of her songs addressed the problems of society while others were about love and loss. "I sing about the times in which we live, both emotionally and politically," she said.

"Some people feel that my shows are not that overtly political. I regard everything we do as political," McCalla said.

"How we relate to each other as human beings, as friends, as lovers is really a microcosm of how we relate to each other in terms of the government, in terms of other countries, and such. So I think a love song is political," she added.

McCalla's most powerful songs included the unnerving "Oh the Earth" which warns of an imminent environmental catasrophe:"Oh the Earth she angry/ I feel her tremble/ And blood is boiling/ Deep inside her eyes/ The Earth she angry/ She's gonna stop us/ And save herself before she dies."

Other songs dealt with the problems of homelessness and government inaction.

McCalla's views, enthusiastically received by her audience, are based upon her feminist ideology. "I call myself a feminist because I have an analysis of the world that I believe it is set up on a system of dominance and submission, that men have systematically oppressed woman," she said.

She said she feels her music can't spur such changes in the present situation but can "affirm that such a change is happening. It is mostly a change that needs to take place in people's minds. I'm not really sure that art so much causes change, but reflects that change is happening," McCalla said.

In between songs, McCalla often inserted her own social commentary. She spoke of the stress that the Persian Gulf war has placed on people and blamed the war on the "masculine mentality." During this war, she said, domestic issues have been utterly ignored.

McCalla's set also included light-hearted songs such as "All Day Always:" All day and all ways, we celebrate/ each day, all ways/ all day, all night.

Fusing touches of pop, rock and soul, McCalla explored global issues and personal ones with equal honesty and skill.

"Against those odds, it's no surprise we fell [in the rankings]," Sortino said. "But I'd rather be number 13 than 157."

She said that on a national level, East Coast teams are neither respected nor revered because they are perennially viewed as weak competitors. The high ranking came as a pleasant surprise to her.

"My dream is to take a team to the College World Series and this is one gigantic step towards getting there," she said. "But what matters is what's there in the end."

She said she has the usual concerns about the team staying healthy but with three starters, including two pitchers, out already, she has reason to be cautious.

Pitcher Jen Devlin is out for the season with an entrapped nerve in her right elbow and Kendall Hodson will undergo knee surgery within the week. Her status has yet to be assessed.

Tracey Duest, a freshman shortstop from Portland, Maine, is out with a dislocated left shoulder. She may see a redshirt or limited action late in the season.

Aside from those rather severe injuries, the team looks healthy, according to Sortino.

Pitchers who will see a lot of play are junior right-hander Holy Aprile and sophomore righty Darlene Classey.

"They're a good one-two punch for us," Sortino said of the tandem. Aprile has accumulated respected honors in her two years at UMass, including Atlantic 10 Rookie of the Year and Player of the Year.

A veteran infield includes senior Bonnie Schilling at first base, senior Jen Miller at second, junior transfer [Onodaga CC, N.Y.] Barbara Marean at shortstop and sophomore Laurie Dondarski at third. Sophomores Amy Cockley, Tiffany Hodson, Stacey Nichols and freshman Rachel Lawson will serve as infield backup. Lawson, a Montana native, is also a reserve catcher.

Senior Cherie DellAnno will start behind the plate backed up by last year's A-10 Rookie of the Year Sherri Kuchinskas and junior Beth Fultcher.

Senior Chris Collins will see limited action due to her physical condition. She dislocated her left shoulder last year which was fully reconstructed then dislocated her right this summer.

"She's a great bat," Sortino said of her captain. "She's got good leadership qualities."

It is hard to tell who is more eager to get to California, to challenge West Coast competition, the coach or the players.

"We're sick of practicing. I'm sick of practicing," Sortino said. "It's time to play."

Last year the sq d returned from Cailifornia 5-9. But that was a much di nt team, according to Sortino. She said at the time the te n had nine returning players and 11 new players. This year only three new members have joins the ranks. And that can make all the differnce in the world.

"It's their mental maturity," Sortino said. "I can see it technically, as a team. They've very intense. We're ready to jump out and start."

Competition in sunny San Jose, California, will not be as pleasant as it may seem. A double header against Santa Clara will be backed against a double header against St. Mary's followed by another double header with Fresno and Missouri.

"Teams like Santa Clara and St. Mary's — it would be like playing Temple here," Sortino said. "The level of play is going to be high."

The team has also been invited to Bud Lite's National Invitational Tournament in San Jose March 21-22 where they will face Arizona State, Kansas and Sacramento State.

The remaining schedule is challenging and the team will not get much breathing space this season.

"There are no easy wins on our schedule," Sortino said of the tough shedule ahead but added, "We've got a lot to live up to."

Softball faces sunny skies, tough teams

By ADRIEN MATT
Collegian Staff

Already they're setting records and they haven't even played outside yet.

The University of Massachusetts softball team began preseason ranked 13th in the nation. Let me repeat that: The softball team was ranked No. 13 — in the nation.

No softball team at UMass has ever been ranked that high, according to head coach Elaine Sortino.

"I felt like I had died and gone to heaven," she said of the preseason ranking. Unfortunately, the ranking is past tense and the team has dropped to 19th since West Coast teams have begun their preseason schedules.

The softball cradle lies in California where UMass will compete during spring break against such national powerhouses as Santa Clara, St. Mary's, Fresno, Sacramento State and Arizona State. Because they are blessed with seasonable warm weather, most of these teams have 25 games or so under their belts already.

Gymnasts look to set school record

By MICHAEL MORRISSEY
Collegian Correspondent

As the men's gymnastics year winds down, can a pursuit of a University of Massachusetts record and the chance to win a league title keep the fire burning?

Perhaps scoring 270 points, thus setting a new school record, against Cortland could add fuel to that fire. According to coach Roy Johnson, the Minutemen could get their best chance to so on Saturday at 1 p.m. Cortland currently averages 250 points and will pose a challenge to UMass.

"I think they're a good enough team that they'll keep our scores up there and hopefully we can go 270," said sophomore Rob Thomas, "but I don't think they're gonna be a real big challenge for us."

"I think we can hit 270," freshman Tim Sullivan said. "We usually score pretty well there."

One huge challenge for a number of gymnasts will be to perform well enough for the Eastern Regional meet at Ohio State on April 5. Thomas said he hopes for a couple of great scores on the floor exercise to qualify as one of the best in the East.

LaSalle explores the Cage, NIT

By SAM SILVERSTEIN
Collegian Staff

When the National Invitational Tournament sent the University of Massachusetts men's basketball team to face Maryland one year ago the Minutemen were, in the words of senior John Tate, "a little scared."

The second time around, Tate said, will be a different story. The Minuteman squad that will take the court against La Salle Friday night at the Cage "knows what it takes to win," Tate said.

Tipoff is 7:30 p.m.

"Last year it was 'whoa, we're in the NIT,'" remembered guard Anton Brown of UMass' 91-81 loss in College Park, Md. "This year it's 'let's win the whole thing.'"

The Minutemen, 17-11, last played March 3, when George Washington bounced them from the Atlantic 10 Tournament. After a week in limbo, UMass learned Sunday night its season had been extended by at least one more game by the NIT Selection Committee.

"We've got a home game this year because of our fan support," UMass coach John Calipari said. "I think the respect we're receiving nationally should be a source of pride for the University."

La Salle, 19-9, finished the regular season tied for the Metro Atlantic Athletic Conference crown. A 57-50 loss to St. Peter's in the MAAC Tournament last weekend ambushed the Explorers' NCAA Tourney hopes.

La Salle features senior point guard Doug Overton and junior off-guard Randy Woods, rated by the Sporting News as the third-best backcourt in the country.

Together, Overton and Woods launched 15 3-pointers a game and accounted for more than half of the Explorers' 81 points per game this season. The Explorers average almost 24 3-point attempts per game.

"If [Overton and Woods] are making them, we're in trouble," Calipari said. "Our fans will be oohing and aahing watching them play. I hope not too much...."

However, Overton and Woods couldn't be better than some of the competition UMass has faced already this season, Tate said.

"They're good, but they're not any better than Mark Macon. I'm not taking anything away from them, but we've played against some great guards."

Forward Jack Hurd and 6-foot-9 center Milko Lieverst are the Explorers' principle big men.

UMass and La Salle played two common opponents this season — St. Joseph's and Temple. The Owls dropped a 91-86 loss on the Explorers in early January, and a month ago, St. Joe's beat La Salle 82-73.

Game notes: The game will be broadcast by WMUA 91.1 FM and WHMP 99.3 FM . . . UMass and La Salle have met once before, an 82-75 Explorer win in 1971. La Salle was coached by Paul Westhead. Jack Leaman was at the UMass helm. Rick Pitino scored two points in seven minutes off the bench for the Minutemen.

HoopContest V Rules

Welcome to the fifth annual NCAA men's hoop contest, or HoopContest V, sponsored by Sound and Music in Northampton.

As in basketball, the one with the most points wins.

Read on because you could win a $200, $100 or $50 gift certificate from Sound and Music. The points earned will be broken down by rounds: wins in round one will be worth one point; round two, two points; round three, three points; round four, four points; round five, five points; finals, seven points. Thus the total possible points adds up to 121. In case of a tie, prizes will be split.

Fill in the teams you think will win, using this form or a xerox of this and bring the filled form down to the Collegian during working hours by 11 a.m. Thursday. You can also fax us a copy of your entry (413-545-1592) or mail it (113 Campus Center, Amherst, MA 01003). Be sure to include your name, address and phone number on the entry form.

All prizes can be claimed at the Collegian and redeemed at Sound and Music in Noho. Every now and then, you'll be updated as to who is ahead and by how many points. Please don't call to find out how many points you have – we get a zillion entries and it's hard to keep track of them as it is. Good luck and keep shootin'.

AIDS hits home: Valley confronts epidemic

Negative reaction to AIDS linked to racism

By CHRIS MUTHER
Collegian Staff

NORTHAMPTON — The general public's unwillingness to confront the AIDS epidemic reflects issues of racism, classism and sexism, a panel of medical and legal experts said last night at the Unitarian Society.

Rosemarie Henson, the HIV program manager at the Center for Disease Control in Atlanta, said AIDS is becoming a leading death factor in young women, especially women of color.

"Although 19 percent of the women in the United States are of color, 72 percent of the women with AIDS in this country are from that group," she said.

She said the risk of AIDS in children is also increasing. According to the CDC, an estimated 2,000 infants across the nation are infected with HIV, and most will die by their third birthday.

The estimated 4,000 children born each year to HIV-infected women will be orphans in five years, Henson said.

The CDC is currently developing a guideline for prenatal care for women with AIDS, Henson said, but they are finding it difficult to establish a guideline without targeting women based on their ethnic or racial background.

"We don't want to perpetuate a view that might send the wrong message to women who are at risk," she said.

Larry Gostin, executive director of the American Society of Law and Medicine in Boston, said prevention of intravenous drug use or programs where users are given clean needles to prevent sharing have been almost ignored because it affects mainly the urban poor.

"Twenty-nine percent of AIDS cases of the total AIDS cases are a result of intravenous drug use," he said. "In the cities this disproportionately affects the poor, and the African American and Hispanic communities. We've turned our backs on those groups."

He said AIDS has focused attention on the inadequacies of the medical system because of its inability to help those who are poor and infected with AIDS.

The three panelists agreed that the AIDS epidemic can be compared to the syphilis and gonorrhea epidemics of the late nineteenth and early twentieth centuries.

Allan Brandt, an associate professor in the department of social medicine at the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill, said many people blamed immigrants coming into the United States for carrying and spreading syphilis and gonorrhea, much like the blame placed on minorities and immigrants for the spread of the AIDS virus today.

"It was a that sign the Victorian age of sexual restraint was coming to a close, people were looking for someone to blame, as if there were 'guilty' victims of syphillis," he said.

He said instead of pushing condom use and starting clean needle programs to help prevent the spread of AIDS, there is a pervasive misconception that people can change others' moral behaviors and halt the disease.

UMass student tells of his struggle with AIDS

By CHRIS MUTHER
Collegian Staff

Editor's Note: This is the first of a series detailing the AIDS epidemic in the Pioneer Valley. The names in this article have been changed in the interests of privacy.

James, a 20-year-old junior, sits in his dorm room, listening to music and doing homework like 24,000 other students at the University of Massachusetts do every day.

James is also infected with the AIDS virus, like another estimated 35,000 college students in the United States.

"I just wish I would die and get this hell over with," he said angrily, staring down at the floor.

He is from the Boston area, majors in English, has a small frame, light brown hair and likes music, tennis and baseball.

He said he had heard about Acquired Immune Deficiency Syndrome, but had never given it much thought, until he became infected with the disease.

His blue eyes cloud with tears when he talks about the night he became infected with HIV.

"It was a July night three years ago," he said. "My friend had managed to get me a fake ID and I wanted to go to a gay bar because, of course, I'd never been to one before."

He said he had been struggling with his sexual identity for about two years and wanted to "try out being gay" for a night.

"I was terrified when I walked into the bar, I was so afraid they'd find out I was only 17 and throw me out, but I made it in," he said. "Now I wish they had caught me.

"I still remember the thrill of walking in, the music was loud, everybody looked so good."

James said he went up to another man in the bar and asked him to dance and eventually went home with him.

"I never even thought to use a condom when we had sex, I was so caught up in this new, exciting lifestyle," he said. "It just never crossed my mind."

Two years later, when he got tested for AIDS, it crossed his mind.

"It just kills me, one night, that's all, one night, and now I have to pay for the rest of my life," he said. "I've sat up nights, just thinking if it never happened . . .

"At first I wanted to sleep with every man, woman and child, I didn't think it was fair that I should be the one who has to die, but I began to realize I wasn't the only one in the world with AIDS."

James said the worst part about having AIDS is living without the help and support of others that he was able to fall back on before.

"I've only told a few people that I'm infected, my mother, a couple of cousins and my best friend," he said. "If I told my father or my brother, well, first they'd kill me because I'm gay, forget about having AIDS."

He said he is afraid that if his floormates in his dormitory find out they will make his life unbearable.

"People have a lot of weird ideas about how AIDS is spread," he said. "I'm sure they would make my life hell until I moved off their floor."

James has been diagnosed as having full blown AIDS, but said he feels fortunate to have remained healthy so far. He attributes his health to a complex vitamin treatment a "natural healer" prescribed for him and his participation in sports.

"I want to be able to graduate and have a normal life like everybody else in college gets to have," he said, resting his head in his hands. "I feel like I've been singled out to die."

Sharon, his best friend since high school, said she has noticed a "complete turnaround" in James since he found out he has AIDS.

"He used to be happy a lot. He would talk constantly about how he was going to be a famous author and his books would be made into movies," she said.

She said there have been nights when she has had to talk James out of committing suicide and many more nights when she has sat up late with him, holding him while he cried uncontrollably.

"James is extremely special and important to me," she said. "I don't know what I'll do if he dies."

Like hundreds of thousand of other AIDS patients around the world, James continues to wait for a cure for the disease that he said has ruined his life and "removed my trust in the world."

"Ever since I've been infected I haven't been able to look at things the same," he said. "All I can think is 'Will this be the last time I see my mother?' or 'Will I ever be in this class again?' It's an unsettling thought."

Film links explicit videos with violence

By FARRAH SADIQ
Collegian Correspondent

A beautiful blonde with endless legs is dancing intimately with a man in a predominantly male-occupied bar. She giggles as his hands wander suggestively over her body. He lifts up her tight miniskirt. She giggles again, but a little nervously this time. She wriggles uncomfortably and tries to stop his hands, which are now pawing her all over.

He is out of control, though. With sudden violence, he lifts her bodily off the ground and sprawls her onto a pinball machine. She begins to struggle vigorously but it is useless. He pins her, his hands tightening around her throat. Her eyes bulge out of her head as he slobbers brutishly all over her face.

Two men leap forward and restrain her flailing arms as her assailant pulls off his pants. Tears streaming down her twisted face, she cries out. Her voice is drowned by the loud music and the cheers of the men watching. To a chilling chorus of cheers, the man plunges repeatedly into her.

Suddenly Billy Idol's leering face appears on the screen while women crawl in the steamy background. Another shot shows a scene from a rock video where bikini-clad, bronzed women are sliding up and down microphone stands. Instead of blaring music, though, the cries of the woman being attacked fill the room.

The screen then returns to the rape scene, where each of the men in the room is cheered and jeered into raping the woman.

With this video, which juxtaposes scenes from popular rock videos with footage from the movie "The Accused," communications Professor Sut Jhally tries to show how women's portrayal in rock videos, among other mediums, contributes to rape and other violence against women.

Titled, "Dreamworlds: Desire/Sex/Power in Rock videos," the video addresses issues such as the depiction of women as stereotypical sex toys in rock videos and how this portrayal can occur in the actual behavior of the audience.

The video, shown in the Campus Center Wednesday night by the Progressive Organization for Women's Rights and the Everywoman's Center, said videos serve as advertisements for records and are therefore created with a specific audience in mind. Rock videos target male adolescents and cater to them by putting their forbidden fantasies to music.

While the video stresses that rock videos are not the sole contributors towards violence against women, it says the images they portray support the mentality many men have regarding women.

The way the women in videos dress, the techniques used to photograph them, and the way these women behave are all realizations of men's fantasies about women, the video said.

"The women of rock videos are shown as nymphomaniacs," Jhally said. "They constantly need to have sex with any man or object available. They are shown fighting over men, hunting men in groups, and being totally consumed by their lust. In fact, if they can't be with their men, they go insane."

The video goes on to say that these women feel the need to take off their clothes given the slightest excuse. They dress using the minimal amount and most suggestive type of clothing possible and they are often pictured showering or standing in cascading rain.

While discussing techniques of photographing women, the video said that women are portrayed as being robotic clones, void of individual thought or personalities. They are often filmed from underneath, or only certain body parts are shown, with the face being the least important attribute, the video said. It also said women are seen as being passive towards violence, inviting sex.

After seeing women as constantly in need of sexual sustenance, seeing them being grabbed, blindfolded and tied up by their favorite rock stars, the young people who watch the videos come away seriously misled, the video said. They see in videos that women really mean "yes" when they mean "no," that women can't live without men, and that they welcome the sexual violence being inflicted upon them, the video said.

The film provides statistics which show the effects these images have on their viewers: one in every six college women is raped; one in four women is raped in her lifetime; a large majority of women know their attackers and a large percentage of rapes occur on dates.

Sixty percent of men think they have the right to rape a woman if she asks them out or if they spend money on the date and 40 percent of women agree, the video said. One-third of all men believe "it would do some women some good to be raped."

In an informal discussion at the end of the film, one woman said, "I feel threatened and unsettled. Why do they have to portray women like that?"

A man who introduced himself as a graduate student related how his male classmates' behavior on a recent night made him uncomfortable.

"They told me to lighten up and 'be one of the guys,' " he said. "It's the way we've been trained to think."

The discussion also raised questions of why women are depicted as being powerless and easy to exploit, and what effect these images have on the young females watching the videos. The issues of racism and sexism in videos were also discussed.

Several people mentioned that they were seeing the video for the second or third time and that it still shocked and moved them very deeply.

Richard Graham is the fifth of those hurlers.

However, UMass' youth is experienced. Meaney turned in team-best numbers in his freshman year, going 6-0 in 12 games with a 2.52 earned run average.

Meanwhile, sophomore infielder Steve Corradi led the team in runs with 45 and stole a team-high 20 bases on 22 attempts — all in his first year.

The one concern Stone has about all this youth is how consistently it will play. Consistency was a question mark last year for the Minutemen and, according to Stone, it will play a large role in how well the team does this season.

"We have nine pitchers who we've seen pitch extremely well for us at times," Stone explained. "We'd like to see that all the time, not only from our pitchers but across the board."

Offensively, the Minutemen return eight starters who hit .300 or better last season, including catcher Derek Dana (.338, 49 hits) and right fielder Brian Bright, who led the team with 36 runs batted in and 10 home runs.

"But that was last year," Stone pointed out. "We have a good bunch of people who work hard, but now it's time to find out what they're made of."

On the defensive side of the field, Corradi will move from the outfield to third base, where he was a Cape Cod League All-Star this past summer. Ian Torres will move to first base, while John Carelli will inherit second base. Glen DiSarcina remains at shortstop and Dana will catch.

In the outfield, Bright and Mike Tobin return to their right and center field positions, respectively. Senior Dave Edwards, junior Joe Riggi and freshman Justin Howard will compete for the left field slot. Lou Olivieri, in addition to backing up Dana as catcher, will be the designated hitter.

POISON PREVENTION — Barbara Bush makes a face at Elizabeth Newberg, 3, during a ceremony for National Poison Prevention Week.

Former POWs talk about their ordeal

WASHINGTON (AP) — Seven former prisoners of war told stories of fear, loneliness and mistreatment yesterday in their first meeting with reporters since returning from captivity in Iraq. Two of the former POWs said the statements they made on Iraqi television were given against their will.

"About 90 percent of the time you felt you were in danger of losing your life," Navy Lt. Jeffrey N. Zaun of Cherry Hill, N.J., said at a suburban Washington hospital.

Zaun, Navy Lt. Lawrence R. Slade and five Marines appeared on an auditorium stage at the Bethesda Naval Medical Center where they are undergoing treatment,.

Marine Corps Lt. Clifford M. Acree said that statements made by the POWs on videos for broadcast by the Iraqis were made under duress, but he declined to go into details.

Zaun, describing the making of the videos said: "They took me to a TV studio and sat me next to the big guy and then told me what questions they were going to ask and they told me what my answers were going to be."

He said he tried to 'screw up' his answers but he didn't think it made any difference because they were translated into Arabic anyway.

In the Iraqi TV broadcast, Zaun spoke in a slow monotone and said: "I think our leaders and our people have wrongly attacked the peaceful people of Iraq."

At yesterday's news conference, Zaun said he was apprehensive that Iraqi leader Saddam Hussein might use the videos to convince his people that they were winning the war, but he didn't worry about the reaction of Americans.

"I had enough faith in Americans to know that anybody who saw this was going to say, 'This is ridiculous,' " he said.

Zaun, whose badly bruised face was widely pictured in the United States after the video, said about 90 percent of his facial injuries occurred during his ejection from his airplane and "maybe a little bit of it was getting slapped around."

He said he also 'banged my nose' in the hope that he could disfigure himself so that he would not be shown on television.

Capt. Russell Sanborn of the Marines described captivity as a 'terrifying experience' in which the prisoners were kept in solitary confinement.

"There was some mistreatment and the food was less than adequate," Sanborn said. He described the medical treatment as 'minimal.'

Marine Corps Capt. Michael C. Berryman of Yuma, Ariz., said: "It was very difficult coping with the interrogation." He said he was helped by his religious faith.

McDonald's adds new low-fat hamburger to its menu

CHICAGO (AP) — McDonald's is breaking away from the fast-food pack with its new, low-fat hamburger, but so far it's finding no followers.

The national debut of the McLean Deluxe, the latest effort to appeal to hungry and hurried health-conscious consumers, was announced Wednesday.

The burger, already tested in five cities, will be offered beginning next month at all 8,500 U.S. outlets and all 625 Canadian outlets.

"It'll be on the menu for as long as consumers like it, and I expect that'll be at least a couple of years," said Ed Rensi, president of McDonald's U.S. outlets.

The burger contains 9 percent fat by weight, less than half the fat in McDonald's other hamburgers. The key ingredient is carrageenan, a seaweed derivative.

Officials at Burger King, Wendy's and Hardee's, all major competitors, said they had no immediate plans to introduce a similar low-fat burger.

Hardee's even knocked McDonald's new offering.

"McDonald's may be on a dangerous course," said John Merrit, a spokesman for the Hardee's Food Systems, Inc., based in Rocky Mount, N.C. "[The McLean Deluxe] is not a hamburger. It's a carrageenan pie."

The hamburger is part of a larger trend in the fast-food business toward cutting fat and calories.

This month Dunkin' Donuts introduced a cholesterol-free doughnut, continuing a direction taken when it added oat-bran muffins a few years ago.

Kentucky Fried Chicken recently began offering, in the Northeast, skinless fried chicken, which has less fat, fewer calories and less cholesterol.

Other chains offer salad bars, baked potatoes, low-fat milkshakes and grilled or broiled meat and chicken. Most use vegetable oil rather than lard for frying.

McDonald's has little to lose with its low-fat burger, said John C. Maxwell, Jr., a food and beverage analyst with Wheat Butcher and Singer in Richmond, Va. People are moving away from red meat to other foods, and 'this is a response to that movement,' Maxwell said. "They've been fiddling around for some time with tacos, pizza and fish, and I'm sure some of this will come to fruition."

The suggested price for the McLean Deluxe is $1.79. The 3.75-ounce patty comes with lettuce, tomato, mustard, ketchup and pickles. With trimmings, it contains 310 calories and derives 29 of its calories from fat. By comparison, the Quarter Pounder has 230 calories, 44 percent of them from fat.

When the McLean was test marketed last year in Pennsylvania, customers interviewed gave it mixed reviews. Martha Hoak from Camp Hill thought the McLean was delicious. "It tasted very good to me," she said. But Joan Mullis of Shiremanstown said, "It wasn't as tasty as a regular burger. It was kind of blah."

Panel: Media lost war against the military

By MICHAEL LINSKEY
Collegian Correspondent

The American media did not adequately inform the public about the Persian Gulf War and need to reassess their strategies for gathering information in light of government control, a panel of four editors and a media watch group member said Wednesday.

The panelists, Stephen Aubin, editor of The Defense Journalism Review, Mitchell Levitas editorial editor of The New York Times, Micah Sifrey, assistant editor of The Nation, Randolph Ryan, who writes a column for The Boston Globe, and Ada Sanchez, a member of a local media watch group, each spoke briefly and then took questions from the standing-room-only audience in Memorial Hall.

Aubin, also a research fellow at the Center for Defense Journalism at Boston University, said, contrary to other panel members' opinions, that there was little evidence of press censorship during the war.

"The only things they couldn't report were the numbers of troops and equipment, their locations, and information regarding future operations," Aubin said. "There was no universal censorship, as members of the press would have us believe.

"What took place in the Gulf," he said, referring to the military's control of information, "was not only reasonable, but fully justified."

But Levitas said press censorship was far more pervasive.

"Press control was nearly total," he said, noting that reporters who were caught breaking military press rules "were threatened with expulsion and withdrawal of their credentials."

Citing the early 1980s examples of Grenada and Panama as evidence, Levitas said that military control over the media is not a new concept. He also expressed concern over the apparent public acceptance of military censorship.

"What we have now is a war being reviewed under total control of the Pentagon with intentions that are honorable, but which serve their own means," he said. "I hope this behavior is never repeated again."

Sifrey, also a specialist on the Middle East for The Nation, criticized the military's exclusion of Nation reporters, among others, from the media pools covering the war.

Because of this, several media outlets are suing the U.S. Department of Defense for allegedly violating their Constitutional rights to free press and equal access to information.

Sifrey said that the Pentagon withheld certain facts and released only what they wanted the public to know, thereby controlling the news. "The same people who brought you the presidential campaigns of 1984 and 1988 have brought you the Persian Gulf War," he said.

Ryan said reporters imposed the censorship on themselves by deleting from their reports any material which Pentagon officials might deem inappropriate.

"The most important controlling of the war news was not done by the Pentagon," he said. "Rather, the controlling was done by the American press."

The press must accept some blame for the ex..'ence of war censorship, Ryan said, but added that the Defense Department was guilty as well.

Ryan said he suspects that Pentagon estimates of 40,000 to 50,000 Iraqi casualites are low and that 150,000 dead is probably a more accurate estimate. "The huge Pentagon cover-up now is that they don't want to talk about Iraqi casualties," he said.

Finally, Ada Sanchez, a member of Fairness and Accuracy in Reporting (FAIR) at Hampshire College, denounced the reporting found primarily on television

A blessed relief from the cheesiness of St. Paddy's Day

The Lament for Arthur Cleary
Curtain Theatre
Wednesday, March 13

This time of the year, we traditionally become overwhelmed by the nauseating amount of shamrocks, leprechauns and miles of cheesy green ribbon. Yes, the Feis na Padraig is rapidly approaching and the current production at the Curtain Theatre is a welcome relief from the overly sentimental Hibernomania which is seething all around. Dermot Bolger's The Lament for Arthur Cleary, presented by Aer Lingus and the Five College department of Irish Studies, shows us a vision of Ireland as a complex, modern nation with modern problems.

Not the least of these problems is the chronic unemployment which forces millions of Irish youths to leave the country in search of a livelihood. To quote the play's opening scene, "Young people are to Ireland what champagne is to France . . . plucked for export." Arthur Cleary, played by Brendan Laird, is one such Irishman who returns after "15 years of limbo" working in the factories of continental Europe. Out of nostaglia, he decides to visit a nightclub where he had danced in earlier days. This gives us a realistic view of Dublin nightlife, complete with obnoxious doormen, exorbitant cover charges and lots of fun.

Of course, none of Arthur's old crowd are around, but he does meet up with Cathy (Hilary Fannin), a girl who is 17 years younger than he is. Cathy's father mistrusts Cleary, deriding him as a "fly-by . . . a knacker in a leather jacket." However, love prevails and the couple eventually share a flat in a low-income estate.

Their life together proves to be tragic, because they are looking for different things. Cathy is attracted to Arthur's worldly sense of romance and sees him as a way to escape the dead ends of Irish life. She pines for the "freedom of some city, where if you walked down the longest street, no one would know your name." Cleary however is tired of the exile's life. He wants to establish a real home in his homeland. Unfortunately, he finds that this is no easy task. The Ireland he returns to "with just myself, and a bottle of brandy, and the stubble of three days travel," is still a place where the line at the dole office is best for reminiscing with old friends. As the situations gets more and more desperate, Arthur is offered a job working for his childhood nemesis, Dingham, a loan shark and heroin dealer. Cleary then faces a growing crisis.

Unfortunately, at the opening nights performance, Arthur's character never quite developed to the point where he was completely believable or worthy of our sympathy. This may be a flaw in the script for Laird seems to be a solid and competant actor. In any case, he was perhaps doomed to be overshadowed by Fannin's Cathy. Her transformation from a shy girl at a disco to a strong young woman was portrayed with fire and passion, as well as humor. The three other members of the cast did a good job with a variety of supporting roles. Throughout, the players spoke, not with the corny brogue we'd find in a Lucky Charms commercial, but in a genuine dialect of Dublin's working class.

Murky, but effective lighting worked well with a set that was simple but powerful. This created an atmosphere which was somewhat bleak, yet gritty and realistic. In fact, throughout the play, director David Byrne (no, not that David Byrne) employed a minimalist aesthetic that dispensed all the usual Irish paraphenalia except for the characters' poetic spirits and the will to survive.

The Lament for Arthur Cleary will be performed Friday night at 3 p.m. and 8 p.m. If you're still here, check it out. Tickets are $5 for students and $10 for the general public. For more information, call: 545-2511.

news broadcasts.

"One of the most distressing aspects of it was the euphoria at the beginning, during, and after the war," she said, referring to network coverage. "Reporters essentially abandoned all neutrality. It seemed that any discussion of peace was the real enemy."

The symposium was co-sponsored by the journalism department and the American studies program and was moderated by journalism Professor James Boylan.

EDITORIAL/OPINION

The opinions on this page are those of the individual writer or cartoonist and do not necessarily reflect the views of the Collegian or the University unless otherwise noted.

I just want to live in peace: Life in the UMass dormitories

Noisy stereos at 3:00 a.m., inconsiderate floormates who throw up on the bathroom floor, Cluster Offices that are unexpectedly closed, forcing residents to wait a few days before claiming their packages . . . Do any of these situations sound familiar?

For a lucky few, problems in residence halls are nominal and sporadic.

Unfortunately, many people I know have found living conditions to be so intolerable that they dream of off-campus apartments long before their junior year.

Johanna Chapin

I am one of those sophomore dreamers.

Last semester, my roommate and I were forced to change residence halls due to the noise problems we encountered. Our next door neighbors flagrantly disregarded quiet hours. We would ask them politely to be quieter (a reasonable request at 3:00 a.m.) only to be laughed at.

We brought the problem to our RA, who arranged a "settle our differences" meeting. My roommate and I proposed studying elsewhere in the early evenings so they could socialize before 11:00 p.m. in return for their silence at 3:00 a.m. This proposal was responded to with the sentiment that they had paid for their room and therefore were under no obligation to change their lifestyle.

We then talked to our RD, who, while sympathetic, was entirely ineffective.

The noise continued until, in desperation, we moved off campus for the month of December. Yes, in addition to residence hall fees we paid apartment rent to ensure that our rest during finals was not jeopardized. Our floormate on the other side of our neighbors' room was even more inconvenienced; she had to commute from her hometown (40 miles away) during finals, as she could not rest or study in her room.

This experience has completely soured me on the subject of campus housing.

While landlords, rent prices, and grocery shopping can certainly pose problems, nothing could possibly be worse than the trials I endured. After being treated so shabbily, I refuse to support the residence hall system next fall when I will have the option of living off campus.

Housing staff, I hope you are not dismissing this as the work of a complaining, egotistical student. I was once involved in residence hall activities and looked forward to spending most of my undergraduate life living on campus. After this experience, however, nothing could convince me to come back, not even Voice Mail, Microfridges, or cable TV. If free room service and jacuzzis were available, even that would not entice me.

I would advise Housing staff to handle future residence hall complaints more effectively than mine were dealt with.

Insufferable experiences such as mine are exactly what line the pockets of Amherst landlords.

Johanna Chapin is a UMass student

Let me tell you something about straight pride

I am writing this letter to inform the campus about what the straight pride rally was truly about. Trystan Skeigh's article on Wednesday, March 13 ("There exists no right to make people live in fear") did not actually portray what this rally was all about.

In the past I had great respect for Ms. Skeigh's objective articles concerning the conservative movement at UMass.

However, with this article Ms. Skeigh has proven that she is no better than the rest of her Collegian cronies. Her assumption that the Republican Club's position against gay rights is synonymous with the notion of gay rights so gays can live as equal human beings is ludicrous! The operative word in this sentence is EQUAL.

If Ms. Skeigh acted maturely enough during the straight pride rally instead of exhibiting her overt heterophobia, she quite possibly could have learned something. Namely, what straight pride is all about.

The aims of straight pride were two fold. First, heterosexuals on this campus sought to show their pride in their sexuality (like the homosexuals do) since we feel our rights as heterosexuals are trampled on daily at UMass.

Second, and of equal importance, was the Republican Club's commitment to ensure that homosexuals are treated equally. However, homosexuals will never achieve this equality if they continue to accept special privileges such as appointed seats to the BOG and their own section in the Collegian. These privileges are granted solely on sexual orientation, not on merit. Does this not go directly against what the homosexuals desire? That is, to be treated equally, regardless of sexual orientation?

As is the case with many other liberal organizations, the LBGA's position is one of hypocrisy. Equality means just that — equality. Therefore, by accepting these special benefits on campus solely because of their sexual orientation does not promote equality. In fact, it makes homosexuals "super-equals".

Believe it or not, the conservatives and the Republican Club are the ones striving for true equality for EVERYONE! Those other groups are trying to use their sexuality to gain unfair political perks at the expense of the rest of the UMass student body.

Glen Caroline
President, Republican Club

Greek and gay: Breaking stereotypes

One goal of our university is to dispel stereotypes. Many of those stereotypes are about Blacks, women, gays, lesbians and bisexuals — to name a few.

I would argue that the Greek area has also been unjustly stereotyped, but in a different way. Greeks choose to rush and pledge and they are free to de-affiliate if they choose; whereas one cannot de-affiliate from one's gender, race or sexual orientation.

However, stereotypes plague the Greek community. It is not my goal to educate those who are uninformed about all of the Greek's accomplishments as far as philanthropy projects and the like. I am more concerned with discussing the image and attitude of the Greek area.

Raj/Ojerholm

When people, unfamiliar with the Greek system, brainstorm the words "fraternity/sorority" the following words may come to mind: Keg, beer, bimbo, homophobic, police, drugs, noise, exclusive, hazing, elitist, parties, girls, etc...

My experience would add words to this list: Friendship, respect, acceptance, leadership, community service, tolerance, support and (surprising to some) diversity.

Perhaps it has been taboo to discuss gays in the Greek area, but so much for that. There are gays, lesbians, and bisexuals in the Greek Community (as there are everywhere). Some, for whatever reason, choose to be invisible.

One might ask, why would a gay person join a fraternity? There are many answers:

Return to your fraternity house ten years later and you will find you are not forgotten. The paint is different, but your picture is still there. New faces inhabit the house, but you are part of the brotherhood. Go back to J.A. and find that your floor has sunk to ground level under the weight of vomit.

The gay community is made up of many classes, races, interests, ideals, etc. The myth that gay people only enjoy the company of other gay people is absurd. Actually, the Greek community can offer more than homophobia to gays.

The image of the Greek area has been unfairly trashed at this University.

People should rethink their prejudices about the Greeks and perhaps think before they speak. It is essentially a diverse group with many different interests, and should not be stereotyped. Once the biases are removed, maybe then we can appreciate all the good services and accomplishments the Greeks have done and will continue to do.

As for the Greeks, if you believe that there are no gay, lesbian, or bisexual brothers or sisters in your house, I'd have to say you are fooling yourself. If you think that you can ignore the issue, you're probably right (for now). But, if you can face up to your gay brothers and sisters and deal with them, I'd say you deserve all the credit I have bestowed.

Jon Raj and Eric Ojerholm are UMass students

Genocide is no joke

The other day a student asked if I wanted to hear any of her "Iraqi jokes." In my experience, such jokes serve the dual purpose of denigrating the "other," who is already suffering, while reinforcing the illusion of the "great self."

Unfortunately, one such joke was forced upon me on the front page of the Collegian. President-Chancellor Duffey was criticizing the "great" state of Massachusetts for not fulfilling its commitment to higher education.

"Yes, this is Massachusetts, the education state," Duffey is quoted in the Collegian, "retreating from its proud heritage and commitment like an Iraqi tank column in full flight."

Surely Herr Duffey realizes that supporting the military-industrial complex is a higher priority for the government of this state, and this nation, than is education. Why? Because this society is built more on the exploitation of resources, labor and technology from "Third World" peoples than it is on Yankee ingenuity. Since Yankee ingenuity, which is not exactly bursting at its seams, is not being promoted, the United States has obviously decided to guarantee its continued access, by force, to "Third World" resources.

Obviously Bwana Duffey is not sincere about providing universal quality education or he would not be promoting the same ideology that allows a nation with five percent of the world's population to consume over a third of the world's resources and destroy anyone who stands in its way. Then again, why would he want to change a system that pays him over $100,000 a year, plus benefits, for making remarks that are, at best, insensitive.

As another student said, "Genocide is no joke."

Hey! What about us?

Dear Chancellor Duffy:

You were sent and presumably recieved well over 70 letters asking you to respond to the issue of the proposed elimination of the Community Health Education. None of us who wrote to you recieved a response.

Again I would like to reiterate the vital need in our society today for specialists in the CHE field of public health. Numerous graduates from this University — and the Community Health Education program specifically — hold down jobs directly aiding the people of the Commonwealth.

We ask you to retain the Community Health Education Program.

YOUR DAILY HOROSCOPE
By JEANE DIXON

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Some unexpected financial luck helps you shrug off the indifference of other people. A career problem is best dealt with behind the scenes. Your afternoon looks pleasurable. Don't overspend.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Family arrangements – especially those involving offspring – are of special concern. Take your time when making up your mind about confidential matters. Group activities are favored tonight.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): The self-employed enjoy a string of good luck. A friend may offer investment suggestions. Rely on the advice of experts only. Double-check weekend arrangements: someone's wires may be crossed.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Be cautious about dealing with someone in your neighborhood. Check travel schedules. Someone who is usually reliable may have had an "off" day. Romance proves sweeter the second time around!

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Determination and enthusiasm will get you what you want. You stir other people into taking action. A compromise may be necessary if romance is to flourish. It pays to make the first move.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Someone's tendency to seesaw on policy matters may cause tension. Changes that come about in a natural way will bring financial relief. Follow your own intuition when it comes to romance.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Money must be wisely budgeted. Read the small print on contracts and consult a lawyer if you still have questions. Your relationship with an older person receives new attention.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): A romantic hope could be realized. Have faith! Your pals are more dependable and discreet than you think. A conversation with a family friend could lead to a financial windfall. Show your appreciation.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): You now have an opportunity to regain lost ground with your loved ones. Forget foolish pride. Taking a back door approach helps you reach an important objective. Romance deepens.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): A long-distance telephone call will make this a joyous day. You feel more at peace in the company of old friends. The evening could feature a truly grand reunion. Dress to impress.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Mutual interests must be given top priority now – your good name or domestic happiness depends on it! Initiate changes vital to financial progress. Accept people as they are, focusing on their strengths.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): You may have to suggest that your mate or partner adopt a better budget. Be tactful. Set the needed example. Business entertaining should go well tonight. Pay more compliments.

At the Eastern Collegiate Athletic Conference Championships, held at the University of Buffalo, March 2-3, Causamore scored 501 points in the one-meter and 582.7 in the three-meter.

Also planning to make a run for the top is the University of Pittsburgh's Donna Flatch, last year's Big East Conference's Most Oustanding Diver.

At the Eastern Swim League Championships held at Princeton University in February, Flatch placed sixth in the one-meter (365.80) and 11th in the three-meter (389.55). She will be looking to duplicate her last season's qualifying for the nationals.

Watch out for a contingent of divers from Pennsylvania. Participating for Penn St. will be Lara von Seelen and Amy Schmidt.

Carmean ('87) and Tim Soudan ('90) return to the University as assistant coaches. Glenn Maller also returns as a part time coach. Aaron Jones was a '87 Cornell grad and is a graduate assistant.

The team is heavily experienced with seniors and 15 returning lettermen. Senior tri-captain Jim McAleavey mobilizes the attack supported by senior Bill Begien and junior Mike Cain. Junior Rob Falvey, sophomore Mark Millon and sophomore Mario Guaglianone are also positioned at attack for the Gorillas.

Junior tri-captain Rick Mullins marshalls the defense, backed by returning lettermen senior Jeff Suskin, senior Hugh O'Callahan, junior Corey Cronin and junior Mario Lopez. Other returning players include senior Tom Brown and sophomores Gary Wood, Kenny Randazzo, Jim Panetta and David Ray.

In goal are three seasoned Gorillas: senior Ted Kellerman, junior Ray Suris and sophomore Todd Ackerman.

There are 14 new faces on the team, most of whom are freshmen. Junior midi Kevin O'Connor transferred from a New York community college and hails from Yorktown Heights, N.Y.

"The strength of the team is experience," Garber said. "We still need to work on stick work, going inside to outside . . . our fundamentals have to be tuned. It'll be good to get outside."

Garber said he hoped to find nicer weather down in Baltimore, but upon calling a coach at Towson to check the forecast, he found it was snowing in Baltimore too. If it continues to snow he has backup plans for the team: "We'll go to Sea World or something, practice man-up in an aquarium."

come together in the past week and showed him that they really want to come out on top this weekend.

Mitchell said his team has a score to settle with the UNH Wildcats. The team handed the Minutewomen a crushing loss last weekend and his team wants to avenge that loss.

He said the major goals of the weekend include breaking the school's total team points record which stands at 186.45 and to qualify the entire team for postseason competition.

The Minutewomen already have qualified individuals for Regionals and Nationals. Freshman Margaret Furtado (No. 10) and Kim Grady (No.8) will join Marshall in postseason meets.

Mitchell said that he is anticipating a flawless rotation from his athletes. He said he expects high scores and hopes that his team can accumulate a score that will enable them to continue their season.

Lacrosse in search of better weather, strong opponents

Snow.

Every coach has nightmares of a snow-covered field on opening day — at least in New England. And although this year the March snow came, they're outta here. They're going South. Well, at least as far south as Baltimore . . .

California and Florida aside, the lacrosse team is getting down to business as they head to lacrosse hotbeds — Long Island and Baltimore — for their version of spring break.

The team will face up against the Long Island, Hempstead, Mt. Washington and Latshaw Lacrosse Clubs, playing in both New York and Maryland.

Ted Garber, in his first year at the helm of UMass lacrosse, is optimistic — barring the snow, of course — about the spring trip and the upcoming season.

"Even coaching-wise you get tired of being indoors. You just want to get out," said Garber. Wednesday the weather was permitting and the team practiced outside. Yesterday, however, the snow began to fall and practice was indoors.

The lacrosse clubs are traditionally tough competitors because they are older and more savvy stickhandlers. Of the field of spring break competitors, UMass will face one of the premiere clubs, Mt. Washington.

"They play in a nice big stadium . . . it gives you that big time sense when you're on the field," Garber said. "If we can play well against them, then we'll be ready for the season."

Included in the rosters of some of the lacrosse clubs the Gorillas will face are some UMass grads — Rob Codignotto and Scott Hiller — who play for the Long Island LC.

The coaching staff has a mix of new and old stock. Tom

The swimming season is not over yet for the University of Massachusetts women's team — thanks to freshman Allison White.

White, an Arlington, Mass. native, is the only Minutewoman to qualify for the NCAA Division I Zone A Diving Championships held at Harvard University today and tomorrow. White will be competing in both the one-meter and three-meter events.

"This is an honor for Allison to be at this meet as a freshman," coach Bob Newcombe said. "At the beginning of the season I thought she would make it. That's why we recruited her."

Looking ahead, White would have to finish in the top three at this meet in order to continue her postseason march. Newcombe said placing that high is a little unrealistic at this point in White's young career.

"This meet is to prepare for the future and to get exposure in front of the judges," Newcombe said. "I don't see a problem, though, that in a year or so, for Allison going to [the NCAAs]."

White, sick for the last week, has not made any changes in her routine of dives. In the three-meter, among the eleven dives required for the event, White will perform a front two-and-a-half somersault pike and a front one-and-a-half somersault twist.

During the one-meter competition, White plans to do a reverse one-and-a-half tuck, an inward one-and-a-half somersault, and a back somersault with a one-and-a-half twist. The degree of difficulty of her dives ranges from 1.3 to 2.5.

Many of the divers competing already know what pressure to expect.

Northeastern University's Dana Causamore, one of the top divers in the region and favored to make the top three, has qualified for the Zone Championships for the past

Baseball warms up against So. Florida

By GREG SUKIENNIK
Collegian Staff

Last year, the University of Massachusetts baseball team was one inning away from the final game of the Atlantic-10 Tournament — a chance at the NCAA Division I baseball tournament.

That chance slipped away, as Rutgers erupted for three runs to force extra innings before winning in 14 innings, 8-7. That loss took the wind out of UMass' sails, as they lost their next game to West Virginia, 8-1, ending their season at 26-20.

Seventeen lettermen remember that experience. And returning UMass players are poised to make another run at the A-10 Northern Division, as well as the conference tourney and a potential NCAA bid.

"We had a chance to win the whole thing, and it crumbled in our hands," said fourth-year coach Mike Stone. "I think everybody remembers that — hopefully, we'll get back to that point so we can change the outcome."

UMass' season gets underway tonight in Tampa, Fla., when they face the University of South Florida at 7 p.m. UMass will play 10 games in 10 days, including a contest against the University of Florida, ranked 21st in a recent Baseball America poll.

"We'll have our hands full with the teams on our Florida trip," said Stone. "They're all very strong programs."

The Minutemen are best characterized as a young team. Twenty-two of 33 players on the roster are underclassmen, including much of the pitching staff.

Four of the five pitchers Stone named as possible starters — Scott Meaney, Daryle Corriveau, Jim Telgheder and John Russell — are sophomores. Junior

They aren't headed down south to bask in the sun or hang out on the beach.

The University of Massachusetts women's gymnastics team has some tough competition to contend with as they face West Virginia and New Hampshire for the second time this season.

The Minutewoman (10-2) are ranked third in the Atlantic 10 and seventh in the Northeast going into their last weekend of regular season competition.

In addition, sophomore Tammy Marshall holds the No. 1 position in New England in the all-around.

"it's time we put it all together," coach Alfie Mitchell said. He said that in the past there have been minor faults that have posed problems to his team. He said he feels that the team has come

Trinity whacks JV lax

By THOMAS A. GEORGE
Collegian Correspondent

Sometimes taking on Goliath just isn't that fun.

Sometimes you win, sometimes you get abused.

The University of Massachusetts jayvee level lacrosse club left Trinity College after a 15-4 loss Wednesday. The Division III varsity program established in Hartford simply proved too well-established for the fledgling UMass club.

This moves the club to a 1-2 record going into spring break.

The Bantams ran off five unanswered points before the mini gorillas rippled the net.

UMass' Mike White got the team on the board, assisted by face-off specialist Chris Boarman. Other UMass tallies came from Reid Russell, John Fitzgerald (unassisted) and a first career goal for Brendan Manning from Bill Robison.

"The Trinity 'box on the break' was very effective," said coach Judy Dietel. The UMass squad was plagued by turnovers she added.

"I may be a damn fool for scheduling such tough competition, but you get to see what you can do, and what you need to do," said Dietel.

The man-down defense held Trinity on three of four occasions.

Prior to the Hartford game, the team lost to Holy Cross in Worcester and won against Brown JV on the roof at Providence. The team is set to face Wesleyan in Middletown March 25 and Syracuse Club on Coine field March 30.

UMass breaks for NIT Final Four

We beat 3 teams in hoop tourney

Fans and teammates surround Jim McCoy after the buzzer sounds in overtime vs. Siena.

By SAM SILVERSTEIN
Collegian Staff

They had the best spring break of any University of Massachusetts men's basketball team in school history.

Two days in the Bronx. A couple more in Albany. The rest in rainy, deserted Amherst . . . And three warm, sunny NIT wins, over LaSalle (93-90), Fordham (78-74) and Siena, (82-20 in overtime).

As a result, the 20-11 Minutemen face Stanford in the NIT semifinals tonight at Madison Square Garden in New York City. The winner will play either Oklahoma or Colorado in the Championship game Wednesday night.

So it wasn't Daytona. Nobody in the program seems to mind. In the words of sophomore center Harper Williams, "I came to school with the attitude that I don't have a spring break. If I'm still playing during spring break that means I'm a winner."

Barbee bits "shot of the century" vs. Siena

Thursday night, with 2.9 seconds on the clock and the Minutemen in possession of the ball, down by three points, a full-court's length away from any hope of a game-tying three pointer, coach John Calipari thought the season was over.

"I thought to myself '19-12, that's not too bad.'"

Senior John Tate thought his career was over.

"I saw the end. I was thinking 'well, we had a great year.'"

Knickerbocker Arena public address announcer Bob Lawson thought the game was over.

"Travel to Madison Square Garden with the Siena Saints," Lawson announced over the arena's loudspeakers. "Tickets to the NIT Final Four will go on sale tomorrow . . ."

Tony Barbee thought differently.

From the far baseline, Barbee threw a one-hop pass to Anton Brown at midcourt, where Brown called timeout with 2.3 seconds left in the game. On the ensuing play, Barbee caught the inbounds pass 22 feet from the basket, wheeled, and lofted a shot over two oncoming Siena defenders and down through the hoop, forcing overtime.

Jim McCoy scored the only basket of the overtime period, a wide-open 12-foot jumper with :50 left, and the Minutemen had a 82-80 win and the school's first ever berth in the NIT Final Four.

"Tony Barbee made the shot of maybe the century for the University of Massachusetts," Calipari said. "He came back and caught it and stuck it."

Siena coach Mike Dean said "That was a bitter defeat, a game we had won and let slip away. Obviously, there's a subtle bit of good fortune the way the game ended. We had [Barbee] surrounded and he made a big shot . . . everything went right except the damn thing went in."

Said Lawson, who calmly defended his decision to make the soon-to-be-famous announcement: "Two seconds on the board, Siena up by three, I had to make a judgement call. Obviously, I made the wrong call."

The Minutemen overcame a 15-point first half performance by Siena's Marc "Showbiz" Brown to hold a 41-37 lead at intermission.

After a Will Herndon (20 points, 15 rebounds) dunk stretched the lead to 43-39 to open the second half, the wheels came off UMass' wagon temporarily. With seven-foot center Steve Downey having his way inside, the Saints built a 10-point lead, 56-46, with 14 minutes to play.

McCoy (19 points) heated up and the Minutemen parlayed a technical foul on Downey — who fired the ball at Herndon's back in frustration after Herndon drove on him for a layup; the ball hit Rafer Giles, six feet to Herndon's left — into a six-point trip up the court during a 10-0 UMass run that knotted the score at 56.

The game was tied at 72, 74 and 76, before the Saints opened what appeared to be an insurmountable three-point lead on a pair of Downey free throws with :2.9 left, setting the stage for Barbee's shot-for-the-ages.

Women's studies majors organize forums on women and war

By AMY HENRY
Collegian Staff

Senior women's studies majors in this semester's women's studies senior seminar are putting theory into practice by planning their own forums on different aspects of women and war.

The students chose their own groups and panel topics, then began searching the Five College area and beyond for speakers for little or no fee. So far students have brought speakers to lecture on women and militarization and women in occupied territories.

The last of the three panels, titled "Face Reality, There are Women Political Prisoners in the U.S.," features five lecturers and a video titled, "The Resistance Conspiracy Case," about male and female political prisoners. The forum is scheduled for tomorrow at 4 p.m. in Campus Center 165-169.

Associate Professor of women's studies Joy James, who teaches the seminar, said she wanted students to plan their own forums in order to extend the definition of students to include teachers and activists.

"Activism is part of the learning process. Planning these forums allows students to take knowledge out of the limit of test and textbook," James said.

Lorian Tonna-Lamuniere, one member of the 12-person group, said the main purpose of this forum is to bring an awareness of the reasons women are currently in jail.

"Many acts done by women, such as a battered women killing her abuser, are defined as criminal actions when what they're really trying to do is resist and fight the conditions of their lives," she said.

Gail Kielson, direct service coordinator at Necessities/Necessidades, a battered women's center in Northampton, will speak about battered women who kill their husbands and are incarcerated.

Malika Adame, a former Black Panther and political prisoner will discuss her experiences. Shelly Miller, a grand jury resister and ex-political prisoner who currently works for "Freedom Now," a group that strives for amnesty of political prisoners in the United States, will speak.

Pat Levasseur, formerly of the Ohio 7, a group of anti-imperialist activists, will speak. Barbara Zeller, who worked on the Lexington campaign and with Assata Shakur, an ex-political prisoner, will also speak. The campaign was aimed at shutting down a prison which held political prisoners.

For Minutemen, Stanford squad a tall order

By SAM SILVERSTEIN
Collegian Staff

This Energizer bunny of a basketball season finds the University of Massachusetts in New York City's historic Madison Square Garden tonight against Stanford, in the semifinals of the NIT (7 p.m., ESPN).

The winner will play the Oklahoma-Colorado victor in the NIT Championship Game Wednesday night at the Garden. The loser plays in Wednesday's consolation game.

The Minutemen, still buzzing from Thursday's thrilling win over Siena, will be making their first NIT semifinal showing and their second appearance of the season on national TV.

"Can you believe we're going to New York City? This is unbelievable," coach John Calipari gushed after the Siena game. "We might never get back here. You have to be a little bit lucky to get this far. We've been pretty good, but we've also been lucky."

Said Will Herndon, "This will be a thrill . . . It shows the people around the country we have a good team regardless of what happened at the Atlantic 10 tournament."

After three consecutive games against good teams from mediocre conferences, the Minutemen now face a middle-of-the-pack squad from a great conference: the PAC 10.

The Cardinal, 18-13 overall, finished the regular

Guthrie bids farewell to Rep. Conte

By JOHN DIAMOND
The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — When there was something folk singer Arlo Guthrie couldn't get at Alice's Restaurant, he went to Rep. Silvio Conte.

Six weeks after the death of the Massachusetts Republican, Guthrie took time out from a West Coast tour to talk about the most unlikely of friendships between the leftist hero of the Vietnam era and the jowly Republican from Western Massachusetts.

The acquaintance actually dates back to well before Guthrie became famous with his 1967 Newport Folk Festival performance of the "Alice's Restaurant Massacree," a tale of littering, the law and the military draft set in Stockbridge, Mass., in the heart of Conte's 1st District.

In the early 1960s, Guthrie's mother, Marjorie Mazia Guthrie, became involved in fund-raising to help victims of Huntington's Disease, a degenerative ailment that claimed the life of her husband, the legendary folk singer Woody Guthrie.

Mrs. Guthrie, who lived in New York, enlisted Conte in the fight. It was an early involvement for Conte in what was to become a career-long interest in health-care issues.

"I met him I think through my mother's work and I really came to like him on a personal level," Guthrie said in a telephone interview from Southern California, where he is touring with his son Abe. "I had no idea what his politics were. Essentially, I was a kid."

With the success of "Alice's Restaurant," Guthrie bought a farm in the Berkshire region where the story is set and became a constituent of Conte's.

"During the next election (1968) I got a call from Silvio's office saying 'Would you do some fund-raising for us?' I said 'Sure' because this man had been wonderfully helpful with my Mom.

"He was the only Republican I ever did anything for, much to the chagrin of a lot of people for whom politics becomes a way of life and who could not understand how a young folk singer could be supporting a Republican candidate — especially in the late '60s and early '70s."

But Guthrie brushed off the criticism. He had simply come to like Conte and he disdained the "blind ideology" of the left that subjected him to criticism.

It did not hurt that Conte was no typical Republican. By the late 1960s Conte had come out against the Vietnam War and throughout his career he bucked the GOP rank-and-file by voting for spending programs for health care, housing, scholarship funding and home heating assistance.

"The counterculture had their own agenda, and supporting Republican candidates was not part of that agenda, no matter what their record was," Guthrie said.

Guthrie did some radio spots for the Conte campaign and dropped in on the Congressman regularly whenever he had a performance in Washington.

Soon it was Guthrie who was turning to Conte for help. True to his description, the friendship was more of a you-scratch-my-back-I'll-scratch-yours relationship typical of local politics than an ideological bond.

BU plans memorial for 2 students killed in van accident

BOSTON (AP) — As students expressed outrage yesterday about heavy traffic near the Boston University campus, others planned a memorial for two women killed by a van allegedly driven by a Boston Celtics player.

Sara Barber, a senior from Williston, Vt., said "people drive wild" on Commonwealth Avenue, which cuts across the sprawling urban campus.

"Some of the drivers swerve to try to hit us," Barber, 21, told the Boston Sunday Globe. "You have to be really careful crossing, especially at night."

An Trinh, 21, of Placentia, Calif. and Michelle Dartley, 20, of Ridgewood, N.J., died Friday after being struck as they crossed Commonwealth Avenue about 1:30 a.m.

Investigators said the two women were struck as they returned to their dormitories following a trip to an all-night convenience store. Several people witnessed the accident and another driver followed the van a short distance.

Police arrested Boston Celtics guard Charles Smith about a mile away on Massachusetts Avenue.

Smith, 23, pleaded innocent in Roxbury District Court Friday to two counts of vehicular homicide, and one count each of driving under the influence of alcohol, operating recklessly or negligently, failure to yield to pedestrians, and leaving the scene of an accident. He was freed on $100,000 personal recognizance.

Ralph Hingson, chairman of the social and behavioral sciences department at BU's School of Public Health, said more than a third of Boston's traffic deaths involve pedestrians.

"In terms of the proportion of traffic deaths that are pedestrian deaths, it is 15 percent nationally, 20 percent in Massachusetts and around 40 percent in Boston," he told the Globe.

Meanwhile, the women's friends continued planning a memorial service, scheduled for 4 p.m. Thursday at BU's Marsh Chapel. The service will combine Buddhist, Catholic and Protestant elements, organizers said.

Interviewed on campus Friday, Dartley's parents said they were moved by the tributes they have received from their daughter's friends.

Dartley, a sophomore in the school's College of Basic Studies, was described as a creative writer who loved horseback riding.

Trinh, her best friend, was a student in the College of Liberal Arts. Born in Vietnam, she moved to the United States as a child. The school's Vietnamese Students Association is helping organize memorial activities.

The Samples deliver awareness with a danceable beat

By PAUL DEGEORGES
Collegian Staff

The latest trend in the music world seems to be that persistent force of the social consciousness. The causes seem to come and go. A few years back we had the whole famine relief business of Band Aid and USA for Africa, the 1988 Rock the Vote campaign, and much more recently it was the AIDS awareness kick that many politically correct rockers picked up on in the form of the Red, Hot and Blue compilation. One cause that seems to have stuck though is the environment. Maybe because the problem simply will not go away even if we dump lots of money on it.

Whatever the specific problem, there seems always to be someone out there ready to grab on to it, like Sting and the endangered rain forests. Whatever the cause, the high-profile endorsements for action are, at the very least, a great help to raise awareness of the problem hand.

"If it's fashionable to be concerned about the environment, then there couldn't be a better cause in style," says Sean Kelly, lead singer/songwriter/guitarist of The Samples, a quintet from Boulder, Colorado hell-bent on using their music as a powerful medium for the message of environmental concern.

From the mournful "African Ivory," a song calling attention to the senseless slaughter of elephants, to "Close to the Fires," a haunting treatise fired by the band's passionate response to the series of oil spills off the coast of California, The Samples first album on Arista is a blatant call to arms to defend the fragile earth. Kelley is optimistic about the group's odds of being able to illicit this desired response.

The reason is, quite simply, one can't resist the Samples music. So while you're grooving to a highly danceable World Beat/Neo-Reggae beat with lush acoustic guitars and entrancing keyboards, you're also being inundated with an overwhelming sense of concern and urgent plea for action. The Samples are the proverbial spoonful of sugar that helps the medicine go down.

"We don't want to be martyrs," Kelley emphasizes. Of the music, which often sounds like a long-lost B-side to any old Police song (Kelley, at times, sounds incredibly similar to Sting, but in a respectful and highly original way), Kelley claims, "We don't plan to get stuck doing the same thing over and over. Even this first album has a sense of humor, as well as a love song or two on it." Though the sole purpose of The Samples is to encourage and inspire something greater than themselves, don't let that aspiration lead you to think you can second guess them.

Over the past two years, the band has toured consistantly and appeared with such notable acts as The Wailers and Jimmy Cliff. As they get ready to take the stage, they look forward to performing songs from their self-titled album, as well as some new material that they have been working on.

The Samples will play tonight at the Iron Horse in Northampton at 8:30 p.m.

To assail Zionism is to assail the Jewish people

When people criticize the Zionists, they mean Jews. You're talking anti-Semitism.
— Martin Luther King, Jr.

There is a rationale, fashionable among "progressives," that Zionism is simply an ideology, while Judaism is a religion. To them, it's more than just not anti-Semitic to slam "The Zionists," it's really quite "PC." These people are wrong, and their ignorance of Jewish history is dangerous to the Jewish people.

Andy Sirulnik

Large populations of Jews lived in the land of Israel from Biblical times until the seventh century, when the Roman Army finally destroyed the last Jewish presence there (the Romans named it Palestine). The Jews who had managed to escape this and earlier assaults survived as a people only through their faith in God. The prophesy that someday, a messiah will lead them back to Israel, gave the Jews strength to survive being enslaved, tortured, raped and butchered throughout the dark and middle ages.

The pogroms of the 1800s — the killing and expulsion of millions of Jewish peasants in Eastern Europe — were unprecedented in scale if not brutality. Some Jews felt that, in order to survive as a people, they must return to Israel. Jewish settlements in Israel developed slowly at first, and then rapidly as more Jews fled from first the Tzar's Army and then from Nazi Europe. Arab resentment grew as more refugees arrived, and the attacks upon Jews that began in the 1920s escalated quickly.

Are you sick of hearing about the Holocaust? You had better not be sick of it around me. — Andrea Dworkin

The Germans destroyed six out of the 12 million Jews on Earth. Previously, there had been a religious debate among Jews as to when to return to Israel; afterward, the question seemed absurd.

As Hitler rose to power, the United States refused asylum to Jewish refugees, and whole shiploads of Jews were sent back to Europe to die. Roosevelt ignored for years intelligence reports of the slaughter, and when the bombing of Pearl Harbor forced him to enter the war, the United States refused to "waste" bombs on the train tracks to the death camps. Henry Ford, a supporter of the Nazi party and anti-Semitism, received from Hitler the highest civilian award; Hitler kept a photo of Ford in his office.

The "Allies" had been complicit in the genocide. Jews understood they could never again count on the "good will" of others for their survival. Jewish refugees trying to enter Jewish settlements in Palestine after the war (as well as before) were tear gassed and imprisoned by British soldiers, who sent them back to the Europe which had just barely failed to kill them. Forced to recognize a trend in their history toward their own extinction, Jews looked toward their ancient homeland.

At the end of the war, the newly-formed United Nations partitioned the Palestine territory. Within hours, the armies of Israel's Arab neighbors attacked, pledging to eliminate the Jews. But with the determination of a brutalized people casting off two millennia of pacifism — and with God's help — Israel prevailed.

The wars of 1956, 1967 and 1973 were essentially three battles of a continuous war to eliminate all Jews in the region. The Palestinians are among the victims of this war, manipulated and mistreated by Arab states, and sometimes by Israel as well. Some charges of Israeli human rights abuses are true; some are exaggerated; and some are anti-Semitic lies. Regardless, the Jews in Israel have been under armed siege by their neighbors for 50 years, and their fear must be understood in this light.

You're making a shande (disgrace) before the Gentiles. — Abbie Hoffman, to the also-Jewish Chicago Seven trial judge

"Anti-Zionists" are quick to point out that some Jews oppose Zionism. A Jew alienated from his or her people — like the infamous Chicago Seven judge's ruthless display of allegiance to the non-Jewish majority — is an archetypal phenomenon arising from Jewish culture and collective history. The Jewish people's survival depends upon Israel and "anti-Zionists" don't speak for most Jews.

Incidentally, the next time you read a diatribe against "Israel" or "the Zionists," try replacing those words with the words, "the Jews." You'll be intrigued by the effect.

Andy Sirulnik is a UMass student

Yo! Read my lip service

This is the Happy Valley. We love everybody. We respect and revere difference. We encourage diversity.

Who else is ready to either throw up or laugh?

This campus has a lot of pride. So many people here are proud they are straight. Some held a rally to confirm they are straight in what they see as an increasingly "heterophobic" world.

Am I hearing these folks right?

Pamela McCarthy

On one hand, we have a lot of guilty liberals telling us that of course UMass isn't homophobic, of course gays, lesbians, and bisexuals rights are respected, and of course people here have an open mind. Why, look at the gay pride rallies and Gay/Lesbian/Bisexual Awareness Week. This campus is aware.

On the other hand, we have a bunch of rabid right-wingers who say gays, lesbians, and bisexuals are disgusting, unnatural, "queer," or, at best, psychologically disturbed. I'll hand it to these psuedo-primates, I don't agree with them, but at least they are honest — more so than the people who give only lip service to the gay community.

So many people fall prey to the myth that if you're not a member of the Republican Club, you're not homophobic. Well, here's a news-flash for you. This is not a good place to be gay. I don't care how many politically correct activists, students, or administrators say it is. Most people ignore the gay community. Lip service hasn't changed a thing.

It doesn't stop the fact that many gays are threatened and harassed. It doesn't stop the fact that even among many liberals, homosexuality is derided; lesbians are seen as women with a Freudian complex who want to be men.

Bisexuals get grief from every community. They are indecisive, they are fence-sitters. They are afraid to admit they are gay. They are afraid to admit they are straight. After getting a load of this attitude, they are probably more afraid to admit they are bisexual. The sole blame for AIDS is placed on them, not on the foolish and stupid habits of all people (promiscuous heterosexuals included). People assume that bisexuals must sleep with anything that moves, since they are attracted to both sexes (I suppose self-control and selectivity is something only heterosexuals have).

I constantly see couples kissing and holding hands on campus. But I have never seen two women or two men even hold hands. I'm not talking about any hot and heavy public foreplay shows. That gets annoying no matter who does it. Just simply holding hands is something we won't see a same-sex couple do, unless they have a masochistic desire to be assaulted.

We never see gays, lesbians, or bisexuals in ads, in television shows, or in movies — unless, of course, there is an issue to be brought up from doing it. But as a group, the gay community is invisible. Does anyone care, or notice? Of course not. Who said anyone should go beyond lip service?

How many of you would be surprised to find out one of your friends, your sister or your brother, your housemate, or your professor were gay? Would you act the same way towards them? Would you disown them? Would you accept them? Think about it. You'd be surprised at how many people — very possibly people you know — are gay. I'm not talking about hot air and lip service. Big deal. Most people here would never admit they would have a problem with it. That's not the politically correct thing to do.

What people usually do is preach about how we should never gay-bash. Then they participate in the most subtle form of gay-bashing of all.

They refuse to admit gays exist.

This is the deal with student gov't

It is vitally important for the campus that the work of restructuring undergraduate student governance has begun. Since I began my tenure as interim Vice Chancellor four weeks ago, I have had a number of conversations with a wide range of students on governance issues. These conversations have underscored the recognition that the current governance structure is not to anyone's satisfaction.

The Commission on Undergraduate Student Governance, initiated by Vice Chancellor Madson, has begun its work, and has already met twice. I encourage members of our campus community to support the work of the Commission by submitting suggestions and recommendations on issues of governance directly to the Commission. A mailbox has been designated in the Student Activities Office for that purpose.

Some students have asked for clarification regarding "administrative recognition" of student leaders. The administration will continue to work with President Natasha Diephuis, Trustee Angus McQuilken, Dan Chesnicka, Karen Talbot, and Rebecca Rudko. This is consistent with the Feb. 11, 1991 memorandum to the campus community by Vice Chancellors Page, O'Brien and Madson. A second point which has required reiteration relates to elections. The only election which will be recognized by the administration will be for Student Trustee in May.

The recommendations of the Commission on Undergraduate Student Governance will be presented to undergraduates for their approval/disapproval by referendum vote in May. Clearly, the student body must first decide on a form of student government before elections can be held for positions within the new governance structure.

The dedication and hard work of the members of the Commission on Undergraduate Student Governance is commendable. I urge you to support their continued efforts.

Jo-Anne Thomas Vanin
Interim Vice Chancellor for Student Affairs

Farewell, thanks from the Pirogs

We would like to thank you; the faculty, for the mountain of knowledge shared with Jay, that he so enjoyed; his friends, for the mountains of friendship and memories shared. Last, but not least, a fond farewell to the serenity of the mountains that he loved.

YOUR DAILY HOROSCOPE
By JEANE DIXON

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Forging a new friendship or professional liaison will brighten your future. Give serious consideration to joining a club. A business colleague could be a wise guy. Curb your impatience.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Pooling resources can reward you in a big way now. You are smart to move quickly regarding a loan or purchase. Seek favors, put in requests. Listen sympathetically to a loved one's laments.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): A job assignment could be more lucrative than you expected. Strive for mutual gains; you are poised to make big strides. Beware of money people – they could say one thing and do another!

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Work harder to showcase your special talents. See yourself as an artist and you will become one! Behind-the-scenes maneuvers will boost your financial fortunes. Put a romantic relationship on hold.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): You could surprise yourself by becoming romantically attracted to someone you have overlooked. Diversify business investments. Postpone making crucial decisions until more information is available.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): A sudden confidential proposal gives you a competitive edge. Your love of adventure brings you new happiness. Move ahead quickly with the knowledge that success is close at hand.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Tap a new talent to improve the bottom line in business. A conversation that takes place today is part of a chain of events that will boost your career. Redouble your efforts.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Keep abreast of new financial developments. Take all the time you need to write an important letter. The ability to communicate your thoughts clearly and concisely is a great business asset.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Open your heart to loved one. Tend to family obligations before business affairs. Someone close to you needs extra encouragement. Watch your step if you decide to play matchmaker!

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Rapid career progress is a real possibility now. Conditions are excellent for enhancing your reputation by dealing with VIPs. Enroll in high-tech courses and weekend seminars.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Look forward to a day of bright prospects. The emphasis is on long-term career and financial opportunities. Time is of the essence. Conserve energy by doing less talking and more thinking.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Check your ego at the door when entering someone else's domain. Stressing your own achievements would be a tactical mistake. Ask intelligent questions and then listen attentively.

Minutemen to face Stanford

season in a five-way tie for fifth place in the PAC 10 with an 8-10 record, then reached New York via NIT wins over Houston, Wisconsin and Southern Illinois.

Stanford lives and dies with a punishing front line built around 6-foot-9, 230-pound junior center Adam Keefe — also an Olympic-calibre volleyball player — and 6-foot-7, 225-pound senior forward Andrew Vlahov.

Keefe, described by Calipari as the best post player the Minutemen have faced this year, has had some monstrous games against more-heralded PAC 10 big men, including a 30-point, nine-rebound night vs. UCLA's Don Maclean and a 29-point, 13-rebound performance amid Arizona's Brian Williams-Sean Rooks-Ed Stokes triumvirate of seven-footers.

Vlahov is a bruiser who does more damage away from the ball than with it in his hands.

"They're big and strong like Penn State, only much better," Calipari said. "[Vlahov] is like the glue of the team. He's mean and strong. He's not the greatest athlete but he's a player."

Said John Tate, "[Keefe] will be in the pros. He'll be in the Olympics. You've got to see that as a challenge and consider yourself lucky to have the chance to play against him."

Herndon said, "One of the two will get his points. The thing is to not let both get 25."

Stanford lacks a Mr. Outside, however, to take some of the burden off their inside strength; The Cardinal like to walk the ball up on offense, spread everybody into a different corner of the gym and jam the ball to Keefe under the basket.

The Cardinal's two three-point threats, guards Kenny Ammann and John Patrick, shoot 46 and 40 percent respectively and have made only 106 treys between them this season.

When Keefe and Vlahov have their way, however, the Cardinal can compete with the best in the land. Stanford beat UCLA at Pauley Pavilion in January, and lost close games to North Carolina (71-60) and Arizona (78-76). Stanford out-rebounded both North Carolina and Arizona by double-digit margins.

The Minutemen, who have been at the very top of their game for nearly a month now, dating back to the second half of the George Washington loss in the Atlantic 10 Tournament, hope to lure the Cardinal into an up-and-down the floor running game. To that end, the Minutemen will have four extra television timeouts in reserve to help water the horses.

Game notes: Herndon turned his right ankle in practice Saturday, but is expected to be o.k. by gametime tonight . . . The Minutemen have earned six technical fouls in their last four games, with Calipari drawing three . . . Stanford and UMass have met once before, in 1986-87, a 57-51 Cardinal victory.

Clutch free throws clinch Fordham win

Back-to-back Barbee three-pointers midway through the second half had the Minutemen pointed toward a blowout win over Fordham at Rose Hill Gym Tuesday night. But in the end, UMass had to sweat for it.

UMass led 64-50 with four minutes to play, then saw the Rams ride a hyperactive full court press to within two, at 74-72, with :25 left.

The Minutemen, tempered this season by 15 games decided by six points or less or in overtime, remained calm. Williams buried a pair of free throws with 24 seconds left and Anton Brown added two more with 12 seconds to play to clinch a 78-74 win.

UMass hit 14 of 19 free throws in the final three minutes, staring down tournament pressure and a raucous Rose Hill sellout crowd along the way, (and riding a wall of noise from the 500 or so UMass fans who made the trip). The Rams were 12-0 on their home court this season.

Williams finished with a game-high 23 points and nine rebounds, and held Patriot League Player of the year Damon Lopez to a painless nine points and eight rebounds.

"Their athleticism just bothered us . . . when you can't score it becomes a very difficult game to play," Fordham coach Nick Macarchuk said. "We never could make them panic."

McCoy (18 points) said, "I wasn't worried because all of us were hitting free throws and I knew they had to foul us."

Minutemen beat LaSalle at its own game

Giles countered the sharpshooting antics of LaSalle's Randy Woods and Doug Overton with a three-pointer of his own with 54 seconds to play, boosting the Minutemen to a 93-90 win at the Cage March 15.

Woods finished with five three-pointers and 26 points, and Overton had three treys and 19 points, but it was Giles' three-point bomb that proved to be the gamewinner.

The Explorers had led by as many as eight, at 61-53, with six minutes to play, but UMass drew even at 77 and pulled away down the stretch behind Giles and some clutch free throw shooting.

Williams led the Minutemen with 22 points and 11 rebounds. McCoy had 19 points and Herndon 16 points and nine rebounds.

White's first dive into NCAA competition is successful

By CHRIS MIRACLE
Collegian Staff

Tuck this story into your long term-memories folks, because more will be heard from freshman diver Allison White.

White's competition in the N.C.A.A. Division I Zone A Diving Championships on March 15, 16 at Harvard University put a close to the University of Massachusetts women's swimming team's season.

Facing pressure and intimidation on the first day of diving, White placed 22nd in the three-meter event(341.10), but bounced back in the one-meter dive accumulating 325 points to notch the 15th spot.

"Allison was a little intimidated, but she came back and proved she could dive with the others," UMass coach Bob Newcombe said. "She was very impressive."

Northeastern University's Dana Kozimor won the spots coveted by all the divers taking first in both the one and three-meter events. Penn State's Lara von Seelen finished second in the three-meter while George Washington University's Bobby Ferraro followed Kozimor in the one-meter.

"The difference between Allison and the top eight divers is the degree of difficulty of her dives," Newcombe said. "She has all the talent they do, but Allison's problem is that she doesn't throw the hard dives in competition."

White's degree of difficulty of her dives ranged from 1.3 to 2.5 at the Zone Championships, but she has been working on tougher dives in practice. Newcombe expects White to employ these more challenging dives in her routine at the beginning of next season.

"I don't know if next year is quite the year she will make the NCAA's, but her work should pay off. I think finishing in the top eight at Easterns is a good possibility."

White's work has already provided her with setting the school record in the three-meter when she scored 425.50 points at the New England Women's Intercollegiate Swimming and Diving Association Championships in February.

Besides White, next year's Minutewomen team will return a solid line-up, strong enough to make another run at New Englands.

With six UMass swimmers graduating: Kiri Binning, Leslie Cromwell, Maureen Murphy, Angie Ng, Denise Reimer, and Tonia Stafford, the Minutewomen will rely on a total team effort from the new seniors as well as the incoming freshmen.

"I'm pleased with the people coming back. They train well together," Newcombe said. "There won't be one standout stellar star."

"In regards to recruiting, there are some good prospects, but I'm not going to mention names because I'm superstitious," Newcombe said.

While Newcombe was pleased by finishing third behind first place Boston College and Northeastern at New Englands, he said that with a good year the Minutewomen can move up next season.

"I think we are right where we belong," Newcombe said. "With a good year, B.C. is not out of reach."

NIT tickets are on sale at Boyden

The loud and loyal horde that trailed the Minutemen over spring break has two last chances to see UMass in action, tonight against Stanford and Wednesday night in either the NIT Championship or consolation game. Both games will be played in Madison Square Garden in New York City.

UMass coach John Calipari said his team's postseason charge has been fueled by the fan support the Minutemen have received.

"We're the only eastern school [in the semifinals] and if the fans come out like the fans we've had, it's like a home tournament," Calipari said.

Tickets for tonight's game are on sale in the Athletic Ticket Office in 255 Boyden until 1 p.m. today. Tickets are $9 for students and $16 and $20 for adults.

The Athletic Ticket Office is also organizing buses to New York City. Seats are on sale for $15. Buses will leave from Alumni Stadium this afternoon at 1:30 p.m.

Boston continues dominance over Caps

LANDOVER, Md. (AP) The Washington Capitals have not beaten the Boston Bruins at the Capital centre since 1987. So under the circumstances, they were more than happy simply not to lose on Sunday.

And they didn't, rallying from two goals down midway through the third period to escape with a 3-3 tie. The tie moved Washington, which is 7-2-2 in its last 11 games, one point ahead of the New Jersey Devils into sole posession of third place in the Patrick Division and, coupled with Philadelphia's 6-2 loss to Buffalo on Sunday, put the Capitals two points ahead of the fifth-place Flyers with four games remaining.

"That was a tremendous point for us, to come back and tie the game against a team as good as the Boston Bruins," said Capitals coach Terry Murry, whose team is 0-5-2 in its last seven home games against the Bruins, including two loses in last year's Prince of Wales finals sweep.

"The pressure's on everyone [in the Patrick Division] right now, but it's been on us for the last 20 games or so," Miller said. "Every game is a must game and we've played well, even today. We've stepped up to the challenge, now we have to keep it going."

The Caps were in trouble early in the third after Boston broke a 1-1 tie early in the third period on goals by Ray Bourque and Ron Hoover only 56 seconds apart.

But Washington, seeking its ninth straight playoff appearance, got within 3-2 when Pivonka flipped the puck over fallen Bruins goalie Andy Moog with 12:23 remaining in the game, giving his team a badly needed wake up call.

The Caps kept the pressure on Moog, and tied the score with 9:46 remaining on Kelly Miller's team-leading 24th goal of the season.

Beaupre preserved the deadlock with less than two minutes left in regulation, stopping Ken Hodge on a low slap shot from the left circle, then robbing Glen Wesley with a tough stick save on the rebound.

The Caps outshot the Bruins 4-2 in overtime, but Moog remained steady in helping Boston remain unbeaten (5-0-12) in overtime games this season.

"If you look at the standings, you'd think they would have come out and played a solid game for two periods, but I didn't see that to tell you the truth," said Moog. "Until we took the lead, they really didn't come at us in the third period.

"You know what kind of team the Capitals are," Moog said. "Once they get a goal, they get rallying. From that point on, it really looked like they wanted to win the game."

Pivonka had given Washington a 1-0 lead at 14:40 of the first period when he tipped in Sabourin's shot from the left point only seconds after a Cap's power play had expired.

Washington had the opportunity to extend the lead early in second period when the Bruins' second-leading goal scorer, Dave Christian, was given a game misconduct and a major penalty for high-sticking.

The Caps failed to take advantage, however, managing just shots on Moog during the five-minute power play.

The Bruins tied the score later in the period on Cam Neely's power play goal [his 48th goal of the year] at 17:38.

Minutemen out of NIT contention

WHAT A SEASON — William Herndon and the Minutemen's bid for the NIT Tournament ended last night with a 73-71 loss to the Stanford Cardinal. The Minutemen, who had an exciting season, recorded a record of 20-12.

NEW YORK — Adam Keefe usually gets all the ink and double-teams.

But last night in Madison Square Garden it was Andrew Vlahov who pounded the coffin nails in the University of Massachusetts men's basketball team's National Invitational Tournament title hopes.

With John Tate doing a heroic defensive job on Keefe, Vlahov, a 59 percent free throw shooter, sank 12 of 12 free throws — six in the final four minutes of the game — en route to a 73-71 Stanford win.

Vlahov, a six-foot-seven senior forward from Perth, Australia, finished with 20 points and 11 rebounds.

"In terms of having a guy whose hands you want the ball in and making decisions late in the game, Vlahov's the guy," Stanford coach Mike Montgomery said. "We felt if we continued to go to our big people, sooner or later we'd make something happen."

Said UMass coach John Calipari, "He's a 59 percent free throw shooter who goes 12 for 12. . .maybe it just wasn't meant to be."

Keefe had a game high 24 points and 10 rebounds, but did most of his work in the game's opening minutes and early in the second half.

Through the first 10 minutes of the game, the Cardinal seemed headed toward a blowout win, building a 24-8 lead.

With Tate bounding off the bench to check Keefe, the Minutemen settled in on defense, and the game turned in their favor.

Rafer Giles scored 13 points in the next 9½ minutes, sparking a 23-11 run that brought the Minutemen to within four at 35-31, by halftime.

"We had a chance to give up early but we didn't quit," Calipari said.

UMass' surge was slowed by horrible free throw shooting; the Minutemen missed seven of 11 free throws in the half.

The Cardinal, with Keefe leading the way, again asserted itself in the early goings of the second half. Keefe scored 11 points, including an all-net three pointer, as the Cardinal rebuilt a nine point lead, 52-43, with 14 minutes to play.

And again the game turned in UMass' favor midway.

A Tony Barbee layup, Jim McCoy five-footer, and Will Herndon dunk trailing a fast break were part of a 12-4 UMass run that brought the Minutemen within one, 56-55, with 6:44 to play.

UMass led briefly, at 59-58 on a pair of Harper Williams free throws with 5:38 to play.

Vlahov then shouldered the Cardinal. Vlahov got a pair of free throws off a steal, collected a Deshon Wingate airball for a pair more, then snatched a Kenny Ammann airball and scored a layup to give the Cardinal a 69-66 lead with :47 to play.

The Minutemen missed three three-point tries in their next possession, and the Cardinal made all its free throws down the stretch, including a pair by Vlahov with :05 left that iced it.

Williams finished with 18 points to lead UMass, which placed five players in double figures. McCoy, who suffered through a two-for-seven, five-point first half, finished with 16.

The 20-12 Minutemen now turn their attention to Wednesday night's consolation game against the Colorado Buffalos.

"We got 20 wins and 20 wins is a big plateau when you're the University of Massachusetts," Calipari said.

Police departments in U.S. spotlight

LAPD motorist beating prompts examination of police brutality

LOS ANGELES (AP) — The videotaped beating of a Los Angeles motorist has put police departments in the spotlight around the nation and prompted a new examination of some old questions:

How common is police brutality? How many officers are punished? Which cities have the most rogue cops?

The answer is: it's hard to say.

There are few reliable nationwide figures on police brutality, and an Associated Press survey of selected U.S. cities shows no real pattern in the rate of complaints against police over the past five years.

The most striking thing about the statistics may be how much they vary, suggesting the colossal proportions of the task facing the U.S. Justice Department. The agency was ordered by the Attorney General Dick Thornburgh in the wake of the Los Angeles incident to review the use of force by police nationwide.

"There are so many darn variables. . .I don't think there is a nationwide standard," said Gerard Williams, police chief of Aurora, Colorado. Williams is president of the Police Executive Research Forum, a national organization of police brass.

The FBI does have national statistics on the number of police brutality cases it has handled over the past few years — 2,501 cases in fiscal 1988, 2,556 in 1989 and 2,427 in 1990.

But those represent only a fraction of all complaints. In general, the FBI gets involved in only the most serious cases.

The figures that have been available from local law inforcement agencies for the past five years only prove the futility of jumping to any conclusion about trends in police brutality.

There has been a rising number of complaints by residents of Cincinnati, Honolulu, Chicago, and Rochester, N.Y. There have been fewer complaints in San Francisco and New York. And the number has fluctuated or held steady in Miami, Minneapolis, New Orleans, Pittsburgh, Baltimore, Richmond, Va., Oklahoma City and Boise, Idaho.

The Rodney King beating, captured on videotape by an amateur, instantly made police brutality a national issue, and police beatings elsewhere in the past few weeks have received far more attention than they might have otherwise.

In Columbus, Ohio, the American Civil Liberties Union said it has been getting double its usual number of complaints about police since the videotape first aired. Atlanta's ACLU said complaints rose from two or three a week to two or three a day after the tape was broadcast.

In some parts of the country, however, police brutality was a high-profile issue before the King incident.

In Miami, violent confrontations between police officers and civilians have been blamed for race riots five times in the last 11 years. The worst occurred in 1980, when the aquital of five officers in the beating death of a Black motorcyclist set off three days of rioting in which 18 people were killed.

Tampa, Fla., was the scene of the two days of rioting in 1987 when a black assault suspect died after officers used a controversial chokehold on him.

Two months earlier, New York Mets pitcher Dwight Gooden, who is Black, was beaten by Tampa officers during a scuffle that broke out after a traffic stop.

Gooden pleaded no contest to resisting arrest and was put on probation. But a police report on the incident said it might have been avoided if a black police officer had been present.

In West Virginia, a state Supreme Court committee called for a police brutality investigation in December after a 17-year-old boy who allegedly was beaten and shocked with a stun gun.

In Minneapolis, a coalition of 37 groups called the Stop the Violence Committee formed in response to the Dec. 1 shooting of a 17-year-old boy who allegedly pointed a gun at a police officer.

UMass staff rallies against state furloughs

By MARK HENSLEY
Collegian Staff

Burning their monthly bills and chanting "We're mad as hell and we're not gonna take it," University staff rallied yesterday at the Fine Arts Center to protest Gov. Weld's signing of a bill to furlough state employees for up to 15 days while giving his cabinet members raises.

The protesters, members and supporters of the University Staff Association and the Massachusetts Teacher Association, justified their bill-burning, saying if the state can ignore the bills it had to pay, so could they.

Sheila Griffith, president of USA summarized the reasons behind the protest.

"We're here because we're tired of having the budget balanced on the backs of state employees, because we're disgusted with the decimating of public higher education and because we're infuriated with the impairment of our contracts," she said.

Last Friday, Weld signed a deficit reduction bill which forces state workers to work between two and 15 days without pay, with the amount of days graduated according to salary.

The furlough plan would save an estimated $92 million and would exempt workers with salaries under $20,000.

The bill also gives state workers three choices; they can take time off without pay; work for vacation days next year or work now but only receive payment for those days when they leave state service.

Griffith called Weld's actions "short-sighted" and accused him of failing to "look at the ramifications of what his cuts will do."

"The future of this state is in higher education," she said. "He has got to stop looking at state employees and higher education as a basis for cuts."

The protesters, who haven't received a raise in nearly three years, carried a dummy of Gov. Weld labeled "The Ax Man" as well as posters with slogans such as "Slavery went out with Lincoln" and "Why are we paying for Weld's staff's raises?"

12 students run for seats at Town Meeting

By ALEX DERING
Collegian Staff

Twelve students, representing students from Orchard Hill, Sylvan, Northeast and Southwest, are running in today's election for seats to the Amherst Town Meeting.

Commuter Area President Ted Chambers stated it is imperative for registered students to vote.

"Students definitely need representation in the Town Meeting," said Chambers. "Our interests have never truly been represented by their forum."

Citing the economic troubles of the region, Chambers said the town must be made aware students are the lifeblood of the community.

"Students bring over $100 million into the town each year," he said. "And the closing of the local businesses that catered to non-student centered needs is indicative of the economic woes that Amherst would face without the students' financial support."

He stressed this lack of attention by the town to student issues was not a conspiracy, but a case where "the town is just completely unaware of our needs and concerns."

Among those concerns was the possible elimination of the Rent Control Board, which Chambers called "the only service of any consequence that the town provides to students."

The Rent Control Board is set up by the town to protect students from unfair rent-pricing policies by landowners, said Chambers.

"That board costs about $15,000 a year for the town to operate," he said. 'Considering that the students account for 51/of the town's population, there should be more than $15,000 out of a $32 million budget allocated for them."

Chambers also expressed concern over the state of disrepair of some of the off-campus buildings which students live in.

"Some of the buildings are really awful. They are not safe places to live in by any means. Joseph Pirog might still be alive if his apartment had had a smoke detector," he said, referring to the Feb. 19 fire which killed Joseph Pirog and Matthew Peterson.

"It's issues like that one which the students need to have addressed and corrected through the town meeting," said Chambers.

There are five students: Owen Broadhurst, Hollis Crowley, Marjorie Decker, Paul Dionne and Matt Pavesi, running for seats in Precinct Two, which represents Orchard Hill.

There are three students: Kevin Newnan, Rich Rigney and Jenn Wood, running for seats in Precinct Three, which represents Northeast and Sylvan.

There are four students: Dennis Crowley, Sharon Lang, Rob Murray and Rob Witherall, running for seats in Precinct Four, which represents Southwest.

Students from Orchard Hill can vote at the fire station on East Pleasant St.

Northeast/Sylvan residents can vote at the Immanuel Lutheran Church on North Pleasant St.

Southwest residents can vote at Bang's Community Center on Boltwood Walk.

Candidates from Central did not return their nomination papers in time to be entered onto the ballot.

"Those students [who get elected] will do more in one night at the town meeting than they could accomplish all year through the SGA," he said.

Coalition promotes reformation of reproductive statutes

By ALEX DERING
Collegian Staff

A local group of activists known as the Coalition for Awareness in Justice are seeking to promote the reform of state statutes concerned with reproductive rights.

The Coalition, which is comprised of students and area residents, wishes to see legal exemption from child support obligation provided for unmarried men who do not want to participate in raising a child.

One member, UMass senior Jim Brennan, said although current laws provide for women having the legal means to evade eighteen years of child rearing, there is no analogous provision for men.

"The courts give a woman complete control of the situation when she becomes pregnant,' he said. "If a father wants the child and the mother doesn't, she may terminate the pregnancy, regardless of what the father wants. But when the mother wants the child and the father doesn't, she may keep the child."

Brennan said it was unreasonable to expect men to shoulder half the responsibility for a choice only women may legally make.

Coalition members held this exempt status should not be available to men who initially chose to participate in rearing a child and subsequently changed their minds.

Barbara Marean, also a UMass student, said this was not to provide a father with a legal way to abandon his family.

"I feel that when two people agree to share the responsibility of raising children, neither should be permitted to bail out," she said. "Also, I think that the parents, if unmarried, should have equal opportunity in choosing whether they want to take on the burden of raising those children."

Several said in today's society, it is not unusual for women to voluntarily assume full responsibility for child care. Women who utilize sperm banks were cited as the most obvious example.

UMass sophomore Sean Manseau said even if the sought after reforms are made, the man would still not have the option the woman does of raising the child independently unless the woman was willing to cooperate by bearing the child.

"The fact women must endure the year or so of inconvenience associated with pregnancy is the basis upon which the courts determined that women may not be compelled to go full-term," said Manseau. "Even if the father is willing to burden himself with nearly twenty years of sole responsibility for the child."

He went on to say this is unlikely to change as it is an inevitable consequence of biology only women are able to conceive.

Charlene Whenman, a senior in legal studies, said the aims of the Coalition were in no way contrary to those of feminism.

"Feminism," she said, "Is a doctrine espousing equal rights regardless of gender. A privileged status for women undermines this ideal as much as a privileged status for men does."

Coalition spokesperson William Wilson said this issue is one of several of interest to the group. "Many times court rulings reflecting change in social values have given rise to unforeseen and unjust side effects,' he said. "Periodic refinement of those laws is inevitable and necessary."

USA member senior technician in the plant soil and sciences department John Tristan said the cuts were "destroying the morale of state workers and quality was going to suffer."

Tristan said he could not believe Weld's hypocrisy in giving his senior cabinet members raises while imposing furloughs, a sentiment echoed by Rep. Stan Rosenberg (D-Amherst) in a telephone interview.

"It is outrageous that the Governor would try to save the pay raises of his highest paid cabinet members while asking state employees to take pay cuts," Rosenberg said.

Myra Madigan, a technical assistant with the property office said the furlough meant state workers were not going to able to pay their bills and state workers were "literally losing faith with the government."

Last week, Provost Richard O'Brien, in a last ditch effort to dissuade Weld from signing the bill, sent a telegram to the State House expressing his displeasure at the furlough plan.

O'Brien called the bill a "ferocious cut" which would "wreak havoc on our finest, encourage them to leave, and have excessively severe effects on all faculty and staff."

Keith Carver appointed interim engineering dean

By TAMIR LIPTON
Collegian Staff

When James John, the Dean of Engineering announced he was leaving in July for Flint, Michigan to become president of the General Motors Incorporated Engineering and Management Institute, the University of Massachusetts had a position to fill.

The school needed to find a replacement for Dean John. That is where Keith Carver comes in. Carver was the chairman of the department of Electrical and Computer Engineering at UMass.

Now, Carver is the interim dean of the school of engineering, a position which he gladly accepts, knowing that he has the support of his peers.

"Keith has been an integral part of our school since his arrival," said Dean John. "He has assisted me greatly in making sure our new research facility is built properly and will meet our needs."

Chancellor Joseph Duffey said, "Dr. Carver has contributed greatly to the engineering school already and I am deeply appreciative of his commitment to expand upon his responsibilities."

The search for a permanent dean is scheduled to begin in the fall of 1991, according to Carver, and the new dean should be in place by the fall semester of 1992.

As for the department of Electrical and Computer Engineering, an acting chairman will be identified in the upcoming weeks, according to Carver.

As chairman, Carver worked with faculty to underwrite research laboratory facilities and to update undergraduate and graduate research in the curricula.

Carver came to UMass in 1984 from New Mexico State University where he served as director of the Engineering Research Center and was a professor of electrical and computer engineering.

He has also been active on National Aeronautics and Space Administration committees. He was involved with the earth observing station, a project that has been in the planning stages for a few years, has recently received funding in the current fiscal year.

In 1983, Carver received a Public Service Medal from NASA.

WHY RECYCLE?
Recycling cleans up the environment, saves natural resources, will save landfill space, creates jobs, and saves money. Higher waste disposal costs could mean an increase in taxes. With the ever-increasing problems surrounding waste, the Town of Amherst has passed an ordinance, making recycling the law. As a member of the campus community, you can help.

Surprise ruling still doesn't make for safe workplaces

All I can say is that I was really surprised. It was totally unexpected. . .and no, I'm not talking about the UMass basketball team's trip to Madison Square Garden. . .

Last week, a conservative Supreme Court unanimously struck down "fetal protection" policies aimed at excluding fertile women from working in establishments that could potentially harm their future children.

I never expected such a sexually liberating decision from this right-wing "gang of nine." What is even more surprising than the court making moves to protect women's rights — considering its recent decisions thwarting abortion rights liberties — is that it rendered a decision that leaned in the anti-big business direction. Amazing.

In this suit, a group of women were suing a slew of major corporations, including General Electric and Monsanto, for policies which required them to prove their companies, or advancing up their corporate ladders. The policies governed jobs that could contaminate a woman's body and possibly mutate some of her eggs. If women did not become surgically sterilized, or prove they had already gone through menopause, they were discounted for employment/advancement.

Meredith O'Brien

The benevolent companies claimed they were just protecting "the family" and the babies that these women could bear. They did not want the responsibility of being held liable for mutated babies. They were just protecting those helpless "fetuses" from their uncaring mothers who chose to work in places that could damage them.

Well, these women — and the court — said these policies were ludicrous and a blatant violation of civil rights legislation forbidding discrimination based on race or gender. These policies were lumped into the same category as the so-called protective policies which outlined exactly what jobs women could hold and how long they could work. These policies were rendered unconstitutional.

Yet the court did not stride as far as it could have, in fact, a few justices wrote rather disturbing concurring opinions saying while this policy which singled out fertile women was inherently unfair, a policy forbidding both fertile males and females could be reasonable to protect the unborn.

The court took one of the arguments put forth by the plaintiffs and disastrously warped it — if working in a lead factory is dangerous to a woman's reproductive potential, what happens to a man's? Their sperm could sustain just as much damage as eggs, both resulting in disabled children.

The court left the door open for companies to avoid the most logical solution to the situation — a safe workplace — to once again let the businesses just discriminate instead of (god forbid) spend any money to help solve the matter.

If these work places are so dangerous, why isn't it the company's responsibility to make them safe and workable? And if the products being made can do such irreparable damage to one's eggs and sperm, what could it damage once it is bought, used and disposed of? If it's not good for you when you make it, it certainly is not going to be good for you when you put it in a dump somewhere. Then what are they going to do, restrict where you live so dump proprietors won't have to worry about contaminating area eggs and sperm?

And what about those sterile people left behind to do the job? Surely if the material they are dealing with is so dangerous that it could hurt their fertile co-workers, its damaging effects must not be limited to just reproductive cells.

Well, for once, White males will be in the same discriminatory boat as women. They will see what it is like to be the victim of discrimination based on sex and biology. I guarantee not many men will have to lose their jobs before this policy is challenged.

Palestine power play: Talk to the PLO

In the aftermath of the Gulf war there has been much discussion of the future role of the Palestine Liberation Organization in the issue of Palestine and the supposed opportunity to pursue peace without its participation. This dangerous nonsense is based on a series of misrepresentations and misapprehensions that the PLO supported the Iraqi occupation of Kuwait, that this undermines Palestinian claims, and that this invalidates the PLO as their national representative.

Hussein Ibish

The PLO did not support the invasion or occupation of Kuwait and worked tirelessly to implement an Arab diplomatic solution to what was an internal Arab problem. However, when it came to the United States effort to destroy Iraq, like all Arab nationalists, the PLO supported Iraq in its resistance. Nonetheless, it never advocated the annexation of Kuwait. This is a common lie.

Even if they had, this would not undermine the moral/legal Palestinian claim to self-determination and opposition to Zionist colonialism.

The definitive distinction between inter-Arab disputes and those between the Arab world and outsiders is the key. Simply put, inter-Arab disputes must be the sole concern of the Arab people and not fodder of the ravenous appetites of foreign powers, particularly colonial ones. Personally, the only thing that I would like to see less than the continuation of the brutal occupation of Lebanon, of which I am a citizen, by Syria, is the intervention of a non-Arab power to end it. The calling in of imperialists is the most unacceptable act possible.

Further, there is an obvious but seldom articulated difference between wars advancing and sustaining colonialism, as opposed to wars designed to combat its depredations, particularly in the case of ongoing economic and resource exploitation (read theft), as in Kuwait. Many have mistakenly drawn a false moral equivalence, suggesting that the United States was in no position to condemn Iraq since it had committed a similar action in Panama. There is no analogy between the two, the American action in Panama being one to perpetuate colonial rule and economic exploitation and the Iraqi one to fight the same. Rather they are opposite, as any good conservative will tell you in a different code. If Colombia were to attack United States occupation forces in Panama, to take back territory seized from it unjustly by the colonial power, then we might have an analogy. Just imagine the consequences. In a world defined by the fundamental opposition of, and radical distinction between, colonial exploiters and collaborators on the one hand, and the oppressed peoples of the Third World on the other, this sort of moral equivalence is inadmissible. Therefore, support for wars of national liberation or economic nationalism against neocolonialism in no way undermines opposition to the expansion and maintenance of colonialism, in Palestine or elsewhere.

Palestinian human rights, including the right to self-determination, are independent of all extraneous factors. They are inviolable and cannot be forfeited by acts of omission or commission. The past and present disregard of these rights is one of the gravest miscarriages of justice in this misbegotten century. The continuation of this outrage cannot be mitigated by any excuses.

Finally, all that is left to do is to point out that which everyone who is familiar with the modern politics of the Levant is fully well aware, that the PLO is the sole legitimate representative of the Palestinian people. It is the liberation movement of the Palestinian nation and its expression of identity. The concept of an alternative leadership posits the existence of a group of prominent Palestinians with popular legitimacy who will repudiate the PLO and, presumably, the rights of diaspora Palestinians, and will negotiate alone. There is not even a single such individual as everyone, now including James Baker, knows perfectly well.

There can and will be no peace without the PLO. Since everyone involved knows this, rejection of a role for the PLO is effectively a rejection of negotiations as such. There is no alternative. Peace.

We must act now to save education

Now is the time to speak out in strong opposition to the massive cuts that the University has taken, the furloughs and the tuition increases. We can't sit by any longer.

We all mobilized fantastically to oppose Question Three last fall. Let's make the same effort now.

If we don't do it, no one else will. I urge all students, all faculty and staff and all residents of the Pioneer Valley to do everything you can think of to make the Governor and the Legislature understand the impact of the cuts and tuition increases and the unfairness of furloughs.

Tell them why public education is so important. Please write or call Governor Weld and your legislators, talk to people in other parts of the state over spring break, and rally at the State House.

Write to: Governor William Weld, The State House, Boston, MA 02133. State senators and representatives can be reached at the same address. We must act now to save our University!

VOCABULARY BUILDER

Titillate n. 1. To tickle. 2. To excite agreeably

If I can interrupt the rhetoric for a second

Let me tell you what it means to be a liberal. Contemporary American liberal thought is based on a strong commitment to civil liberties. They protects everyone; conservatives, communists, minorities and majorities alike. The liberal ideology is based on a belief that the government is the best tool to use — in some cases — to solve national social and economic problems. In some cases — not in all. Liberal thought acknowledges the fact that we live in the greatest, most powerful nation on Earth. It also recognizes the inherent dangers in ethnocentricity, attempts to deal effectively with these dangers.

To be a liberal is not to be a communist. I am firmly committed to the ideals of capitalism that have made America great. It is not a perfect system, but it is the best we have.

The Lesbian/Bisexual/Gay Alliance is not a liberal organization. Taken in the context of the world outside UMass, they are a radical organization. The Young Americans for Freedom is also a radical organization. Any group that opposes the constitutional right to privacy and constitutional guarantees of freedom of speech and peaceable assembly is a fringe group indeed.

The above-mentioned rights are ours only because of liberals on the Supreme Court. Social security, labor unions, and financial aid are all benefits of past liberal accomplishments. It is indeed difficult to find true liberals and conservatives at UMass due to the political polarization of this campus — But please don't mistake reactionary fringe groups for the real thing. Thank you.

Guilty by Suspicion looks at the effects of McCarthyism

By MEREDITH O'BRIEN
Collegian Staff
and SCOTT WEISS
Collegian Correspondent

Guilty by Suspicion is a compelling drama about film director David Merril, played by Robert DeNiro, who becomes blacklisted after his name is linked to communists during the government-sponsored Red Scare in the 1950s.

Robert De Niro stars as filmmaker David Merrill in Guilty by Suspicion.

WEISS: This is a very moving film in which the effects of the McCarthy era are portrayed on a very personal basis. . .something most of us were not around to experience for ourselves. To see this movie, knowing that these events were occurring 40 years ago in this country, is very disturbing. And the movie uses these facts to its advantage. The film focuses more on the "facts" than the characters themselves.

O'BRIEN: I think you are wrong to say this film does not focus on characters and only gives the audience "facts" about the McCarthy era and the effect it had on suspected communists and their families. This movie gave me a personal look into the true tragedies invoked by this cruel crusade, spearheaded by the House Un-American Activities Committee investigation into "subversive" activities. Until this movie, the term the "Hollywood 10" was just a historical term to me. After seeing what being charged a communist really did to people in the 50s, I feel I can put some human emotions into the dry history.

WEISS: I already said that this movie gives a personal view, but there is just too much happening to develop characters and relationships deeply and get out of the theater in two hours. I think this movie does an excellent job of showing the frustration and helplessness of Merril and of others in the entertainment business. He is forced into either lying about his best friends to save his skin or risk being blacklisted or even receiving a jail sentence. With or without deep characters, this movie provides a much-needed reminder about what is possible, even in this free country.

O'BRIEN: I must admit, there were times in the movie where you were left with unanswered questions about Merril's personal life, background and personality. For instance, there were constant mentions that Merril's whole life was film directing, that he would sacrifice anything for it. His best friend, his ex-wife, even his acquaintances all said they thought he would testify before the committee and sell-out his friends as communists all in order to be able to continue making movies. We are never really given a real in-depth look into Merril the man, but if it came down to looking at his personal life or the issue at hand, I wouldn't change a thing in this movie.

WEISS: That's my point exactly! We are really given no reason to think that Merril cares only for his work. His actions during the movie are not self-centered at all, but everyone acts as though they are. Also, his supposed best friend Robert "Bunny" Baxter (George Wendt. . .aka Norm Peterson) is hardly ever there for Merril. Merril and his ex-wife, Ruth, (Annette Bening) are implied to not get along all that well but they seem to hit it off pretty well for most of the movie. In general, it is difficult to understand the characters' motivation because of the lack of character development. Other than that, however, the film is excellent with a meaningful purpose, definitely worth seeing. Thumbs up.

O'BRIEN: For a splendidly emotional and human look at the treacherous communist hunt of the 50s, Guilty by Suspicion is a must-see. Thumbs up.

THIRD WORLD AFFAIRS

More than oil, sand and words

Well, the deed is done. United States objectives have been met, Iraq has been bombed out of this century, its infrastructure is now that of a pre-industrial society, and the whole country is racked with disease, devastation and insurrection.

But then, that was an unfortunate side-effect. With the help of some "good" Arabs, the "unruly" Arabs had to be taught a lesson. What else would one do in the savage tribal culture of warring brigands, harem girls, camels, sand and oases, and so on?

The use of such demeaning stereotyping to justify the genocide of "undesirables" should come as no surprise, especially in this empire. And so, from the "bad injuns" and "red savages" to the "slant eyes" and "gooks," and now the "towel-heads" and "camel-kissers," the pattern is dehumanize, and then destroy.

Today we have witnessed the destruction of Iraq. However, before it is banished from memory, a few words about a region and a people who have given the world much more than just oil.

Never before in history had an empire grown as vast and as rapidly as when the force of Arab Islam surged forth from the Arabian Peninsula in the seventh century. Within a century, its imperial realm rivaled that of Rome at its peak.

Unlike the Mongols who left little but ruin and destruction in their wake, Arab conquests were made in the path of God, to create a new and permanent Islamic social order. Unlike the Europeans, who imposed their culture on subjects, the Arabs integrated into their own cultural life their subjects' ancient heritage of learning, which included Greek philosophy and science, Persian literary and political wisdom, and Indian medicine and math.

The rise of the Abbasid dynasty in 750 marked the golden and silver ages of Islamic civilization. Its capital, Baghdad, was built in 762 by the Caliph Abu Jafar Abdallah al-Mansur.

Basra was the first city founded by the Arab conquerors; Baghdad became the great center of medieval Islam.

Arabic literature blossomed due to the sophistication and clarity of the language, which lends itself to rhyme, rhythm and harmonious patterns. This makes it exact and musical at the same time, and hence one of the world's least translatable languages.

The Arabs also made considerable innovation in ceramics, metalworks, and motifs, borrowed heavily by the West. Europeans even use the term arabesque to mean intricate design.

Indian, Persian, and Greek mathematical treatises were vastly enriched. Trigonometry became an independent branch of pure mathematics.

Madanmohan Rao

Modern numerals are of Arabic origin. "Algebra" comes from the Arabic al-jabr, and "algorithm," a fundamental concept in computer science, is named after the mathematician Al-Khwarizmi.

Knowledgeable, influential treatises on clinical, internal, and psychiatric medicine and therapeutics were written. It was in Islam, under the Arab caliphs, that the prototype of the modern hospital was first established — an institution providing health care, professional training, and health-related information.

Muslim surgeons were among the first to use narcotic and sedative drugs in operations. Advances made in ophthamology were not surpassed by the Europeans until several centuries later.

Pharmacy, under Arab patronage, became an independent science. It was in ninth century Baghdad that the first privately owned and managed pharmaceutical stores were opened.

Remarkable progress was also made in navigation and astronomy through the use of observational and computational instruments.

Hundreds of the stars in the night sky still have the Arabic names given to them by Middle Eastern astronomers — Mintaka, Alnilam and Alnitak in Orion (which form the hunter's belt), Aldebaran in Taurus, and Altair in Aquila, to name but a few.

The Arab empire dominated land and sea routes from Spain to China. The first paper mill in Baghdad was built with Chinese technology around 800. By contrast, it was not till the 12th century that the first European paper mills were established.

The Arabs also excelled in the textile industry, commerce, and maritime navigation. This is evinced in the number of English words derived from Arabic referring to cloth (gauze, chiffon, satin, mohair, muslin), commerce (traffic, tariff, almanac, caliber, coffer, cipher, nadir, zenith), and the maritime profession (admiral, sloop).

Yet another seminal Arab contribution was the preservation and enrichment of classical learnings, and their subsequent translation into Latin during the 12th century.

For almost 500 years, during Europe's "dark ages," the Arabs served as custodians of this vast compendium of knowledge, which brought Europe out of its squalor and misery. This debt of Western culture to the Arabs has been conveniently forgotten.

From the 13th century onwards, the Arab empire went into a perod of relative decline, a process accelerated by Mongol invasions. Subsequent developments included the rise of the Ottoman Turks, whose empire was then dismantled by the Europeans.

To secure control of oil and trade routes, boundaries were drawn and states created to keep the people of the region divided and weak. Attempts by countries like Iraq to redress such wrongs and promote equity have been ruthlessly crushed.

The Arab world entered its own "dark age" in the 16th century, but is now entering the darkest of dark ages.

Democracy and the Third World

Quite often, the gracious behavior of the countries of the North towards the South (the so-called "Third World") are justified in the name of democracy. There exist heterodox schools characterized (in alphabetical order) by anarchists, communists, feminists, greens, liberals, minority-movements, socialists and zebra-hunters who supposedly say that democracy is not an issue when the North so graciously try for the upliftment of the South.

However, they have been singularly unsuccessful in making a dent in the mainstream thought of the North. We shall not condescend to discourse with these heterodox views. Nor shall we challenge the integrity of the noble defenders of democracy in the South. We shall challenge the premise of democracy itself.

Ivatury/Dutta

Democracy is more often than not the politics of trivial issues. Not surprisingly so because the vox populi, even if it were willing, is incapable of articulating objective opinions on complex issues. Hence democracy devolves into a telegenic pageant of demagogues.

The illusion of choice on the other hand gives legitimacy to the notion of democracy. People are easily indoctrinated to consider the government to be their government. In spite of universal franchise, democracy is a government of the Pharaohs, by the plebians, for the patricians.

Power is wielded from the barrel of a Kalashnikov and the wallet of an emir. For a moment, though, let us abandon the real world and enter the arena of a utopian democracy.

Why is this concept of majority rule of numbers such a nice one? If there are is no consensus of opinion in a society, why should the majority voice prevail? Why should the minority be subjected to the tyranny of the majority?

Even the very covenant which ensures the establishment of a "constitutional democracy" is in itself a tyranny of the majority. Constitutional democracy just ensures that unpopular opinions will not be heard (for example the opinions expressed here), but ignored.

If, in spite of our arguments, the Northern interests still believe that democracy is indeed the best system for mankind, then indeed a patent is urged on this intellectual property right. It is obviously not in the interest of the North to have a democratically resurgent South without the payment of royalties.

In fact, if there are fundamental differences between the interests of the North and South, then utopian democratic systems in the South might just exacerbate world tensions because the people would have a stake in their state and want their government to carry out their interests vigorously.

For once, though (with apologies for our naivete in the world of real politik), if we ignore cold reason and look at the problem in terms of ethics we see that by the very principles of liberty, people in any society have the right to choose whatever system they see fit for themselves.

If they wish to have a chimpanzee to rule over them or a computer program to control their money supply in their economy, that is their prerogative. Any coercive external encouragement to benefit such poor souls is obviously well-meant but unethical.

YOUR DAILY HOROSCOPE
By JEANE DIXON

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Delegate more authority now and you will soon share in increased profits. A new romance is a blessing for someone stuck in a rut. Your optimism is justified where vocational challenges are concerned.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Your mind is crystal clear today. You know precisely what to begin or complete. Clean up your own act before playing amateur psychologist. Domestic affairs go extremely well. Have fun this evening.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): To ensure continued success, you may have to make certain sacrifices on the job. Reopen the lines of communication with estwhile business associates if it is time to forgive and forget.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Financial gains can be made through confidential channels today. Postpone signing contracts. You sense what needs to be changed and the best way to proceed. Home life begins to feel right again.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): You can shine on the job today. Do not let silly doubts hold you back. Have patience with higher-ups, keeping any irritation you feel under wraps. Go your merry way after office hours.

LIBRA (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): You can cultivate a valuable alliance behind closed doors today. Private talks prove very enlightening. Socializing with your colleagues is fine so long as you do not spend too much.

VIRGO (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Go with the flow at work. Other people will assist you, even financially! Cultivate a calm manner to offset any worries about a romantic partner. Keep in close touch with parents.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): New financial gains are possible today. Keep business negotiations strictly confidential. Make overdue changes in your work environment. Romance holds several pleasant surprises.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Turbulent forces are at work. It would be unwise to make a hasty decision about a relationship. Emphasize your desire for stability. Business people express admiration for your expertise.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Retain your enthusiasm for an idea, do not give up easily. To win support you may have to take people aside and turn on the charm. An older person offers valuable financial advice.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Romance looks rosy. Give loved a well-deserved pat on the back. Domestic tensions fade. Greater diplomacy is the key to getting along with difficult work associates.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Efforts to beautify your home will increase its value while giving you a sense of deep satisfaction. Face any domestic problems head-on. "Playing ostrich" will only add to feelings of tension.

Latshaw (Md.) L.C. was rained out.

The team returns home 0-0 because the games are viewed as scrimmages.

"They were very aggressive," Jones said of the play during the scrimmages. "We have a very tenacious mental attitude toward our game. The players showed good poise."

"We're playing much more like a team," assistant coach Tom Carmean said of the week's work. "We're not dependent on one player to have a good day in order to win."

This year's tri-captains offer a blend of talent, experience and maturity. Senior attackman Jim McAleavey psyches the team for good play and strong competition while senior midfielder Rick Senatore helps the players keep things in perspective and sophomore Rick Mullins sets the example.

"They're willing to make more sacrifices for the team," assistant coach Glenn Maller said of the players. "Maybe this year that'll be enough to take them further than in past seasons. They're a very cohesive group."

"I see more of a team effort [as compared to previous years]," Jones reflected. "They listen and they want to learn."

The rosters holds 12 seniors, seven of which are returning lettermen. The coaches agree the players are in better physical shape than in the past and attribute it to their commitment.

"I've been very pleased," Jones said. "They're diligent about sticking to a program."

"They understand the team concept," Carmean said. "We were able to dissolve an 'independent' team."

Part of dissolving that independance required moving some players around. Sophomore Mark Millon has moved from attack to midfield, a move which evens out a heady offense.

"It benefits everyone," Carmean said of the switch. "We didn't want to overload our attack. We needed to spread out the talent."

"The offense looks great and always will," Maller said. "They're a determined group."

The Gorillas face Jones' alma mater, Cornell, in Ithaca, N.Y., Wednesday for their season opener.

Celtic signee is former Minuteman

By THOMAS A. GEORGE
Collegian Correspondent
and The Associated Press

Through a twisted chain of events, Arthur J. (A.J.) Wynder finally made the big time.

The Boston Celtics signed former University of Massachusetts guard A.J. Wynder yesterday to a 10-day contract.

Wynder replaces Charles Smith, who is the Celtics player charged in the hit-and-run deaths of two Boston University students.

Smith was arraigned Friday on charges of vehicular homicide, driving under the influence of alcohol and other charges in connection with the deaths of two Boston University students. An Trinh, 21, and Michelle Dartley, 20, died at the site on Commonwealth Avenue, in the heart of that campus.

As a freshman, Wynder played a scant 14 minutes played and contributed four rebounds. He left UMass in 1982 for Fairfield University, where he graduated.

The 6-2, 180-pound guard was not drafted by an NBA team. He played in 54 games for the Wyoming Wildcatters in 1987-88, averaging 7.9 points. The following season, he played in 54 games for Cedar Rapids (Iowa), averaging 12.6 points.

He played in 53 games for the Continental Basketball Leagues's Cedar Rapids Silver Bullets and the Quad City Thunder this season. Wynder played for St. Etienne (France) before going back to the Cedar Rapids team.

Celtics spokesman Jeff Twiss said Wynder's contract was 'loosely' connected to Smith's alleged involvement in the homicide.

"I can't answer that. I don't know," Twiss said, in reference to the connection between Wynder and Smith. "My hunch is that one didn't precipitate the other."

While a student at UMass, Wynder was stabbed Dec. 6, 1982, in the area of John F. Kennedy Residence Hall on Massachusetts Avenue, after which he never returned to the court as a Minuteman.

According to police reports, the stabbing was a result of a "discussion about a woman." Micoyan N. Von Dyke, the alleged assailant, was not a student at the time.

The woman was a mutual friend of Wynder and Von Dyke. The two went on a walk, apparently to discuss each other's involvement with the woman in question, according to the assigned prosecuting attorney David Angier.

Wynder, former resident of Mackimmie Residence Hall, was stabbed in the lower abdomen. When admitted to Cooley Dickinson Hospital his condition was listed as serious. Due to a heavy loss of blood, Wynder underwent surgery to determine if permanent damage had been done, according to Arthur Wynder Sr.

Wynder, of New York City, began practicing with the Celtics Monday. He will wear number 12.

Gymnasts land in fourth at Easterns

By MICHAEL MORRISSEY
Collegian Correspondent

The University of Massachusetts men's gymnastics team ended their season with a fourth place finish in the Eastern Intercollegiate Gymnastics League Championships last Saturday at Rutgers University.

UMass scored 264 points, but could not compete with first-place Temple, who scored 276 points even without their best gymnast, All-American Bill Roth.

"They were unbelievable," said coach Roy Johnson. Syracuse finished second with 268 points and Army placed third with 267 points.

Fortunately, the season ended with a few bright spots for some individual gymnasts. Sophomore Steve Christensen broke the long standing UMass individual all-around record March 16 with a score of 55.1 against Cortland. The former record was 55.05 established by Gene Whalen in 1974.

In the EIGL meet, Christensen came in third on the pommel horse and senior Dave DiNucci placed fifth in the vault with a score of 8.8. Freshman Joe Haran had a big day, taking fifth in the horizontal bar (9.1) and capturing fourth on the floor exercise with a 9.05.

For some gymnasts, the year might not be over. The NCAA Eastern Regional Championship meet combines top performers from many schools to recognize their year-long excellence in each event.

The team will find out on Wednesday just who will compete as the selection process is not complete. Steve Christensen's horse routine, Haran's vault and DiNucci's high bar may all be promising enough to merit invitations, according to Johnson.

With the regular season over, Johnson said he is pleased with many of his team's accomplishments, but he said he still feels there is work to be done.

"We broke a team record for points and we beat the three service academies also," Johnson said. "Besides, we finished fifth in the EIGLs last year, so we're getting better.

"We're going to be stronger next year, with a good recruiting class," he said.

Gorillas hungry for real competition

By ADRIEN MATT
Collegian Staff

Pale and eager.

Although this year's spring trip didn't entail warmer climes, it allowed the lacrosse team to face some of the tougher competition this nation offers.

Ted Garber's Gorillas competed against New York and Maryland lacrosse clubs, tolerating miserable weather conditions. The team suffered only one loss — to the Long Island Lacrosse Club (12-11).

"We had a brief moment of mental lapse in the first half," assistant coach Aaron Jones said refering to a four-goal stretch. "But on the whole, I saw smart play.

Defensively, the team has matured. Sophomores and juniors have seen playoff berths and seem eager to repeat sucessful seasons.

"I've been very impressed with the defense," he said. "They played very well all three games."

The Gorillas went on to beat North Hempstead L.C. 14-8 and Mt. Washington L.C. 13-8. A game scheduled with

Baseball goes 3-8 on Florida trip vs. strong schedule

By GREG SUKIENNIK
Collegian Staff

Undoubtedly the University of Massachusetts baseball team was hoping for better than a 3-8 record on their annual Florida spring break road trip. But considering the circumstances — namely, the strength of opposition like Florida and South Florida and the fact that those teams have played far more games this season than the Minutemen — the results aren't so disappointing.

UMass pulled out three wins, including a 9-8 come-from-behind effort against Michigan State, a 6-2 win over Rollins behind a strong outing from pitcher Jim Telgheder, and a 21-14 pasting of Lowell. On the down side, South Florida took all three games from the Minutemen, and both Florida and Rollins won two games apiece.

UMass coach Mike Stone said that although he was hoping the Minutemen could pull out a few more wins against some of Florida's tougher competition, he saw signs of potential in the team.

Minuteman pitcher John Russell is one of four Sophomores whom coach Mike Stone is planning to use as starters this season. The baseball team faces UConn at Lorden field Wednesday at 3 pm.

"We have the talent to play at that level," asserted Stone. "We felt we could stay with those strong teams and knock a few of them off, but we lacked consistency at times, particularly on the mound but overall as well."

Telgheder was among the bright spots on the trip. He accounted for two of UMass' three wins, going nearly the distance in both games. Telgheder went eight and two-thirds innings in the Rollins win, and overcame a shaky start against Lowell to pitch into the ninth inning.

Stone was also impressed with the play of catcher Derek Dana.

"Derek really shined behind the plate," he said. "He was throwing out runners and handling our pitching staff well. He's shown a lot of improvement."

Center fielder Mike Tobin and shotstop Glen DiSarcina were players whom Stone pointed out as having played well during the trip.

"Tobin caught everything that was hit at him, and DiSarcina played excellent defense at short," he said.

Pitcher Rob Graziano also stood out, striking out nine Michigan State Spartans in four innings of relief en route to UMass' 9-8 comeback victory. Graziano picked up the win in relief of freshman Peter Ferrari.

"We saw some excellent pitchers and some good hitters, but we weren't intimidated — we played right with them," noted Stone. "We'd like to see these teams again — hopefully we'll get far enough [in post-season play] that we'll have the chance."

UConn game is tomorrow: UMass' home opener against Connecticut has been postponed until Wednesday afternoon at 3 p.m. due to swamp-like conditions at Earl E. Lorden field. Since construction of Mullins Arena has blocked the main access to Lorden field, use the left field entrance from lot 25.

UMass to test phone pre-registration system

By TAMIR LIPTON
Collegian Staff

If you are an Engineering, Sociology, Animal Science, Hotel Restaurant and Travel Administration, Economics or Mathematics major, you won't be pre-registering for classes next fall the way you used to. No, you won't have to deal with the hassle of filling in the bubbles. Why?

Because the Undergraduate and Graduate Registrars' Offices will be conducting a pilot of the University of Massachusetts' new $90,000, 32 telephone, touchtone pre-registration system. The Registrar's Office will be testing the system's effectiveness and efficiency.

Undergraduates in the pilot departments will receive a Personal Identification Number, which will allow them to access the pre-registration system using a touchtone phone. Graduate students will not be issued PINs.

It is important to remember this is only a substitution to the old pre-registration ways, said Registrar Nancy Fitzpatrick, who is involved in the coming together of this project. It does not mean students automatically receive all the classes they have registered for, she stressed.

Students will still receive their schedules in August and will probably still have to go through the aggravating add/drop process.

The time at which students pre-register, and the method the students use to pre-register, will not affect whether they will get certain courses, according to Fitzpatrick.

With the new pre-registration system, students will get immediate feedback so they can make sure they have entered their course requests correctly.

One of the concerns that the Registrar's Office has with this system is how long it will take students to get through on the 32 phone system.

However, according to Fitzpatrick, they have consulted Penn State and Ohio State who both have the same system with the same number of phones and with 50,000 students and each school is happy with the way the system is working.

Students in the pilot groups will be asked to answer a questionnaire when they are finished pre-registering. Among the questions they will be answering is how many times the phone was busy when they tried to get through.

All PINs are registered in the computer through the Registrar's Office, and will be changed each semester to protect each student's identity and to ensure students continue to go to their departments (where they pick up their PIN) and meet with guidance counselors if it is required by the department.

The pilot pre-registration is the first step in automating the University's entire registration process, making it easier and more convenient for students, said Fitzpatrick.

The next step will be to make pre-registration available through touchtone telephones for all students. Eventually, add/drop will be conducted over the phone too.

The system speaks instructions to students, who use the keypad on their touchtone phones to enter their course transactions.

Former Sports Illustrated model trashes porn, pageants

By THOMAS A. GEORGE
Collegian Correspondent

Pornography dispenses enormous amounts of women hating images, making the feminist the enemy, according to a former Sports Illustrated model turned feminist activist.

Ann Simonton, speaking in the Student Union Ballroom last night said it is pornography producers who don't like "powerful women."

"When I was a model, a wide grin was what they [photographers] were after, now it is getting toward the serious or victimized look," she said.

Simonton was the 1974 cover model for Sports Illustrated's swimsuit issue.

She has also appeared on the cover of Seventeen as well as in the pages of Glamour, Vogue, Cosmopolitan, Women's Day, and Bride magazines.

In a graphic slide presentation, Simonton portrayed the uses of racial stereotyping, passivity, violence, fear and bondage as advertising vehicles.

Simonton said she has been involved in the destruction of numerous copies of magazines in stores.

She said she has been arrested 11 times.

Simonton addressed the prevelance of the symbols of gang rape in pornography, a ten-billion dollar industry.

Slides were shown of a portion of a Hustler magazine piece that featured a gang style rape on a pool table.

The piece ran three months previous to the rape at Big Dan's Bar in New Bedford, Mass., according to Simonton. The Big Dan's case drew national attention after the movie The Accused was released, portraying the course of events at the New Bedford bar.

Simonton is the coordinator of Media Watch, opponent to the Miss America Program. The Miss America Pageant in the largest educational scholarship available to woman in the world, she said.

Simonton, as a quasi-trade mark, protests this event in a dress made of meat and meat products.

One of these dresses would contain as much as thirty pounds of sliced bologna and

Property crime declines, violent crime increases

WASHINGTON (AP) Crimes against people and property dropped almost 3 percent last year, but some violent crimes increased, including assaults that caused injuries, new government figures show.

Overall, completed and attempted personal and household crimes, excluding homicide, declined by i million to 34.8 million, according to preliminary estimates from the National Crime Survey released Sunday.

But of that 1 million, nearly 937,000 were larcenies that did not include any contact with the victim. The total of such crimes declined to 11.6 million. The rate dropped 8.4 percent so that last year, 56.9 of every 1,000 people were victims of such a crime.

"No one should look at today's figures which do not even include the murder count and believe that the epidemic of crime in America has been broken," said Sen Joseph R. Biden Jr.m D-Del., chairman of the Senate Judiciary Committee.

"Larceny without contact would be bicycle thefts, other relatively minor thefts, whereas the issues of greater concern are moving up," added Alfred Blumstein, dean of the School of Urban and Public Affairs at Carnegie Mellon University in Pittsburgh.

Crimes that showed increases in both number and rate in 1990 were assaults completed with injury, attempted robberies and completed personal larcenies that involved contact with the victim. Although the survey found a decline in the number of rapes, the figures are in dispute.

The findings are based on Census Bureau interviews with 97,000 people aged 12 and older in 48,000 homes who were questioned about rape, robbery and personal theft declined by 4.1 percent to 18.9 million. That translates to a rate of nearly 93 per 1,000 people a decline from almost 98 the previous year.

Steven D. Dillingham, director of the Justice Department's Bureau of Justice Statistics, which released the figures, noted that personal thefts without contact with the victim comprise about 66 percent of all crimes against individuals.

"Obviously, any (overall) statistic is dominated by the numerically largest, which tends to be the least serious," Blumstein said.

Meanwhile, completed and attempted household crimes including burglary, larceny and motor vehicle theft decreased 1.4 percent to 15.9 million, a rate of 166 per 1,000 households. The rate was almost 170 in 1989.

Of the personal crimes, the number of completed violent crimes rose 3.4 percent to 2.3 million. That increase was reflected in a 2.4 percent rise in the rate, which meant 11.2 of every 1,000 people were victims of a completed, violent crime.

That includes almost 6 percent more aggravated and simple assaults that injured victims, with some 1.5 million such victims last year. The rate of the two types of assault with injuries increased from 7 victims per 1,000 people in 1989 to 7.3 last year.

Homicides, which hit a record of more than 23,000 last year, are not included because only the survey includes only information provided by victims.

The survey's rape figures showed the number declining 18.3 percent to 110,660 last year- a 19.1 percent rate drop to 0.5 per 1,000 people. But the figures are in dispute and Dillingham of the statistics bureau has told Congress the survey is being redesigned to get more accurate rape data.

METCO students shot

School administrators voice shock, outrage

BOSTON (AP) School officials at a suburban high school said today they were shocked to learn that two girls who attend the school through the METCO program were shot while waiting for a bus after roller skating.

Kim Johnson, 16, and Sherel Darget, 15, both of Boston, were waiting for a bus about 6:15 p.m. after an afternoon of roller skating at the nearby Chez Vous rink Sunday when the shooting erupted on Blue Hill Avenue in the Mattapen section.

A spokeswoman at Boston City Hospital said Johnson was in stable condition yesterday with a bullet wound in her groin. Darget was released after treatment for a shoulder wound. The teens, both METCO students at the Concord-Carlisle High School were struck by shots fired by a small group of teen-age youths. Police said it was unclear today whether the shots were intended for the girls or for several teen-age boys standing nearby.

Elaine DiCiccio, principal at Concord-Carlisle High School, said both girls are "very well-liked and very popular with their friends."

Counselors and teachers today have been busy today helping students deal with the tragedy.

"We've been working very hard with their friends and with all of the students in the METCO program in particular," DiCiccio said.

"It's just something that is very hard to understand, to comprehend, to talk about with students. But our counselors are listening."

Police Lt. Thomas Lydon said officers heard the shots and ran into the street, but the youths ran away without being apprehended. He said up to ten shots were fired from more than one gun.

Because there were many people in the area, Lydon said it was a miracle that others were not injured in the attack.

Both students attend the high school north of Boston under the Metropolitan Council for Educational Opportunities, Inc. of Roxbury. Founded in 1966, the program allows urban minority students to attend suburban high schools.

The two girls were among about 3,200 students in Boston and 300 in Springfield who participate in the private, non-profit program, METCO director Jean McGuire said.

"I know them from weekend parties" METCO gives for its students, METCO staff member Mark Jackson said. "They've both attended in the past. They usually attend."

Concord-Carlisle has participated in METCO for at least 20 years, she said. Currently, about 10 percent of the school's 850 students are from METCO.

The case remained under investigation Tuesday, police spokesman Vin Loporchio said.

Professor: prospects of Middle East peace unlikely

By JASON GEORGE
Collegian Staff

Although the recent Persian Gulf war has effected great changes in the Middle East, post-war diplomacy will be unable to produce a lasting peace settlement for the region.

This analysis was offered by Edward Kaufman, a political science professor at Hebrew University in Jerusalem, speaking at Hampshire college last night on "Post-War Prospects for a Regional Peace in the Middle East."

"The most likely scenario is that nothing new will occur," Kaufman said. He based this statement on an examination of past conflicts in the region.

"Coming from the land of prophets, the best way to predict the future is to look to the past," Kaufman said.

Kaufman offered a framework to examine potential changes in the Middle East, noting the war's effects both on Israel and on the Arab states in the region.

Kaufman noted the war created a "commonality of fate" between Israel and other Arab nations, particularly Syria, Egypt, and Saudi Arabia. This will not necessarily be a foundation for future regional cooperation, however, according to Kaufman.

"If you follow the logic that 'the enemy of my enemy is my friend,'" Kaufman said, "then if there is no enemy, there may be no friend, either."

Kaufman presented five possibilities for the region, none of which he thought would succeed.

Both the idea of an United Nations international peace conference and of holding elections in the West Bank and the Gaza Strip are outmoded ideas, according to Kaufman.

"In Israel there is normally a wide mistrust of the United Nations," Kaufman said, referring to the large number of U.N. resolutions condemning Israeli actions.

A third option would involve bilateral negotiations between Israel and neighboring Arab states, along the lines of the Israeli-Egyptian talks that produced the Camp David Accords in 1979.

Kaufman stated this outcome is unlikely to produce long-term improvement, either, particularly in light of Israeli-Syrian relations.

The major sticking point in Israeli-Syrian negotiations is the Golan Heights. This is an area between the two nations which Israel occupied in 1967 and annexed officially in 1981.

"Under [Prime Minister Yitzhak Shamir's] term of office, there will be no concessions on the Golan Heights," Kaufman said. "Shamir has no constituency in the Heights."

A fourth possibility would be a "two-track" solution involving parallel talks between Israel and the Arab states in the region and Palestinians in the occupied territories.

Kaufman noted it would be very difficult to get all the groups involved to agree to the necessary preconditions for negotiation.

Similarly, Kaufman proposed a comprehensive conference where Israel, Palestinians, and Arab states could sit down to address issues necessary to achieve regional peace. These include the regional arms race, border disputes, and economic development.

"I'm not sure that this will fly in anywhere except in academia," Kaufman said.

Panel discusses plight of women political prisoners

By AHVA DAVIS
Collegian Correspondent

A panel compiled of former women political prisoners spoke yesterday about their experiences in prison, and the suppression of battered women.

The forum began with a short film of men and women who have been arrested and convicted of conspiracy against the United States.

Most of the people were serving sentences of more than ten years without probation in a maximum security facility. Many were not directly involved, but were known to have involvement with resistance groups.

Pat LeVasseur, one of the Ohio Seven, spent three and a half years in jail for harboring her husband during a sedition conspiracy. She, like many others, continue to fight for the release of political prisoners.

"We have to remain enraged," said LeVasseur.

During a trial the people being charged are often "being looked at as a traitor" said Shelly Miller, who was arrested for refusing to testify before a political grand jury.

Women who are in jail for killing their abuser are now also considered political prisoners.

"Every 15 days a man kills the woman that he loves," said Gail Kielson of Necessities/Necessidades. Women are being punished for trying to save theirs, as well as their childrens', lives. Kielson continued to say we live in "a society that punishes women for fighting back."

Barbra Zeller, a woman who is not a political prisoner, works with Freedom Now, and the Puerto Rican Resistance to help free prisoners.

"When movements are developed enough, people can be freed," said Zeller.

"You really can change things if you work together to do it," said Miller.

UMass students win 8 Town Meeting seats

By ALEX DERING
Collegian Staff

According to early results from precincts in which students were candidates for Amherst Town Meeting seats, at least eight of the twelve University of Massachusetts student-candidates were elected last night.

According to unofficial results, which do not include write-in votes or absentee ballots, two students, Hollis Crowley and Marjorie Decker, were elected from Precinct 2, which represents Orchard Hill.

In Precinct 3, which had three student-candidates, two students, Richard Rigney and Kevin Newnan were elected.

Precinct 4, which had four students running for seats at the Town Meeting, had at least two student winners, Dennis Crowley and Robert Murray.

Two other students, Robert Witherall and Sharon Lang were elected to two vacated seats. Their terms will only last two years, instead of the regular three.

According to Commuter Area Government President Ted Chambers, this is a major victory for students.

"Better than 25 percent of the students who were eligible to vote in Orchard Hill did so," said Chambers. "Between 6 p.m. - 8 p.m. we drove over 70 people to the polls."

Chambers said such a turn out for a relatively unadvertised election was phenomenal.

"There are 240 members in the Amherst Town Meeting," said Chambers. "So having only eight or nine students doesn't seem like much, but there's a lot that they can do."

Chambers went on to say too often students believe there is a conspiracy in the town to keep them out of town government. He said this was not the case.

"Instead," he said, "what happens is that people in the town don't take students seriously because they think the only things we care about are drinking and fornicating."

He expressed optimism students will continue to have a positive impact.

"This proves that student apathy is a myth," Chambers said. "A small group of organized students have shown that they are capable of having a serious impact on issues concerning students."

EDITORIAL/OPINION

The opinions on this page are those of the individual writer or cartoonist and do not necessarily reflect the views of the Collegian or the University unless otherwise noted.

Commie profs ruin our minds

The dismantling of the Berlin Wall was not so much a victory of West over East, but rather a victory of one ideology over another. In one definitive action, the people of Germany exorcised the spectre that had been haunting Europe for almost a century.

The far left has since lost its primary icon, the Soviet Union, whose streets it turns out were paved with fool's gold after all.

With the twin pantheon of the U.S.S.R. and The People's Republic thus desecrated, today's radical movement is reduced to the college intellectual in his ivory keep. The draft-card burning revolutionary of the sixties is now a full professor, replete with tweed jacket and briar pipe. These 'tenured radicals' are the final and most stubborn vestiges of Marx's legacy — a rear-guard of seasoned political activists committed to raising a new generation of extremists.

Stefan Gross

Why should the politics of our lecturer matter when he pontificates on the Treaty of Augsburg or the Reformation?

We should care because he adulterates the very things he is entrusted to commute to the future and thereby robs us of our intellectual birthright. When he skews his presentation to present one opinion or school of thought as being the only 'correct' interpretation and derides those with a differing mien, when he forgoes his objective responsibility of the academician in favor of the soapbox of the ideologue, he ceases to enlighten the minds in his care and begins to program them. O brave new World that would have such people in it!

The most common incidence of such proselytizing is the restriction of the curriculum to the moral relativist and revisionist history epistemologies while simultaneously discarding the traditional, proven course of study as being 'insignificant' or 'biased.'

In fact, it is this 'PC' mode of thought — the winnowing of acceptable knowledge from a large body of metaphysical chaff — that is by definition misrepresentative and reductionist in nature. The extent to which some professors quash dissenting opinions should be disturbing to all students, be they in agreement or not.

I do not advocate a Silberesque purging of all political leanings in the University, but rather a cessation of its use as the consummate precept for instruction — an encouragement of open polemic is an obvious corollary.

Education must be objective in nature; when a specific school of thought is introduced, it should be plainly identified as such and properly balanced through contrast and discussion.

The human mind is at its quintessence eristic and synaesthetic. To restrict its explorations to fashionable modes of thought is reprehensible; to entrust its development to the whim of the tendenite is criminal.

Stefan Gross is a UMass student

" IT WOULDN'T BE ST. PATRICK'S DAY WITHOUT THE LITTLE PEOPLE!"

Curbing free-speech isn't an answer

Slowly but surely, college administrators are taking away our right to free speech.

The plague hasn't hit UMass yet, but considering our record, I have a feeling we're not far behind.

A Brown University student was expelled for yelling out racist epithets. A UConn student was banned from campus cafeterias and dormitories because of a homophobic sign on her door.

I'm not downplaying or condoning these acts of ignorance. It makes me sick.

Gayle Long

But, administrators on these campuses and others are feeling the need to institute "speech codes" on campus, to suppress ignorant or hateful language.

But they seem to forget one thing. This is the United States of America.

There's this quirky little clause in the First Amendment, need I remind them, which allows for freedom of speech.

Administrators, in a token attempt to make like easier for minority students (exactly what else have they done?) have thought up a great way of ridding their campus of racism and other discriminatory sentiment. BAN IT.

Make it grounds for expulsion, purge them from the society.

Sorry, but this isn't Lord of the Flies. Because someone isn't socially responsible does not mean they should be thrown to the dogs.

This attitude on campus, political correctness, is a well-intentioned idea to promote the equality of all peoples. Unfortunately, it has turned into more of a White guilt trip than anything else.

If a person knows they're not a racist — they're not. If they said Black instead of African-American, are they racist? I doubt it.

Speech codes on campus are an extreme example of the politically correct crowd's view on society: "If someone can't be nice to oppressed people, then they should be shut up — by law."

You just can't do that.

Listen, no matter how ignorant, stupid, narrow-minded or plain egotistical people sound — making them be quiet or denying them an education doesn't change their opinions about peoples.

Education is the only way. To deny them an education on the grounds they are ignorant is ignorant.

Sure, we can get rid of all the "troublemakers" who say discriminatory things, and say "our campus is racism-free," or we can accept reality.

The reality is — people aren't always playing with a full deck. Sometimes they listen to an older, less accepting society. Sometimes, they are simply hateful.

These two students are two very different examples.

The man from Brown will probably never get an education. Maybe he doesn't deserve one. But education is the road to enlightenment, is it not?

The woman from UConn, still allowed to go to classes, has been banned from going into cafeterias and dormitories — centers for social interaction on campus. Was there a chance she could learn from her peers about equality and become aware of her ignorance?

We will never know.

Speech codes will only isolate people, divide them from society, and maybe incite their hatred even more.

Remember that saying, "I don't agree with one word you are saying, but will fight to the death for your right to say it?"

Those rights are still ours. They will always be ours.

Educate — don't isolate.

Instead of another chancellor, let's bring democracy to UMass

The University is about to be without a Chancellor. Let me suggest this provides us with an opportunity to run the University in a much better way. Forget about O'Brien or Bromery or Bartley. We don't need a Chancellor!

This is an ideal time to put democracy into action. Let's set up a council made up of equal representatives of students, workers, and faculty to make decisions and run the University. These are the people who care about this place and who, in fact, are sticking around. Why should we let administrators continue to run it into the ground — they're the ones abandoning it like a sinking ship.

We don't need another Chancellor who will simply cave in to the Governor/Legislature/Regents in their bumbling/reactionary ways of dealing with the state's crises. We don't even need another Chancellor who will do a better job at lobbying. We need leadership that can really lead- lead UMass to take action that will show our importance and our power.

Workers, students, and faculty already run this place. Without us, there would be no university. Let us acknowledge this power and use it. At Greenfield Community College, staff voted to support economic sanctions against the State of Massachusetts, urging people not to buy anything produced or sold in the state. We could elaborate on this idea — how about encouraging graduating students to seek work out of state as long as the state keeps slashing higher education and beating up on state workers? How about cutting those UMass programs that the state really wants, rather than those that allow equal access to working class and minority students?

Unless the University is accessible to all capable students, it perpetuates the current balance of class forces in our society- no education for the poor- so in other words, the rich get richer and you know the rest. The University should, even in hard times, in fact especially in hard times, work to empower the less privileged in this state.

Whatever the tactics, let's take this time to reexamine our priorities and our structure. Forget about who's to be a Chancellor. Give the power to those people who have a real investment in the University — those of us who make the University run. I am confident that workers, faculty, and students would make decisions truly in the interests of accessible public higher education.

A fight gone begging: Budget cuts

OK guys, I think it's time for a reality check. The war in the Gulf is over—thank God. So, now, maybe we can concentrate on something else that is vitally important to our futures. I'm not talking about the various political issues that normally drive this campus crazy.

In case no one's been paying attention, our illustrious Governor, William "of course I support public higher education" Weld wants to cut another $92 million from the state higher education budget. We're already paying more for less, and I didn't think it was possible to get any worse. I guess I forgot where I was, because it has. We're in a mess of trouble. Actually, most of us know about this already. We know what Citizens for Limited Taxation almost did to us, and that the strike didn't do, which was get legislators to listen, and understand how grave the situation was. So we're screwed. This is nothing new.

I guess what bugs the hell out of me is that we just seem to be resigned to this latest round of cuts. Not even one lousy petition. Come on, this is UMass. We protest anything, anywhere, at the drop of a hat, and we can't fight for ourselves? I'm not looking to the SGA for help, especially because there isn't one. But, while they bicker about who's going to control the Student Activities Trust Fund, I wonder if there's even going to be one in a few years. While we all try to get on with our lives, the Fine Arts Center will continue to sink into disrepair. And the senate is fighting with Angus over student empowerment?

I've seen student empowerment work on this campus, and it can happen again, but somebody's gotta do something. I'm graduating in May, so I theoretically shouldn't care what happens to this place after I leave, but I do. UMass is the third most expensive public university in the country. Do you want to be number one?

There were a lot of people at that "straight pride" rally. If only a fraction of that number would start screaming about budget cuts again, even if it seems like a lost battle. Out of sight, out of mind— if we don't remind Governor Weld and his cronies that we're here, they will forget. Then, it won't matter if there's homophobia on this campus, because there will be no campus. And there will be no rallies, because no one will be around to listen.

Funk-a-delic madness tonight at the SUB

By MARK ANDERSON
Collegian Correspondent

You may have heard them. Their rock-hard soul sounds are a favorite of college radio. You may have seen them. They've appeared in such flicks as Back to the Beach, Tape Heads, and Keenan Ivory Wayans' I'm Gonna Git You, Sucka! They even tore it up last weekend as musical guests on Saturday Night Live.

Yep. That's right. Fishbone's comin.

Known and loved for their rip-roarin in-yer-face performances, Fishbone will be playing at the Student Union Ballroom tonight at 8 p.m. New York folk-rockin' funksters Maggie's Dream will open. And it promises to be a show not to be missed.

On their last official album tour, (1988's Truth and Soul) Fishbone played medium-sized clubs with stadium-sized results (although this fun-seeker missed their 1988 tour, one colleague who did catch their show remains convinced to this day that it was the best live show he's ever seen).

This time around, a sure-to-be packed Student Union will greet their Amherst stop. Barring divine intervention, acts of Congress or power failure, the evening should be nonstop fonk'n good times.

So go, okay?

On record, the seven from L.A. have been throwin' down since 1985 when their critically acclaimed EP Party At Ground Zero kept us asking for more. The horns, the bass, the rhythm of it all can also be found in 1986's In Your Face, 1987's It's A Wonderful Life (a Christmas release, no less) and their most recent (and probably best) LP release Truth and Soul.

Last November they ended their 2-year silence by pressing an EP of remixes and several new songs ("In The Name of Swing," "Love and Bullshit" and "Hide Behind My Glasses.")

And finally, a new Fishbore album will be hitting the racks within a month. To be released April 23, Fishbone's Reality of My Surroundings should be a lively and heavy LP, judging from last Saturday's set. For those who can't wait, they also have a CD/Cass single out entitled "Sunless Saturday."

Maggie's Dream's self-titled debut touches on current topics (AIDS, drug abuse, etc.) with an admittedly Sly Stone sound. Touring recently with L.A. poppies Jellyfish, the band has been hyped by many fanzines and should set the stage up right for an evening of booty-shakin' and hard-rockin'. Got to be funky.

Fishbone with special guests Maggie's Dream will play at UMass at the Student Union Ballroom. ,Show starts at 8 p.m. Tickets are $12 for UMass students and $15 for the general public.

Fishbone, who expect to release a new album in April on Columbia, will rock the Student Union Ballroom tonight.

MARINES
Leadership.
A good man can handle it.
You don't have to look twice to see that this man is in charge. There is a certain strength of character, an undeniable sense of self-confidence, that says he is a leader. Men believe in him, because he believes in himself. He is a Marine officer.
If you believe in yourself, and would like to find out more about the kind of leaders we look for, call 1-800-MARINES. Who knows, we may not have to look any further than you.

Examining the Mohawk-Canadian crisis

Mohawks say similar protests could erupt

By RIC OLIVEIRA
Collegian Staff

Editor's Note: Ric Oliveira was an intern on the Kahnawake Reserve in Canada during the recent Mohawk-Canada crisis. He helped begin a literary magazine at the reserve high school. Oliveira was the only outside reporter on the Kahnawake Reserve during the crisis.

It was over 300 years ago the first French ship sailed down the St. Lawrence River and landed upon the island of Montreal. On the island the French made contact with a small village of Mohawks, the native inhabitants of the area. The French ignored the Mohawk territory and planted their flag.

News Analysis

The French infuriated the Mohawks, a part of the Iroquois Confederacy, and entered into a lengthy battle which almost proved their demise. The Confederacy which the French and the English encountered was one of five Nations whose territory spreads from lower modern day Quebec to southern Pennsylvania. The Confederacy has a constitution protected by 4,000 warriors.

In 1703, the Iroquois Confederacy and the French reached peace. In 1763, after many small skirmishes between the French and the Mohawks, the Mohawks sided with the English which led to the defeat of the French. In 1765, the Iroquois, the French and the English all entered into an agreement called the Turo Wampum Treaty.

Michael, who asked not to be identified, a Warrior Society member said, "This treaty stated each of our Nations would travel in the river of life. In each of our vessels we would have our laws and our culture. Each of our Nations would never interfere with the path or voyage of the other."

An armored personnel carrier equipped with a 50mm cannon on patrol in the Kahnawake Reserve.

On July 11, 1990 the Quebec police launched a military attack upon Mohawk men, women and children who were protesting the expansion of a golf course onto land which they claim is theirs. The Quebec government calls the modern day Warriors "terrorists" and "thugs."

Many in the Mohawk Nation feel differently.

Michael said, "The Warrior Society as we know it exists to defend what is rightfully the peoples'. This means their customs, laws, history and cultural heritage. It also stands for defending your Nation when it is under attack. That attack in today's terms can come in several forms: economic, forced assimilation and education."

Throughout the summer of 1990, two different Mohawk communities felt the impact of standing up against Canada. Both territories where surrounded by 4,500 army troops and hundreds of Quebec police officers who subjugated them to psychological and physical warfare.

At this time 100 Mohawks were arrested and charged by the Canadian Courts for their actions between July 11 and September 26. During August the federal government of Canada agreed to purchase the disputed land for the Mohawks. The Mohawks retorted,

"You cannot give us what is already ours."

In February, it was discovered Ottawa had purchased the wrong tract of land because the land in question had never been surveyed prior to this summer's altercations.

Presently, the Quebec police has 45 warrants for missing Mohawk citizens. Two Quebec police forces patrol the Reserves Highways and the Mercier Bridge which the Mohawks of Kahnawake blockaded on July 11, in what they call an act of solidarity with the Oka (Kahnesatake) Mohawks. The Quebec police forces continue to patrol the Mohawk with what Chief Joe Norton calls, "Nazi tactics." Mohawks say they are capable of patroling with their own force known as the Peacekeepers.

On January 8, 1990 the Mohawks, Quebec police and the Royal Canadian Mountain Police, clashed again. More than 15 police and two Mohawks were injured.

Entering the Kahnawake Reserve in Canada, visitors see a silent protest between the Mohawks and Canadians. The road pictured is Rt. 132 which leads into the reserve.

Chief Joe Norton of Kahnawake said, "This will happen again. The people will never stand for the Quebec police or the RCMP and their foreign law. This is a volatile situation, I go to bed every night wondering if I will get a phone call in the middle of the night saying that somebody got killed or shot because that is the police's style."

With the summer approaching, Canada's natives may be preparing for another defensive. Quebec plans to flood thousands of acres of Cree and Inuit lands to the North for the HydroQuebec James Bay two, a dam project. The Cree say this would destroy their lands and the ecosystem. They say they will never allow the expansion of the project to commence under the present plans. Quebec seems to be ignoring the 20,000 Cree who are saying 'no.' The Cree say they will take up arms just as the Mohawk Warriors have done.

Some natives in Canada are uncomfortable with the concept of taking up arms. The Warrior Society spokesman who differs in his opinion said, "Why is it wrong? If we were whales, people would run to save us. The number of whales left in the world today is a larger population than ours left in the world. They won't run for us, they want us assimilated because we have been thought of as savages since Columbus and contact. They have a holiday to celebrate the man who killed 30,000 of our Arawak brothers."

Currently, one lawyer is defending the Warriors Society. Many lawyers have dropped their cases due to lack of payment by the Mohawks. From across Canada donations from other Nations trickle in. In Geneva the Mohawks have established a Nation office to insure that the United Nations does not forget it's duty to protect aboriginal rights.

Mohawks are optimistic when the world hears of over 60 cases of police harrassment and beatings, the dozens of human civil rights violations, and the invasion of Mohawk sovereignty that the United Nations will act.

Alex McComber, a Mohawk moderate said, "Native people are sovereign, they do not come into Quebec Juriadiction. We never lost our lands in conflict. They were stolen from us. Maybe the thought is then to kill us all off."

"There is no way that Mohawk people will live under a Quebec or Canadian dictatorship. We are fed up with being oppressed and treated as second class citizens in a land that belongs to us. We were never invited to become a part of Canada. Citizenship is an offer we care not to take up because we are not Canadians but Mohawk citizens, members of the Iroquios Nation," McComber said.

Last month, the Canadian press reported that Quebec's provincial police are attempting to purchase two German made Leopard tanks. The tanks are equipped with a machine gun and cannon which are at an estimated cost of $2.5 million.

Considering all that has happened and may happen it seems after 300 years of contact very little has changed. The native people and their right to control land are still not beaing dealt with fairly.

Benjamin Franklin said it best in his diary, "The care and labor of providing for artificial and fashionable wants, the sight of so many rich wallowing in superfluous plenty — whereby so many are kept poor and distressed for want. The insolence of office and the restraints of custom all continue to disgust the Indian with what we call civil society."

YOUR DAILY HOROSCOPE
By JEANE DIXON

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Family members volunteer to shoulder more responsibilities. Follow your hunches. Something that appears to be a long shot could pay off big. Do not gloss over the details.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Make this a day of discoveries. Be open to new people and experiences. Dress elegantly to make a favorable and lasting impression. Loved one's comments give you helpful insights.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Home and health matters enjoy favorable influences. Do-it-yourself projects save money while giving you a new sense of accomplishment. A younger relative is willing to lend a helping hand.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Make full use of your public relations skills to further your career. An influential person may be taking a second look at what you have to offer. Do not neglect routine tasks.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): A great day for affairs of the heart! The emphasis is on tracking down the elusive. Loopholes for fit will save both time and money. Utilize the expertise of lawyers, accountants.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Concentrate on projects already under way and avoid becoming involved in any secret transactions. Someone you meet on a business trip could be of great assistance in the near future. Keep in touch.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Creative and artistic projects continue to occupy your time. Pay bills promptly. An old friend could reveal a new, more sensitive side. Know what you really want from a long-term romantic relationship.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): A financial investigation could give you cause for concern. Heed that strong inner voice. You are wise to be discreet about the extent of your ambitions. Show more initiative in a romantic relationship.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Prestige and fame are coming your way. Team up in pairs for social affairs. Make the most of contact with VIPs- they will be easy to please now. Begin large-scale projects with confidence.

CAPRICORN (Dec 22-Jan 19): Avoid plunging into controversial subjects now; doing so could lead to a sea of problems. Try to remain cheerful- even when someone gives you 'a real earful.'

AQUARIUS (Jan 20-Feb 18): You are a whiz at analyzing business situations. Go with the flow. Afternoon should be superb for companionship. In the event of a health problem, investigate unusual remedies or treatments.

PISCES (Feb 19-March 20): Now that your popularity is on the rise, your financial prospects look brighter. Other people will give you what you ask. Keep a high profile. Look for new ways to promote teamwork.

41 OUT OF 50 STATES HAVE OPTIONAL RETIREMENT PLANS.

WHY NOT MASSACHUSETTS?

Optional Retirement Plans (ORPs) are an accepted part of American public higher education. Together they form a nationwide, portable pension system, allowing academic mobility — which enriches experiences, fosters the exchange of ideas and learning, and promotes the cultural and ethnic diversity of our institutions and their communities.

Massachusetts needs a portable pension system in order to compete with other states for high-quality faculty and administrators during the current financial crisis and in the future. A strong public university system is essential for Massachusetts' long-term economic health.

WHY NOT HAVE AN OPTIONAL RETIREMENT PLAN IN MASSACHUSETTS?

The proposed Optional Retirement Plan is carefully designed so that it will not increase pension costs for the Commonwealth of Massachusetts or its citizens. It will not have an adverse effect on the Massachusetts Retirement System, nor will it require additional administrative personnel.

TIAA-CREF is working with sponsors of legislation that would allow the Board of Regents to establish an Optional Retirement Plan in Massachusetts. In the last year alone, five states have implemented ORPs, and California is in the process of doing so now. Currently, ORP-type plans are offered in 41 out of 50 states. And TIAA-CREF is the only organization chosen in all 41 of those states.

TIAA-CREF: THE POPULAR CHOICE

TIAA-CREF is building a sound financial future for more than 1,000,000 people at over 4,500 institutions of higher education and research. And over 200,000 retirees are now enjoying the benefits of their TIAA-CREF annuities. People just like you. Here are a few good reasons why:

Expertise—TIAA and CREF are nonprofit organizations focused exclusively on the education and research community. We pioneered pensions for your profession and we have been leading the way ever since.

Full Investment Choices—Sound retirement investing requires both security and growth: security, so the resources are sure to be there when the time comes; and growth, so your retirement income will be sufficient for the kind of retirement you want. TIAA-CREF provides you with all of the investment choices you need—for growth, diversification and safety.

Performance—The CREF Stock Account outperformed the mutual fund industry averages for the last one-, five-, and ten-year periods. The CREF Money Market Account has shown excellent returns since its inception, outperforming the industry average since May of 1988.*

Security—Your future is protected by the largest retirement system in the world. We currently manage over $84 billion in pension assets. Because of its stability, sound investments, and overall financial strength, TIAA has received the highest possible ratings from all three of the industry's leading independent rating agencies: A+ (Superior) from A.M. Best Co., Aaa from Moody's, and AAA from Standard & Poor's.

while the Huskies fell to MSU, 3-2.

The Minutemen will start left-hander Ron Villone on the mound. UMass football fans will recognize Villone, who split playing time with Bill Durkin at tight end for the Yankee Conference champions. Stone had penciled in Villone as UMass' top closer in the bullpen, making the start somewhat of a surprise.

"Ron Villone is one of our hardest throwers," Stone noted before the team left for Florida. "We're looking for him to fill Gerry Creamer's role as stopper out of the bullpen."

Potential starters for the Huskies appear to be Kevin Gormley and David Fradkin, both of whom have 4.70 earned run averages.

Around the Horn: UMass and UConn have met 115 times since 1900, back when your great, great grandparents went to what was then called Mass Aggie. UMass leads the series 58-56-1.

Lacrosse faces Big Red challenge to open campaign

By ADRIEN MATT
Collegian Staff

ITHACA, N.Y. — Although the forecast is clear with temperatures in the low 60s, the University of Massachusetts lacrosse team could see more Snow than they'd care to when they face off against Cornell today at 3:30 p.m.

Senior John Snow leads the Big Red with 10 points and rounds out the offensive trio of sophomore John Busse and junior Kevin McCarthy, a transfer from SUNY - Farmingdale.

Senior defensemen Tony Morgan and Pat Leahy return for Cornell supported by classmates Scott Burnam, Chris Reynolds and John Tillman.

Senior Tim Shea has been consistent in goal and finished last season with the third-best save percentage in the Ivy League. Senior Mike Cross has started some scrimmages in goal and freshman Ted Lynch faced up against Penn State, but neither will be seeing much playing time, according to head coach Richie Moran.

"We're still a question mark," Moran said of this year's team. "Consistency will be key.

"We want to make sure everything is in focus."

Moran did not release the starting lineup for today's match and reports no injuries.

The Big Red edged out the Gorillas 16-15 at Schoellkopf Field last year and leads the series 14-4. The 1989 season saw another loss for UMass (12-11) at home, but the '88 season provided a thrilling five-overtime victory for UMass in Ithaca.

"They look very aggressive, nothing fancy," said UMass coach Ted Garber. "They played four games that have counted and we haven't."

Cornell has beat out Cortland, Harvard, Hofstra, and Army (in overtime), thus coming into today's match 4-0.

Senior Ted Kellerman will start in goal for UMass surrounded by sophomore Gary Wood and juniors Corey Cronin and Rick Mullins. Senior Vin D'Angelo will face off with junior Mario Lopez and senior Jim Kushner flanking him at midfield.

Senior Jim McAleavey, junior Mike Cain, and sophomore Mario Guaglianone will start at attack for the Gorillas.

"They are extremely well-balanced every year," Moran said. "They execute ballplay well."

With the team so heavily laden with seniors, Garber said he doesn't sense any nervousness among the team.

"Three quarters of the team have been in the playoffs," he said. "They've had to deal with big games to get there."

Garber said the team will need to play unselfishly and defensively — snags in the game plan that have hampered them in past seasons.

"I tell them experience doesn't matter unless you use it," Garber said.

The game will be broadcast on WMUA 91.1 FM.

Baseball opens at home vs. Huskies

By GREG SUKIENNIK
Collegian Staff

What better way is there to open the regular season?

The forecast calls for highs in the 50's. It's the University of Massachusetts baseball team's first home game. Those rivals from the south, the University of Connecticut, are the opposition. UMass has a motive to win — the Huskies swept the Minutemen last season, embarrassing UMass 16-0 on opening day in Amherst and squeaking out an 8-7 comeback win at Storrs, Ct.

That's the scenario surrounding today's game, which starts at 3 p.m. at Earl E. Lorden field. The 3-8 Minutemen, fresh off their annual Florida swing, are hoping to start the regular season on the right foot at the expense of their rivals from the Big East.

"Connecticut always has a strong team, and it's a traditional rivalry, so it should be a good game," said UMass coach Mike Stone.

The Huskies, last season's Big East tournament champions, are 6-8 overall and 2-1 in the Big East, including two wins over Villanova. As a team, the Huskies are averaging five runs a game both offensively and defensively. Shortstop Paul Funk leads the team with a .390 batting average.

The two teams have one common opponent in Michigan State. UMass beat the Spartans 9-8 behind Rob Graziano's four inning, nine strikeout relief effort,

UMass, Buffs vie for third place

By SAM SILVERSTEIN
Collegian Staff

Will Herndon dunked the first time he touched a basketball while wearing a University of Massachusetts uniform, fifteen months ago against Colorado in the Mile High Classic tournament in Denver.

Ironically, Herndon may be playing his last game for the Minutemen (20-12) tonight against Colorado (18-14), in the NIT consolation game at Madison Square Garden in New York (7 p.m.)

Herndon signed a letter of intent to attend Richmond out of high school and appeared in seven games for the Spiders. He transferred to UMass in December of 1988, sat out a year in accordance with NCAA rules, and debuted against Colorado in December, 1989.

By transferring halfway through his freshman year Herndon violated the rules that govern the letter of intent, forfeiting a second year of eligibility. Herndon, who says he was never informed of the consequences of his decision to transfer by Richmond coach Dick Tarrant, will appeal for an extra year this summer.

"After the season, then we'll see," Herndon said before UMass' 73-71 semifinal loss to Stanford Monday. "If we'd had a losing season obviously I'd be down. But we've had two great years since I've been here. I have a lot to be happy about."

For now, there's still some basketball to be played.

At the Mile High Classic last season, UMass posted a coming-of-age 78-71 over the Buffs on their home court. Jim McCoy scored 30 points and Herndon added 11 points and six rebounds.

"It's going to be a grudge match because we beat them last year on their court and they can't be too happy about that," McCoy said. "Everybody wants to finish the year on a high note."

Colorado led Oklahoma by 14 points in the first half, then wound up on the loosing end a 88-78 score in Monday's semifinal. Senior center Shaun Vandiver scored 31 points and grabbed 11 rebounds for the Buffalos. Vandiver has scored in double figures in 91 consecutive games, and averaged 10 rebounds — tops in the Big Eight — and 21 points a game for the Buffs this season. Senior guard Stevie Wise also averages 20 a game.

Game notes: The game will be broadcast on WMUA 91.1 FM and WHMP 99.3 FM . . . A welcome-home rally for the Minutemen is in the works for Thursday at 11:45 a.m. at the Cage . . . Calipari said he will try to find some playing time for native New Yorkers Chris and Kennard Robinson . . . Buffalo forward House Guest was a member of CU's national championship football team and is a perennial all-name team pick.

Tickets for tonight's men's basketball game are on sale in the Athletic Ticket Office in 255 Boyden until 1 p.m. today. Tickets are $9 for students and $16 and $20 for adults.

The Athletic Ticket Office is also organizing buses to New York City. Seats are on sale for $15. Buses will leave from Alumni Stadium this afternoon at 1:30 p.m.

Clark, Clemens are keys for Red Sox to repeat as AL East champs

By BEN WALKER
Associated Press

Slowly, the American League East is catching on.

For years, the division thumbed its nose at the West, considering the farm system nothing more than fodder for trades. After all, the big money was in the East, and if it needed a player, it could just buy a free agent or two.

So while the East aged ungracefully, adding more tired veterans along the way, the West went about its home-grown business. First Jose Canseco, Wally Joyner and Ruben Sierra popped up, then some sprouts in Kansas City, then Ken Griffey, Jr. grew in Seattle and finally a new crop in Chicago.

Now that the West is far and away the best, the East is showing some signs of life. Ben McDonald and Gregg Olson are established. Kevin Maas, Alex Cole and John Olerud made an impact. Gary Sheffield helped Milwaukee, Mo Vaughn and Tim Naehring are on the way in Boston and Milt Cuvler might be in Detroit.

That said, the Red Sox aren't taking any chances. They shelled out millions during the winter for free agents Jack Clark, Danny Darwin and Matt Young and it likely will pay off with their fourth division championship in six years.

Baltimore could challenge and so might Toronto. Detroit is right in the middle, followed by Cleveland, New York and Milwaukee.

Boston Red Sox: The last time we saw the Red Sox, Roger Clemens was being dragged off the mound and Boston was losing its 10th straight postseason game. Since then, in no particular order, Clemens was suspended, got into an altercation with Houston police and received a $21.5 million contract; some Red Sox questioned manager Joe Morgan's ability, and the front office spent a ton for free agents.

Boston needed a bopper, so it got Clark (25 HRs). It wanted starting pitchers, so it signed Darwin (11-4, National League-leading 2.21 ERA) and Young (8-18, decent 3.51 ERA in Seattle). What the Red Sox really need is relief — their bullpen had a 4.62 ERA, worst in the league, while their starters' 3.32 ERA was best in the majors.

Boston led the majors in batting average for the fourth straight year, the longest streak in history. But, as further evidence of why teams should be ranked by scoring in the weekly stats, the Red Sox were only seventh in AL runs.

Wade Boggs (.302) failed to net 200 hits for the first time in eight years and lost six points on his career average, down to .346. He's still selective, swinging on the first pitch only 4 percent of the time, but nothing works for him against Bob Welch (0-for-18 lifetime).

Ellis Burks (.296, 21 HR, 89 RBIs) led the team with nine (9!) stolen bases. Mike Greenwell (.297, 14 HR, 73 RBIs) overcame a slow start and 2B Jody Reed (45 doubles) contributed, although 1B Carlos Quintana did not duplicate Nick Esasky's 30-homer, 100-RBI season.

Clemens (21-6, 1.93 ERA) led the majors in ERA and joined Luis Tiant as the only Red Sox starters in 75 years to give up fewer than two runners per game. Imagine how great he'd be without Dave Stewart, to whom he's lost in eight consecutive head-to-head meetings. Mike Boddicker (17-8) left for Kansas City as a free agent, though Dana Kiecker (8-9, 3.97 ERA) and Greg Harris (13-9, 4.00 ERA) will be more ready for a full season of starting.

Jeff Reardon, 35, led with 21 saves, but is slowing down. Rob Murphy (0-6, 6.32 ERA) became the first major leaguer to last more than 60 innings with a 6.00-plus ERA.

Confrontation feared today at Moscow protest

By ANN IMSE
Associated Press Writer

MOSCOW — Police were cordoning off Red Square and two dozen armored personnel carriers were sighted yesterday at a military base near the center of Moscow on the eve of a planned pro-reform demonstration.

Many fear the protest will be broken up by force. Pedestrians were barred yesterday from the protest site on Manezh Square, on the other side of the Kremlin from Red Square.

Vice President Gennady Yanaev, KGB chief Vladimir Krvuchkov and Interior Minister Boris Pugo yesterday summoned a Moscow City Council official and two organizers of the march to warn them the demonstration could lead to "possible public disorder," the official Tass news agency said.

Anxiety over the prospect of a major confrontation had been raised by the Kremlin's announcement Monday that it was banning all rallies until mid-April and by President Mikhail S. Gorbachev's transfer of the authority of the city police force to the national Interior Ministry on Tuesday.

Meanwhile, hard-liners increased the pressure for a crackdown.

Tass said yesterday that the Soyuz group of legislators had demanded that Gorbachev use emergency powers to end the country's political and economic crisis.

The anti-Communist Democratic Russia coalition said it expects 500,000 people to turn out for today's demonstration to protest attempts to oust Gorbachev's political rival, Boris N. Yeltsin, from the chairmanship of the Russian republic's parliament.

Democratic Russia said protestors would gather at two locations and march toward Manezh Square. If blocked by police, they will turn back rather than provoke a confrontation, said Igor Kharichev, a member of the group's coordinating council.

Moscow's reform-minded city leaders, who have given permission for the rally, appealed to the nation's Constitutional Oversight Committee to rule the Kremlin ban on demonstrations unconstitutional.

The armored vehicles arrived over the weekend at a military base three miles from the Kremlin and the planned protest site, officials said. Associated Press photographer Liu Heung Shing said the 24 personnel carriers were clearly visible from the street.

The Moscow City Council's newspaper, Kuranty, quoted the base commander as saying the unit was merely passing through Moscow and would soon leave. "What a strange explanation!" it said, noting that most trucks and heavy vehicles are banned from the city center.

"Don't shoot, brothers, we are of the same blood!" Kuranty said.

The Trud labor newspaper quoted Gen. Gennady Kashuba of the Defense Ministry as saying the armored vehicles were in Moscow because their drivers need practice driving on city streets for parades.

High court rules phone directories not protected

By RICHARD CARELLI
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON — Telephone directories generally are not protected by federal copyright law, the Supreme Court ruled unanimously yesterday.

The court, saying most white-pages listings "lack the requisite originality" to have copyright protection, threw out a $6,000 award against a company that copied a competitor's version of a Kansas telephone directory.

Much higher financial stakes — perhaps tens of millions of dollars could be at issue in numerous related copyright disputes involving publication of other factual compilations.

"Friend-of-the-court" briefs had been submitted by, among others, the Association of American Publishers, the Direct Marketing Association, GTE Corporation and the Computer and Software Services Industry Association.

Writing for the court, Justice Sandra Day O'Connor said some lower courts were wrong when they adopted a "sweat of the brow" test to extend copyright protection beyond selection and arrangement to the factual material contained in a compilation.

"Copyright rewards originality, not effort," O'Connor said.

"Facts, whether alone or as part of a compilation, are not original and therefore may not be copyrighted," O'Connor said. "A factual compilation is eligible for copyright if it features an original selection or arrangement of facts, but the copyright is limited to the particular selection or arrangement."

Feist Publications Inc. unsuccessfully tried to buy white-pages information from Rural Telephone Service Co., which has customers in northwest Kansas.

Feist then edited the Rural directory, relisting the names by towns in a 15-county region that included the area served by Rural.

A federal judge and the 10th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals ruled that Feist had violated copyright law, and awarded Rural $6,000 plus attorney fees.

O'Connor, agreeing that Feist took a substantial amount of information from Rural's directory, said no copyright violation occurred.

"There is nothing remotely creative about arranging names alphabetically in white-pages directories," she said. "It is an age-old practice, firmly rooted in tradition ... This time-honored tradition does not possess the minimal creative spark required by the Copyright Act and the Constitution."

The decision did not discuss directory yellow pages, which contain both listings and advertisements. The ruling apparently affects yellow-pages listings, but not the business advertising they carry.

The Constitution gives Congress the power "to promote the progress of science and useful arts by securing for limited times to authors and inventors the exclusive right to their respective writings and discoveries."

O'Connor said, "Because Rural's white pages lack the requisite originality, Feist's use of the listings cannot constitute infringement."

Student organization fights against hunger

By AMY HENRY
Collegian Staff

Every 40 seconds a person dies from hunger-related causes, according to a student group publicizing the 7th annual Hunger and Homelessness Cleanup to be held April 13.

To call attention to the plight of the three million homeless persons nationwide, Students Pushing for Legislative Action Stopping Hunger are taking donations and asking students to volunteer three hours each day of the cleanup working in a local homeless shelter.

Andra Curtis, coordinator of SPLASH, a subcommittee of the Massachusetts Public Interest Research Group, said she hopes to recruit about 100 volunteers to make repairs, clean or provide other services at area shelters.

"We are asking people in the community, UMass and high school students, to help out for the day," she said. "Volunteering makes you feel good about yourself and benefits others."

MASSpirg will provide buses to transport volunteers to the shelters, she said. The shelters that will be visited have not yet been decided, she said.

Volunteers are asked to find sponsors to donate money for each hour worked, she said. Fifty percent of the proceeds will go to local shelters and survival centers, she said, adding that the group hopes to raise at least $1,000.

To publicize their cause the group has an information table on the Campus Center concourse this week where students may sign up for the hunger cleanup and write letters to members of Congress to demand funding for the federal McKinney Homeless Assistance Act.

The act, passed on Oct. 26, 1990, expands existing programs and authorizes outreach and primary health care services for homeless children and family support centers. The act has $680 million in funding but the money will not be allotted until the new federal budget year, which starts Oct. 1.

"It is important that people write letters because although there is funding for this I am afraid there will not be enough funding unless Congresspersons see support," Curtis said.

The group is also asking people to drop two cents into the jar which symbolizes the amount SPLASH feels should be taken out of every tax dollar for hunger and homelessness.

Colorado center nets 34 as UMass season ends

By SAM SILVERSTEIN
Collegian Staff

With shopping bags full of precious post-season tournament experience, the University of Massachusetts men's basketball team returns from New York City today. A welcome-home rally is scheduled for noon at the Cage.

UMass' season ended last night with a 98-91 loss to Shaun Vandiver, 34 points, and the Colorado Buffaloes, in the National Invitational Tournament consolation game at Madison Square Garden.

"The only three teams that are going to end their seasons this year with a win are UNLV, [last night's NIT championship game winner] and Colorado. I was hoping it would be us," said UMass coach John Calipari, who found playing time for every Minuteman on the roster.

"It was very important that everybody had a chance to experience this. We've all worked very hard to get to this point. It's a great experience. . .this is the most famous basketball arena in the world and we played two games on it," Calipari said.

Behind Vandiver, a 6-foot-10 240-pound senior, the Buffs bullied to an 11 point lead, 57-46, in the opening minutes of the second half.

Rafer Giles, playing his last game in a UMass uniform, kept the Minutemen in the game with a three point flurry. the Minutemen were within one, 60-59, with 12:51 to play.

Vandiver scored 11 of the Buffs next 23

Noho teenagers find refuge from the streets

By MARK PRESTON
Collegian Correspondent

Although it was raining outside there were rays of sunshine throughout the Durfee Conservatory at the University of Massachusetts yesterday.

Inside eight youths aged 10 to 15 spent the afternoon weaving Easter baskets as part of the Alcohol and Drug Abuse Prevention Team, a program which offers an alternative to the streets.

Joe Rapoza, who graduated from UMass last May, and co-coordinator, John Tristan, director of the conservatory, created this program for underprivileged youths in Northampton.

"I became involved with the program after having read some of John's work on Horticulture Therapy," Rapoza said. "I jumped at the chance to come back to UMASS and work with these children."

Horticultural Therapy, started in 1978 by Tristan, helped troubled children through rough emotional times with the aid of nature. Durfee Conservatory, part of the UMass Department of Plant and Soil Sciences, is a 10,000 square foot greenhouse that includes more than 500 species of plants.

In the ADAPT program, the youths meet once a week for twelve weeks, and are assigned an activity. During holidays, the children are given a theme associated with the holiday.

The program's philosophy is "education through entertainment," Rapoza said, and the coordinators hope to improve the youths' self images as well as expose them to new ideas.

For example, the Easter baskets were made of synthetic grass the children had planted weeks before, Tristan said.

"This helps to build the self esteem of the child by being able to see the finished project they themselves created," Tristan said.

Tristan said the success rate of this type of therapy is evident, as many of the children formerly involved with the program are now students or employees of the University, or have other connections to the community.

To start the program, Rapoza went on a field trip and explained to the kids what the program was all about. He took those who had a positive response and introduced them to the greenhouse.

Right now there are about 30 children who are involved. Julio and Raul Martinez age 16 and 10 respectively, said they both looked forward to coming each week to the greenhouse.

Julio said he would encourage his friends to become involved in the program.

A smile came across Tristan's face. These kids were bringing back a smile to a repressed environment where smiles are far and few between.

Just like starting over: Senate meets again

By MARC ELLIOTT
Collegian Staff

The Undergraduate Student Senate was resurrected last night after the senate's coordinating committee appointed six new senators to push the number of senators over the minimum required for the senate to operate.

The senate coordinating committee, which comprises the top officers of the Student Government Association, took over when the senate dissolved two weeks ago because there were not enough members.

The most recent Student Government Association constitution, dated July 1990, requires that the senate have at least 60 members to operate. Last night's action brought the number to 62.

The committee started recruiting replacements immediately after Sens. Anthony Hine (Third World Caucus), Kathy Flaherty (Gorman), and Amy Lesen (TWC) resigned two weeks ago, claiming the senate was not representative of students and forcing the number of senators below the minimum.

Several people, including SGA President Natasha Diephuis and former Senate Speaker Dan Chesnicka, questioned the committee's authority to appoint senators.

"The coordinating committee wants to appoint more people to the senate, but those appointments must be approved by the senate as a whole with quorum above 31," Diephuis said. "The appointments of the coordinating committee are invalid."

The senate speaker, who runs the meetings, cannot convene a meeting unless there is quorum, which means that half of the senators plus one are in attendance.

But Governmental Affairs Chairman Alan Van Tassel said that the constitution's by-laws clearly state that the coordinating committee has the power to "approve appointments in the absence of the senate."

Diephuis and Chesnicka were among the top SGA officers who said the SGA was ineffective and on Jan. 30 asked the UMass administration to step in and help them restructure the body. The administration agreed to form a Commission on Undergraduate Governance, comprising students and administrators who have started meeting each week.

Anti-nepotism rule to cover 'significant others' in town

By TRUDY TYNAN
Associated Press Writer

AMHERST — Contending that a "significant other" isn't just another taxpayer, selectmen in this college town have voted to extend the state's anti-nepotism laws to their friends and lovers.

In a 3-1 vote Monday night, selectmen adopted a policy barring the appointment of members of selectmen's families or their "significant others" to town boards and committees.

"We've never heard of anything like this before," Kim Herndon, a spokeswoman for the state attorney general's office, said yesterday.

Some in Amherst wished they didn't.

Selectman Harry Oldham Brooks cast a lone vote against the policy. Last month his fiancee Margot Parrot publicly broke their engagement, maintaining she had failed to gain appointment to the Finance Committee because of her romance with Brooks.

"This is totally absurd," said resident Mary Wentworth, who added it is already hard enough to get volunteers to work in town government.

"You are going to have to take it back," she warned the board before its vote. "So please don't do it."

But Selectman Carolyn Holstein said a policy that dealt only with the spouses and immediate family members did not "adequately reflect the diverse nature of relationships in Amherst or in the 20th century."

The policy defines a "significant other" as "the person or persons that, in the view of each individual board member, shares an intimate or romantic relationship with the board member, and/or with whom the board member shares a close personal relationship or confidences."

Elisa K. Campbell, who chairs the board and describes herself as bisexual, said the policy was an attempt to limit close connection between selectmen, the town's executive leadership and other policy making boards.

"I don't think we're delving into anybody's private life," she said.

Before approving the policy, the board removed a proposed requirement that would have forced selectmen to publicly file a list of up to five "significant others."

Scales of justice or the sound of boots? Injustice for all

Over the past several weeks, a home video of Los Angeles police pummeling a helpless motorist has been beamed into our living rooms. A couple of times a week we get to watch three of a crowd of a dozen cops administer with their clubs, fists and boots more than fifty blows to a man lying face down in the street, begging for mercy. All this came after the cops had disabled the poor guy with a Taser — a high-tech weapon that shoots electricity through people's bodies.

New York. A couple of weeks ago, five cops dragged Frederico Pereira out of a car and strangled him to death. The accused, as it were, claim that the victim smashed his head against the street until he died. Witnesses and an autopsy say that Pereira was strangled. After being indicted for murder they were sent back to work at other precincts.

Jeremy P. Levinson

Everyone is disgusted. Especially with the Los Angeles beating — Federico Periera wasn't lucky enough to have been filmed. Even George Bush was "sickened;" he, who had only a week prior proclaimed the L.A.P.D. the finest in the nation. Los Angeles police Chief Daryl Gates has been weathering a storm of demands for his resignation. The man who has a history of musing about the effects of violent restraint on Black men called the latest in a string of L.A.P.D horrors "an aberration."

After this video tape hit national TV, we find out that the Justice Department is investigating 15,000 such "aberrations" reported over the past six years. And, this represents only a fraction of actual police violence — if you don't get a badge number or a name, you've got no case; it's not counted. So, if you're being beaten and you don't get a chance to note badge numbers and names, and no one with a video camera is around — you're out of luck.

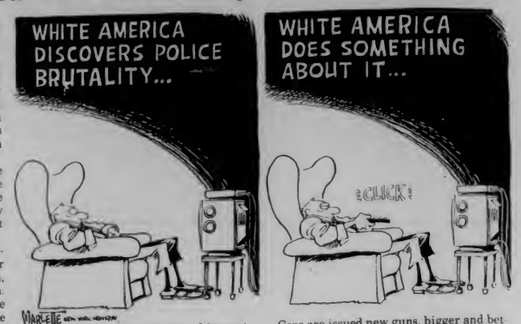
This all comes in the wake — what little wake there was — of a recent report by The Sentencing Project. Analyzing Justice Department statistics for the 1980s, they discovered some horrifying facts about 'justice' in the United States.

On a per capita basis, our nation imprisons more human beings than any other on the planet. More than the Soviet Union, more than The People's Republic of China. And, yes more than Iraq. The Land of the Free boasts a prison population of over one million. 426 of every 100,000 of us live or have lived in a cage.

For Black America, another story — 3,109 of every 100,000 African-Americans are victims of American justice. In South Africa, under the apartheid regime, 729 Blacks are jailed per 100,000. And remember, South Africa's Black majority doesn't enjoy the 'constitutional protections' that we do in the U.S.

Apparently, the flash of a badge obscures the Bill of Rights.

Not wanting to be outdone by other branches of the 'justice' system, the Supreme Court several days ago ruled that "involuntary statements or confessions" may be used against the accused in court. License to force a confession — "Now we have ways to make you talk." Though, apparently cops took this route long before the recent decision, they can now use the results in court.



Has doubling the number of caged citizens yielded a more livable America? When we don't "tie cops' hands" do they do a better job? Think again.

The United States is a world leader — in the commission of violent crime. It seems that the harder we try to stop it, the more people break the law.

We find force appealing. What happens when urban crime becomes a hot topic? Cops are issued new guns, bigger and better guns. 'Urban assault vehicles' are enlisted in the war on crime. But it never seems to get better. More prisons, longer terms, obscene sentencing guidelines, etc. ad nauseum.

Violence begets violence, they say. We meet the rising tide of crime with legions of killer cops, more cages for criminals and brutality in the courtrooms. In fact, it's probably safe to say that we destroy more lives in fighting crime than crime does itself. There something wrong here.

Let's spruce for springtime at UMass

What with Spring Break over and the cold and flu season behind us, the UMass masses, en masse, amass another disease in massive proportions: Spring Fever.

Spring Break is always the great watershed for student life at UMass. Before break, we are tortured by an unrelenting winter; after break, one can feel spring. My friend Jay, said that it's not officially spring until you hear Zeppelin coming from an open window in lower Central. Well, I heard "Dazed and Confused" on Tuesday and I knew it was time.

What does spring mean to students at UMass: Sun, T-shirts, rain, skipping classes, bicycles, picnics, mud, exams, naps, Abbey Road, skipping classes, taxes, pastels, frisbees, taking long walks, skipping classes, birds, lots of holidays, and most of all, b-e-a-u-t-i-f-u-l weather.

Mark Adler

As the temperature rises and the skies clear, we are irresistibly drawn to skipping our classes and lying (or in some cases laying) in the sun. A favorite locale for the human sacrifice to Helios is the lawn between the Library and the Pond as well as the south "terrace" of the Student Union. For those of you who can't tell directions and don't know Southwest from Northeast, the south side of the Student Union is where all those neo-hippies congregate. Many of the ducks have left the pond and migrated east for spring. Every year Daffy and Co. make the trek up to Orchard Hill to eat, drink and get it on. I don't know why my residential area is most favorable to duck-mating, but nevertheless there they are, going at it for all of us in the D.C. to watch while we eat our chicken pucks. Yum! But I digress...

Having finally escaped the narrow confines of the dorms, we notice, perhaps for the first time all year, what our campus looks like. Sadly we discover the abundance of mud and that the entire outdoors could use a face lift. I hope to provide a few ideas for general campus improvement, suggested by my neighbors, Kristen and Sandra, and by me.

Get rid of the mud. Not as impossible as it sounds. Put asphalt on the paths that get trodden regularly and elsewhere plant some grass seed in the muddy areas. Grass seed is ruined if trampled and more adequate barriers are necessary to protect the virgin seed.

Provide better directions on campus. For example, put up some street signs so we can tell people where to turn left. Leave up the dorm banners all year round. They look nice and I still can't tell which dorm is which in Southwest.

Fill up the FAC reflecting pools. I only see water in there during graduation. It looks beautiful and it helps to minimize the 'cement-look' of the FAC. The pools would also get rid of the skateboarders.

Fix up the Isle of View. That's the little island in the pond next to the FAC. Freshman year the stone bridge was set up and we could walk over the island to the other bank of the pond. Very nice.

Provide more benches. Those in front of the Student Union need severe rebuilding and more could be installed near the pond.

Improve pedestrian safety. Like the town of Amherst, UMass could place signs in the crosswalks informing drivers that ours is a pedestrian campus and we'd like to live, thank you very much.

Some of these improvements could be provided free, gratis, and for nothing, through support of student organizations, including the classes, honor societies and Greeks. The Greeks are looking to upgrade their status at UMass and the best way to improve their image on campus is to improve the image of the campus.

New members should not repeat the past

As I read Alex Dering's article ("UMass students win 8 Town Meeting seats," Mar. 27), I felt a sense of Deja Vu.

Two years ago, the Greek Area students felt that town government was not serving them properly. They were able to get two of their members elected. Great!

When the Town Meeting convened to discuss issues pertaining to the town in general and student housing in particular, the Greek area members were notably absent.

Telephone calls to them resulted in tales of "No time." "Exam," and even "There was a Town Meeting?"

I would encourage my fellow student Town Meeting members to take an interest in their position, find out the concerns of their constituency (student and non-student) and to participate. Only then will we have shown that student apathy is a myth.

News prioritization poor at the Collegian

On Monday, March 24, the front page of the Collegian showed a good example of what is happening to the mentality of the world. The lead story was about the UMass basketball team winning another game while a forum on women political prisoners in the United States received a lower position on the page. Which article was the more important story to the future of the human race? Which should have received the headlines? Wasn't the story about women who have been incarcerated for their serious political actions to free us from militaristic ignorance the more serious story deserving our full attention? And the story about the basketball game reinforced the repressive "educational" system which mindlessly entertains us while the ecosystem is collapsing?

Is the Collegian working for the enlightenment of the masses or to keep the masses slaves to the games in the Colosseum?

Quality, affordable education is a right

When I first came to UMass as a freshman in the fall of 1989, I came out of a decade plagued by student apathy. I was thrilled to see that in that semester (almost 2 years ago) that when Gov. Dukakis cut public higher education budgets and raised tuition, the students of UMass and other state colleges banded together, rallied, and said, "no more!"

We went as one voice — almost 12,000 students — from UMass and all over the state to stand up for our school, ourselves.

At that massive demonstration at the statehouse, some students spoke to Paul Tsongas. He said that we need to keep the pressure on state government.

Now, I am afraid that we are changing the 90s from a decade of activism to a decade of giving up. As a group we are a powerful entity in society.

WE DESERVE A GOOD EDUCATION AT A REASONABLE PRICE.

I call on administrators, professors, parents, and most of all we, the students, to band together once again and focus on saving our school and fighting for ourselves. We must tell Gov. Weld that he cannot put a price on education. We must hold another demonstration at the statehouse this spring and demand action on our behalf. We must tell Gov. Weld in no uncertain terms that he will not brush us aside and relegate us to an education advisor that never attended a public school in his life.

We must get back to basics and mobilize now in order to catch the media's eye if our message is to be heard as strongly as the last time a governor told us that we did not matter. We must tell our "public servants" that we will not stand for their waiting until summer when we are disbanded, and cut us to pieces even further.

Let us unite, stand tall, and fight for our rights!

State Rep. speaks to the dangers facing higher ed.

The colleges and universities in our state are some of the best in the country, representing a $12 billion a year industry that feeds and builds the Massachusetts economy. A tremendous volume of student-related spending nets the state a return of six dollars for every one spent on higher education. When they graduate, Massachusetts students drive every aspect of the professional and industrial world, a primary reason so many cutting-edge businesses have developed and located here. Because of its commitment to higher education, Massachusetts has throughout its history been a leading economic and social force.

Stan Rosenberg

Two higher education systems, one public and one private, have kindled our success. There are more private colleges per capita here than in any other state. These campuses attract students from throughout the nation and the world; in fact, most of the students who attend our private colleges aren't from Massachusetts. Those who stay contribute greatly to our economy and quality of life, but most leave Massachusetts when they graduate. It's our public colleges and universities which are charged with providing a quality, affordable education to Massachusetts residents — those who will live, work, and pay taxes here throughout their lives. These are the campuses which must prepare Massachusetts for the decade of the 90s.

In the last few years, every state in the country has increased funding for public colleges and universities — except Massachusetts. While higher education spending rose by an average of 11.6 percent nationally, Massachusetts' support for higher education fell by 20 percent. We've cut funding for public higher education by more than $175 million. Now, Governor Weld proposes cutting another $74 million. We're the only state in the nation about to cut college and university budgets for the fourth year in a row.

In a state which relies on knowledge and human enterprise for its economic survival, this is an unexplainable and unconscionable course of action. It's time to come to our senses. We are in the middle of a recession. Preventing thousands of students from earning an education will only worsen our economic problems.

In addition to slashing college and university budgets again, the governor has put two major financing proposals on the table. Both would send higher education in exactly the wrong direction. The governor wants to raise tuition dramatically and, for public and private college students alike, he wants to eliminate state-funded scholarships, replacing them with loans.

Our state universities are now the third most expensive in the country. Our community colleges are the fourth most expensive and our state colleges are the seventh. Tuition increased by 50 percent in the last three years. Raising tuition again, even modestly, will likely make Massachusetts' public colleges and universities the most expensive in the country.

More recently, the governor called for a system of sliding-scale tuitions, based on each student's ability to pay. Sliding-scale tuition is difficult and costly to implement. In adopting a sliding-scale tuition policy, Massachusetts would risk losing valuable federal aid. Campuses would feel pressured to recruit more and more upper-income students, displacing lower-income students who might otherwise attend. A sliding-scale tuition policy policy goes against a basic principle of public higher education: the subsidy should come from the public treasury, not from other students and their families.

With student costs rising so dramatically, scholarships have become more essential than ever. For many qualified but poor students, scholarships make the difference between getting a college education or going without. Forty percent of the students receiving state scholarships come from families with an average annual income of less than $13,000. The experience at the federal level during the 1980s clearly demonstrated that replacing scholarships with loans will significantly lower the number of low-income students who go to college.

What the governor needs to understand is that the entire public higher education budget is, in fact, a revolving loan fund — and a profitable one at that. For every student educated at a public campus, the average cost to the state is about $4,800 a year. For the small number of students who receive scholarships, the typical award is less than $1,500 a year. Over a four year period, Massachusetts might "loan" a student $25,200. But by gaining a college education, studies have shown that students increase their lifetime earning power by as much as $600,000. The 5 percent income tax on these increases earnings alone will net the state $30,000, more than covering its investment. In addition, the increased sales, excise, meals, and capital gains taxes college-educated workers will pay can only further supplement the state's treasury. State scholarships and public college subsidiaries are a rock-solid investment. Public higher education is entrepreneurial government at work.

Deep and repeated budget cuts, higher and higher tuition and fees, and the elimination of scholarships are all signs that Massachusetts has lost sight of the role and importance of higher education. We must renew our historic commitment to a strong, internationally — competitive economy and we must build it — through a creative, thinking, and well-trained work force that only a top-notch higher education system can provide. The time for tinkering and short-sightedness is over. It's time once again for Massachusetts to invest in the power of knowledge.

Editor's note

It would be an understatement to say that some took offense to yesterday's cartoon. The cartoon, drawn by syndicated columnist Doug Marlette, depicted a St. Patrick's Day parade scene along with a group of leprechauns toting bigoted picket-signs. The caption read: "What would St. Patrick's Day be without the little people?" Lots of folks took this to be a general assault on the Irish and their traditions.

Some things need to be said.

In the weeks preceding St. Patrick's day, there was great controversy surrounding the New York St. Patrick's Day parade. There was some question as to whether or not an Irish gay organization and a group of handicapped children would be allowed to march. After a lot of politicking and anger, both groups were included. They marched with a group politicians, including the mayor of New York and the governor of the state. Along the parade route, some members of the crowd hurled epithets and cans of beer at the marchers. Parade organizers turned their backs when the gay contingent passed.

This was clearly what Marlette, a New Yorker, had in mind when he drew the cartoon. Not a nationality. Not tradition. Rather, he was editorializing about a particular event in which some shameful actions took place.

My mistake, in choosing to publish the cartoon, was the assumption that news of the widely, indeed nationally reported New York controversy had drifted as far as western Massachusetts. Apparently I was wrong.

I apologize for the any anger that may have resulted from this misunderstanding.

We all really should take George Bush more seriously

In a sense, those who say that George Bush lacks a "vision thing" are mistaken. Bush certainly does have a vision — a vision of American hegemony in international relations coupled with expanded Presidential power and prestige.

President Bush desires to put the new-found power and prestige which he has gained from the war to impose a new moral order on the U.S. This order stresses patriotism and ostracizes those who dissent from the current administration's goals and policies.

Bush's rhetoric, both during and after the recent Persian Gulf War, points distinctly to his grand design. While many scoff at Bush's use of the phrase "new world order," history reveals that the last president to employ that phrase held similar designs.

Woodrow Wilson saw the post-World War I era as an opportunity to bring America into a leadership position in the world community through membership in the League of Nations and through an expansionistic U.S. foreign policy.

Wilson also planned to use a strong America to expand his own power and influence. As Michael Rogin writes of Wilson,"American leadership meant presidential leadership...presidential power, moreover, would not be confined to foreign affairs."

More than seventy years later, George Bush is doing what Wilson attempted to do then, albeit with far more success than Wilson ever had. Bush's expansion of presidential power is easily seen in his unilateral doubling of troops in Saudi Arabia last Nov. 12. This clearly changed the U.S. role from a defensive role to an offensive one, presenting Congress with a virtual fait accompli with regard to going to war to drive Iraq out of Kuwait.

Bush's "success" in foreign policy is rapidly infiltrating American domestic life in a way which puts a high premium on conformity and strongly discourages dissent and even meaningful debate.

First, by glorifying America's role in defeating a Third World nation, Bush has claimed to end America's so-called "Vietnam Syndrome," or reluctance to use armed force.

Part of ending the Vietnam Syndrome involved quieting what a recent Boston Globe article called the "adversarial culture" of liberals, radicals, members of academia, and anyone else critical of U.S. policies and actions. Bush has taken the U.S. victory over Iraq and his exceptionally high approval ratings as a mandate to squelch this type of dissent.

What Bush is attempting seems remarkably successful. Before the war, for example, 47 senators voted against the use of American troops in the Persian Gulf. Now, however, it seems that every member of the Senate is engaging in a mad rush to issue the most ringing endorsement possible for the recent war.

Jason George

John Kerry of Massachusetts was one of those 47, though one would never know it after hearing his comments to a group of U.S. soldiers in Kuwait after the fighting ended. Kerry said: "a lot of us who served in Vietnam found a new breath of air in your courage and optimism" and added that he was "delighted by the outcome of the war."

If that is the tone taken by opposition politicians in this country, the future of meaningful political debate in the U.S. may be severely clouded.

Bush may well have succeeded in ending the Vietnam Syndrome and quelling the adversarial culture in this country. Before claiming too much from the U.S. victory over Iraq, however, Bush should consider two points.

First, a lot of what the adversarial culture talked about in this country — the 37 million people in this country who have no health insurance, the roughly 1 in 5 children who live in poverty, and the fact that U.S. foreign policy has contributed to instability and bloodshed throughout the world — is true. Making dissent unpopular will not make these problems disappear.

Secondly, has it ever occurred to Bush and the other hard-liners in the administration that the crux of the Vietnam Syndrome, a reluctance to use military force, may not have been such a bad thing after all?

It is sad commentary on this country when a reaffirmation of America's killing capacity is cause for national celebration.

BLACK AFFAIRS

Welcome, Mr. Brown

The Third World Caucus proudly presents Les Brown, an African American motivational speaker.

Les Brown has been developing techniques that help people reach deep down inside themselves to grasp their unrealized potential.

Brown has been recognized by Esquire, Ebony and Essence magazines. He has also been praised for his outstanding work by the Reverend Jesse Jackson.

Preview

Les Brown, a former three time seater in the Ohio legislation, has reached national acclaim by being the recipient of over eighty awards for his outstanding community service as well as for being an advocate for the rights and opportunities for those persons are repeatedly ignored in our community.

The University of Massachusetts community has the unique opportunity of hearing this man speak.

On April 3,1991 Les Brown will appear at the Malcolm X center from 4 p.m. - 5 p.m. and in the Student Union Ballroom from 7 p.m.- 9 p.m..

Brothers and sisters, this is a great opportunity. This is a program you do not want to miss. He is inspirational, motivational and black.

Remember, support our organizations - if we don't who else will. See you there!

It's Delta Sigma Theta!

By EDES MCCRAY
Collegian Correspondent

The Pi Iota chapter of Delta Sigma Theta Sorority Inc. celebrates "Delta Week 1991, Black Love" April 1-7.

Delta Sigma Theta Sorority Inc. was founded at Howard University by 22 women on January 13, 1913. The sorority is based on the ideals of public services, scholarships and sisterhood. The local undergraduate chapter of Delta Sigma Theta Sorority Inc. Pi Iota, was founded in June 2, 1985.

Since its six year existence here in Western Massachusetts, the women of Pi Iota Chapter have been strongly dedicated to public services. They have participated in the ABC walk, Amherst Harvest Fest, and have supervised child care at the Holyoke Community Center. The Chapter has also conducted study sessions in the valley, and have sponsored STD (sexually transmitted diseases) and pornography workshops. Pi Iota also has annual spaghetti dinners, Beach parties and Benefit Variety Shows.

PI Iota Chapter chose the theme of black love this year because they feel that in order for black people to achieve and accomplish we need to love ourselves and our community. All the programs next week will evolve around this theme of love and community. For example, the Womens Health workshop at the Betty Shabazz House at Mount Holyoke will be exploring issues on emotional and psychological and physical well-being.

Pi Iota will be having a discussion at Smith College on building unity among black women.

Pascale Benard, a member of Delta Sigma Theta Sorority Inc., feels that this disscusion is important for sisters to be able to sit down and talk frankly with each other but, to do so in a way that builds unity instead of destroying it.

Delta Week will not be limited to women issues. On Wednesday April 3rd at 7:00 in the Campus Center Pi Iota will be having an open discussion on black men titled "Black Men Rescue: 911," a discussion on issues facing the African American man and possible practical solutions.

"I'm really excited about this, because it's going to be a panel of black men talking about issues that they are facing and have faced. I hope the audience will be both men and women who are willing to discuss and share their experiences"said Benard.

During Delta Week Pi Iota will be having it's 4th annual Beach Party on April 6th in the Southside Room at the Soutwest Munchies. Beach wear if you...DARE.

"We really hope that the community will come out and help us explore these issues and build bridges of understanding"said Benard.

Europeans,the problem or solution?

When is this going to stop? Once again the European community shows it's true colors and feelings toward the African-American community.

Three weeks ago the country witnessed the horrific attack by some members of the Los Angeles police department on an African-American, Rodney King. What was done about this attack? The answer is little or nothing, at least not yet.

Instead we get excuses for the police officers rather than opposition for them. This incident is a prime example of the hypocrisy that Europeans cloak themselves in.

This incident is not any different from the Central Park atrocity. As a matter of fact, this incident that occurred over a speeding violation.

These are people who are sworn to protect us. These are people who children are supposed to look up to.

Where is the national outrage? Where are the full page articles calling for the death penalty? Where are the screaming crowds asking for the heads of the police officers? NOWHERE, that where! Instead you have people wearing blue ribbons for a racist police chief.

Brother and sisters, this includes all people of color, this is a good opportunity for you to open your eyes on how this country is actually run. You have four armed police officers beating up on ONE unarmed, non-intoxicated African-American for no reason what-so-ever, while eleven other watch. You also have a police chief who either during or before this act approved of their actions.

Douglas Greer

A reasonable deduction would be that every police officer at the scene of the crime should be held accountable for what happened. Any decent person would agree.

Now take this incident and expand on it. Is this how this country is going to run? You have a small amount of racist, so-called political European males who make all of this money. Then they turn around and miseducate, and economically and politically oppress every person of color. Yet the rest of the European community sits back and lets this happen. Therefore another reasonable deduction would be that all Europeans are racist as well.

To the European community, please do not be surprised when I tell you that this is not a unique example of what African-Americans experience in this country. This is the norm. So, do not wonder why African-Americans are cautious of you and why we do not like this country.

The least that the European community can do is take responsibility for the wrongs done by your people, hell we are always held accountable for ours.

If you are not apart of the solution, you are apart of the problem, wake up before we do.

Douglas Greer is a UMass student. This article is the opinion of the writer and does not necessarily reflect the views of the Collegian staff.

I HEAR YOU'RE PRETTY SMOOTH WITH THE LADIES! WOO WOO WOO!
OH, KNOCK IT OFF! IT'S THAT DARN DUPLICATE AND YOU KNOW IT!
MAN, HE'S GONE TOO FAR! I DON'T MIND IF HE CLEANS MY ROOM, AND GETS GOOD GRADES, BUT BY GOLLY, I DRAW THE LINE AT BEING NICE TO SUSIE! CAN'T THAT DUPLICATE TELL SHE'S A GIRL?!
OH, I THINK HE'S FIGURED THAT OUT. I SAW HIM CUTTING HEARTS OUT OF RED CONSTRUCTION PAPER!
WAUGH!
.. And WHO COULD MAKE MY HEART FEEL WOOZY? ONLY THOU, MY FAIR SWEET SUSIE.

Um... hi. I didn't order this.
Maybe you wanted to order it + forgot.
No, I'm pretty sure I—
Maybe you still want it but are so out-of-touch with yourself that you don't know it.
Really, I—
Maybe your desire for that order is so repressed that you won't know about it until 15 years from now.
—I'll just go eat this before we start questioning my masculinity.
It's already in doubt.

NO! I WON'T RUB LOTION ON YOU! YOU'RE SUPPOSED TO ASK A GIRL TO DO THAT!
OH... I DIDN'T KNOW...
THANKS A LOT! I REALLY APPRECIATE THIS!
OH, IT'S NO PROBLEM AT ALL!
...AND THEN SHE STARTED RUBBING IT ALL OVER MY BODY. I THINK SHE LIKES ME!

YOUR DAILY HOROSCOPE
By JEANE DIXON

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Tell people what is on your mind. You will make an excellent impression if you have done your homework. Co-workers are ready to be convinced. Put your money where your mouth is.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Tackle unanswered mail. A prompt reply will let an influential person know you are on the ball. A show of initiative could net you a special bonus as well as compliments galore.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Stick to tried-and-true methods now. Deal with the practical issues in a relationship. Important benefits come from having a sense of roots. Wanderers should return home to their loved ones.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Check the condition of any real estate you own. Home improvements will increase its value. A loved one may be feeling neglected. Find a better way to show your affection.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): The spotlight is on current relationship problems, especially if your home life is involved. Sort out your friends from your fair-weather acquaintances. Accept a last-minute invitation.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): It may be time to distance yourself from a stressful relationship. Minor fluctuations in your finances are not cause for alarm. Business affairs deserve extra scrutiny.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): High energy carries you through this busy day. You are in the driver's seat at work. Start a major project with confidence. Your parents or children need extra encouragement.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Great things lie ahead for your social life! Blending newcomers and old friends at a party could lead to powerful connections. Regular exercise helps you ward off depression.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): You feel less tolerant of other people's foibles now. Knowing this, choose your companions and activities with extra care today. Tact and compromise will ease a difficult family situation.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): A terrific day for you and a partner to firm up your plans. Funds may arrive from someone at a distance. Your path is clear – carry on. Transform doubt into confidence.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Give your imagination free rein and you will land a rewarding interview or job. Evening is the best time for a romantic interlude. Savvy signles will seek companions who share their values.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Keep in close touch with those in authority today and key support should come your way. The time is ripe for implementing an ambitious plan. Unleash your imagination.

points as CU recaptured an 11 point lead, 81-70, with 6:21 to play.

UMass fouled on nearly every possession thereafter, closing to within two, at 92-90, with :31 to play, but CU made 12 of 14 free throws in the last minute :07, to hold the Minutemen at arms length.

Jim McCoy scored 27 to lead the Minutemen. Harper Williams, who again held his own against a nationally renowned big man, scored 20 points and grabbed five rebounds. Giles finished with 13 points.

Vandiver made 10 or 12 free throws and 12 of 18 field goal attempts on his way to 34 points. Vandiver also grabbed seven rebounds.

"I wanted to play well today because they always remember your last game," Vandiver said.

As was the case against Stanford Monday night, the Minutemen sleepwalked through the first few minutes of the game falling behind by double digits.

At the 11 minute mark, the Minutemen picked up the pace fueled by three hoops by Williams and a pair more from McCoy; the Minutemen closed within 28-26 with 5:46 to play, as the Buffs went seven minutes without a bucket.

CU again went into a funk at the tail end of the first half and Anton Brown took advantage with a transition jumper, steal, and pretty feed to McCoy and another jumper, to give UMass its first lead of the game, 35-33.

The Buffs knotted the score at 38 at halftime on a Princeton basketball back door layup by Cody Walters with :08 left.

Gorillas drop opener at Cornell, 16-7

By ADRIEN MATT
Collegian Staff

ITHACA, N.Y. — This is a tough one to learn from.

The University of Massachusetts lacrosse team suffered through their season opener, losing to Cornell University, 16-7.

This was Cornell's fifth victory for the season, all of which were played at home. UMass contines it's season 0-1.

The Big Red came on strong and never let up, allowing only 30 shots on goal compared to their 37. For a team like UMass, which usually dishes out 45 shots, that's a shutdown.

"To be honest, I didn't think they could do anything like that," said goalie Ray Suris. "It's like we had stepped back. We were in slow motion today."

The midfield scored all UMass points as the attack of Jim McAleavey, Mike Cain, and Mario Guaglianone were restrained. Cornell's Steve Gray ran away with a game high six goals and one assist. John Snow contributed two goals and John Gaensbauer netted two Big Red goals and offfered one assist.

Mark Millon showed the most points for UMass with one goal and three assists. Jim Kushner netted one in the first, then another in the last 30 seconds of the game to end the scoring at 17-6.

"We didn't really counter-atack them with anything," said coach Ted Garber. "We'd get the ball back then go to the freakin' net."

Cornell initiated the scoring ten seconds into the game and set the pace. UMass answered three minutes later with a Cain -Millon combination.

The tit for tat went into the second quarter but Cornell continued to rack up the points. The Big Red held UMass scoreless for 13 in the second quarter, rounding out the half at 9-4.

"We didn't play any game," said tri-captain Rick Senatore. "They controlled the tempo of the game for the whole game." Kushner and Hugh O'Callahan scored with Millon assists and Ed O'Callahan combined with freshman Pete Cuda early in the second quarter.

Suris replaced Ted Kellerman in goal for the second half. "Teddy didn't get a lot of support in the first half, and maybe putting in a new goalie would shake people a little bit," said Garber. Kellerman finished with six saves.

The defense stepped up only slightly in the second half, but the attack lay dormant, as Cornell kept UMass scoreless again for 27 minutes.

"People were spreading themselves out. We told them to protect the corners," said Garber. "We just lose our heads out there."

It was difficult for UMass to keep it's head as the barrage of shots kept coming. Cornell approached the net as aggressively in the fourth quarter as in the first.

Women go 11-3

The University of Massachusetts women's gymnastics team placed third in the Atlantic-10 Conference tournament this past weekend, behind Penn State and West Virginia. The effort gave the Minutewomen a final record of 11-3.

The Minutewomen grabbed 185.25 team points, enough to defeat teams like Rutgers, Rhode Island, Temple, and George Washington.

Lisa Beth Kronan set a personal best with a 9.35 on the balance beam. Abby May scored an impressive fifth on the beam, and Erika Finkleman scored a 9.25 in the event to add to the team's score and win a bet with head coach Alfie Mitchell.

The entire team will not be heading to New Hampshire for the regional competition, as they placed eighth in New England and only the top seven teams are eligible. Tammy Marshall and Kim Grady will however be competing individually.

Tammy Marshall, who defended her all-around title, and Kim Grady, who holds the number three slot in the all-around in New England, will continue on to the National Championships at the University of Alabama.

Mitchell said he was impressed with how his team performed at the meet, and their consistent performance this season.

Leagues against pro sports wagering

By ROBERT W. TROTT
Associated Press Writer

BOSTON (AP) — Lawyers from the NFL and the NBA vehemently protested a sports betting bill before the legislature on Tuesday, saying state-sanctioned wagering on professional sports would tarnish the image of the state.

"I see it as another big problem for coaches, for players, and most importantly for the game of football itself," said Dick MacPherson, the new coach of the New England Patriots.

[MacPherson was head football coach at the University of Massachusetts from 1972-1977.]

"I think there's enough pressure on the New England Patriots without sports betting," he said.

MacPherson and representatives from the National Football League and the National Basketball Association said state-run sports betting would transform professional sports into shady operations where fans don't know if a player is giving his all to win or simply doing a bookie's bidding.

The bill filed by Rep. Larry F. Giordano and Sen. James P. Jajuga, both Methuan Democrats, would authorize the state Lottery Commision to oversee sports gambling. A similar bill died last session.

David Cornwell, assistant counsel for the NFL, said the NFL already has its hands full contending with illegal betting and odds dictated by Las Vegas. He also said published injury reports helped gamblers, but was required so opposing teams could prepare game plans.

He said the NFL monitered Las Vegas odds weekly to check for a "pattern of misconduct"

Cornwell said state-backed betting would create a "new class of bettors" who don't wager on sports now.

Softball trip yields 3-7 mark

By DAN WETZEL
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts softball team's annual trip to California did not produce the success that many were hoping for. UMass finished the 10 game road swing with only three wins.

UMass started off the trip on a high note by sweeping Santa Clara University in a double header. In the season opener, Holly Aprile pitched the entire game as the Minutewomen broke a 2-2 tie in the top of the eigth to win in extra innings. In the second game Darlene Claffey pitched a complete game shutout and the UMass bats clubbed in 11 runs.

After Santa Clara the UMass hitters were not heard from for a while, producing only 1 run in their next four games. The UMass offense was totally shut down by some stingy pitching as they suffered back-to-back shutout loses to Missouri (6-0) and Fresno State (10-0), getting only 2 and 1 hits respectively.

The Minutewomen then moved on to the National Invitational Tournament in San Jose, California but were only able to muster one run in a loss to Arizona State (7-1) and then were shutout by Kansas (5-0). In the tourney finale against Sacramento State, UMass' play improved but they lost in extra innings 4-2.

UMass rebounded against Adelphi, breaking out offensively as they scored 7 runs on 10 hits, winning their third game of the year, 7-0.

UMass then got a rematch with Sacramento State but again wound up on the losing side of the decision, dropping the game 7-3. In the final game of the road trip Central Michigan pounded out 11 hits and won 6-3.

The team, which was ranked 13th in the country in a preseason poll, now looks to improve their record by hosting the UMass Invitational Tournament on March 9th and 30th. Other teams competing in the tournament include Army, Maine and Vermont.

Game moved due to weather

Yesterday's scheduled baseball game between the University of Massachusetts and the University of Connecticut has been postponed and moved due to soggy conditions at Earl E. Lorden field, UMass coach Mike Stone confirmed.

Stone said that the game will either be played today at J. O. Christian field on UConn's Storrs, Ct. campus. Gametime is 3 pm. The Minutemen, 3-8, will then travel to Kingston R.I. to play two doubleheaders against Rhode Island in Atlantic-10 Conference play on March 29 and 30. Saturday's games start at 1:00 pm, and Sunday's contests start at 12 noon.

COP SHOOT COP UNSANE SURGERY

By DANIELLE DOWLING
Collegian Staff

Ever get that not so fresh feeling?

Well, what better way to purge yourself than to deluge yourself in some absolute, glorious noise extravaganza? If you are given to such desires then you may be so inclined to go see Unsane, Cop Shoot Cop and Surgery, three truly sick and intense bands that will be attacking the aural cavities of the Happy Valley this Friday night.

Unsane is a noise trio from New York City consisting of Chris Spencer on guitar and vocals, Peter Shore on bass and Charlie Ondras on drums. They released their first seven-inch single in 1989 on Treehouse entitled "This Town" b/w "Urge to Kill." This was simultaneously released with a song called "Burn" on a Treehouse compilation entitled Scumbait. Their most recent efforts are a hard-to-find seven-inch on Glitterhouse and another seven-inch on Sub Pop entitled "Vandal-X" b/w "Streetsweeper."

Last summer, they were suppose to release an LP on Circuit. It is possible that LP may still be released but its future is still uncertain. When not together as a trio, bassist Peter Shore and drummer Charlie Ondras moonlight as the rhythm section of Boss Hog, a New York underground project. Also, Ondras, a Northampton native, used to be a part of the Gracefully Aging Hippie Soloists with Fountains Turned Backward, a duo he formed with present Sebadoh member Eric Gaffney.

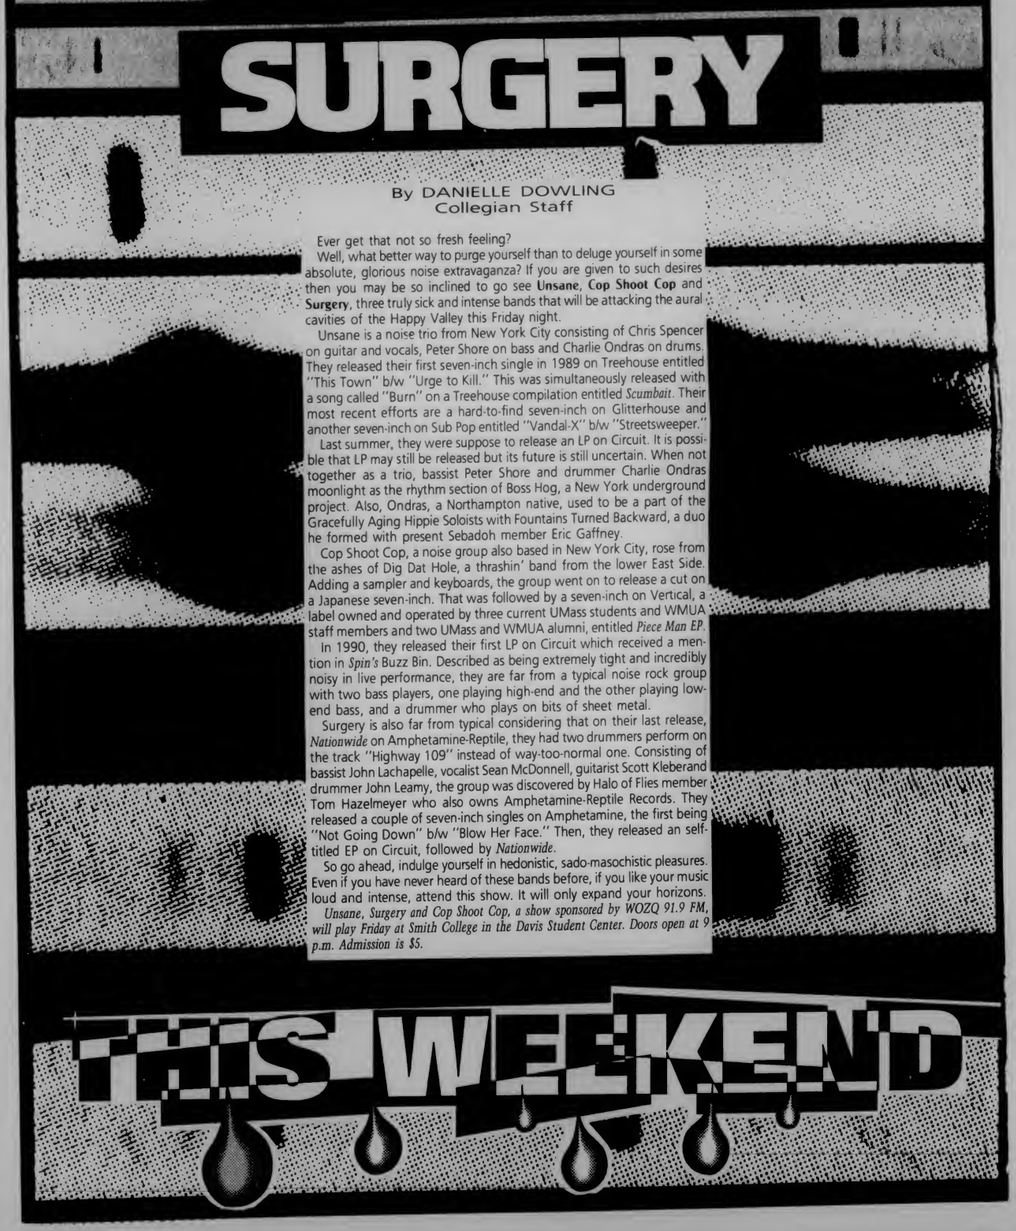
Cop Shoot Cop, a noise group also based in New York City, rose from the ashes of Dig Dat Hole, a thrashin' band from the lower East Side. Adding a sampler and keyboards, the group went on to release a cut on a Japanese seven-inch. That was followed by a seven-inch on Vertical, a label owned and operated by three current UMass students and WMUA staff members and two UMass and WMUA alumni, entitled Piece Man EP.

In 1990, they released their first LP on Circuit which received a mention in Spin's Buzz Bin. Described as being extremely tight and incredibly noisy in live performance, they are far from a typical noise rock group with two bass players, one playing high-end and the other playing low-end bass, and a drummer who plays on bits of sheet metal.

Surgery is also far from typical considering that on their last release, Nationwide on Amphetamine-Reptile, they had two drummers perform on the track "Highway 109" instead of way-too-normal one. Consisting of bassist John Lachapelle, vocalist Sean McDonnell, guitarist Scott Kleberand drummer John Leamy, the group was discovered by Halo of Flies member Tom Hazelmeyer who also owns Amphetamine-Reptile Records. They released a couple of seven-inch singles on Amphetamine, the first being "Not Going Down" b/w "Blow Her Face." Then, they released an self-titled EP on Circuit, followed by Nationwide.

So go ahead, indulge yourself in hedonistic, sado-masochistic pleasures. Even if you have never heard of these bands before, if you like your music loud and intense, attend this show. It will only expand your horizons.

Unsane, Surgery and Cop Shoot Cop, a show sponsored by WOZQ 91.9 FM, will play Friday at Smith College in the Davis Student Center. Doors open at 9 p.m. Admission is $5.



Flor De Cana: serious dance music without the cheese

By PAUL DEGEORGES
Collegian Staff

Their music is best described as "Pan American World Beat" because it usually makes anyone who listens to it get up and dance. Flor de Cana is a Latin American dance band with cultural roots in Puerto Rico, Argentina, Uruguay and the United States and musical influences ranging from Dominican merenge to Andean huayno, Uruguayan candombe to Puerto Rican bomba, West Indian zouk and Venezualan vals.

"Candombe and zouk? Wait a minute! He said dance music!" Yup, not a hint of House or Disco here kids. . .this is serious dance music. But what's even better is that it's real (none of that cheesy canned club stuff.) This is music that comes to you straight from a group that has shared the stage with the likes of Grammy award winner Ruben Blades, legendary Latin jazz star Tito Puente and folk maestros Pete Seeger and John McCutcheon. According to the Boston Globe it is "music that stirs the soul and awakens the feet."

Flor de Cana was formed in 1984 and is based in Cambridge, MA. They fuse their contemporary and traditional Central, South American and Carribean rhythms and original compositions with lyrics that speak of the need for social change and a message of hope for a better world.

With a range of South American stringed and wind instruments, Carribean percussion, bass, guitars, saxophone, keyboards and the group's trademark — their exquisitely rich in harmony vocals — Flor de Cana takes its audiences on a veritable rhythmic journey.

In 1988, Flor de Cana recorded their first album on Flying Fish Records entitled Muevete/Move It, which received critical acclaim around the globe and was called "a rousing fiesta for the soul." Just recently, the group finished recording material for a second album which is due sometime this summer.

So, you want to dance? Drum machines and synthesizers give you a migraine? Then go see Flor de Cana.

Flor de Cana will perform on Friday, March 29 at the Iron Horse. The show starts at 7 p.m. and tickets are $8.

Guild goes Into the Woods and lives happily ever after

By DANIEL JOKELSON
Collegian Correspondent

Into the Woods
Bowker Auditorium
Tuesday, March 26

For those of you still bleary-eyed and sun-soaked from the break, a very hot show began the Monday we got back and performs its last hurrah Thursday — don't miss it! It's the UMass Theatre Guild's premiere production, Into the Woods, and when I left the theater, I was red-eyed, and I laughed and babbled all the way home to my typewriter.

Into the Woods was a rollercoaster ride that alternated between hysterical characterizations, beautiful love relationships, and the real pain and sadness from the destruction that takes place in the second act. Fairy tales were fleshed out and we were completely wrapped up in their stories. The show ended with a powerful bang as the entire cast gathered at the edge of the stage and sang directly out to us about how important it is to be honest with children, to be careful not to mislead them by making them believe that the world works like a fairy tale.

I found myself torn by the losses of the characters, and angry at the cowardly, selfish way that some characters reacted when the giant started trampling their land, in spite of the voice in my head that kept saying, "Relax! They're just fairy tales!" The singing of all the actors was terrific, adding to the emotional impact, and the highlight was the Baker's "No More" in the second act.

Bill Larkin is the Baker who, mostly by the aid of his wife, brings together all of the characters, and his rendition of "No More," a lament, was heart-wrenching. Jennifer Costello as the Baker's Wife gave a terrific performance, dealing with the whirlwind changes in her life in a great song, "Moments in the Woods," and her singing was wonderful.

The ensemble blended together to communicate their message without letting opportunities to steal moments and be total hams go by. Cameo appearances by Ed McCarthy as Cinderella's fuddy-duddy of a father, Chris Itrato as the Mysterious Man and Marc Clermont's Big Bad Wolf were hysterical, as were the dashing, dripping-with-sap performances of Micah Hollingsworth and Todd Robinson as Rapunzel and Cinderella's princes (their duet, "Agony," was one of the best schticks of the night.)

Kelley Hine's Little Red Riding Hood had the audience laughing all night long, as did Meg Pryor and Joyce Avitables portrayals of Cinderella's cut-up stepsisters. Ceit McCaleb was convincing as the hard-working, fed-up and graceful Cinderella, and Alan Maki was very compelling as the virtuous but extremely simple-minded Jack (of beanstalk fame.) And of course, there was Laura Duncan's Witch, a powerful, sinister and sad portrayal of a potent sorceress who gives up her spells for youth and beauty, and becomes a frustrated, hard woman. Duncan gave several riveting musical performances, including her "rap" in the prologue, and "The Last Midnight." Her performance, as was every actor's performance in this piece, very strong and consistent.

Their energy was amazing — they were able to sustain and then actually build it right up to the awesome finale.

Into the Woods will be performed tonight at 8 p.m. in Bowker Auditorium. Tickets are $5; $3 for students/elders.

Panel says Gulf War was inhuman

By MADANMOHAN RAO
Collegian Staff

The nature of the recent Gulf War, regional challenges in the Middle East, and prospects for peace were discussed by a panel last night at Smith College's Nielsen Browsing Room.

Three area professors addressed an audience, which included Five College students, community members, and former United States ambassador to Saudi Arabia, John Akins.

Ahmed Dallal, a visiting scholar in the History of Sciences department at Smith College, began by discussing the nature of the Gulf War.

"Facts and developments are only now coming to light after the war is over and when few are following the coverage," he said. "During the war the military claimed nearly 100 percent accuracy in their air campaign, but are now admitting that 70 percent of all bombs missed their target."

"The claim that several hundred Kuwaiti babies died when the Iraqis stole their incubators has now been shown to be false," Dallal continued.

"An eight mile convoy of mostly civilian vehicles, fleeing Kuwait City was trapped and bombed for six hours," he said. "They were clearly withdrawing and posed no military threat whatsoever — yet, they were killed to the last one. This killing is a war crime by any standards," Dallal said, "and the criminals should be brought to justice."

Speaking of Arab-Israeli peace, Dallal said, "The U.S needs to bring Israel to the negotiating table. Requirements for regional disarmament should apply to not only the Arabs, but the Israelis as well.

"There is a basic racist argument that Arabs cannot, but Europeans and Israelis can, possess weapons of mass destruction even though it has been the West that has used weapons of mass destruction in an essentially Western war," he said.

Hormoz Shahdadi, professor of International Relations at Mount Holyoke College, said, "The use of gung-ho militarism has been good only for the psyche of the U.S. people. This war was not heroic. It was a miserably inhuman war. The war was already won by the disparity in technology between Iraq and the U.S. over the past 20 years.

"Both the U.S. and Israel share the idea that only force works with Third World people, particularly with the Arab people," Shahdadi said, as now seen in the Lebanonization of Iraq.

Speaking on the role of Iran in the region, Shahdadi said, "Iran represents a powerful social force, the Shiite tradition, which advocates a return to Islam as a dignified alternative to Western civilization.

"The type of wars fought in the region prove that the facade of Western civilization with its claims of democracy are a disguise for efficient use of force when desired," he said. "The Gulf War has proved the utter worthlessness of the package called Western civilization.

"This war has intensified how much Ayatollah Kho-

Queer Nation urges Southwest eat-in Organizers hope to increase residents' awareness of gays

By TRYSTAN SKEIGH
Collegian Staff

Monday thru Friday of Next week the University of Massachusetts chapter of Queer nation is encouraging gay students and their allies to eat dinner at Hampshire Dining Commons in the Southwest residential area to make residents more aware that gay students are everywhere, according to Sean Sullivan, Queer Nation spokesperson.

"In various conservative publications and statements, conservative students have claimed Southwest as their own," Sullivan said. "Some have said things like 'Southwest is for normal people' and that all the 'freaks' live elsewhere. We're trying to show that gay students live everywhere, including Southwest."

Sullivan said Queer Nation hopes to challenge the prevalent Southwest attitude with "nonviolent humor and creativity." "Queer Nation UMass has staged physically harmless and quite humorous demonstrations," Sullivan said. "We are basically a non-violent group — we make our points through humor and creativity, like the 'kiss-in' at the Republican Club office and the 'vogue-in' at the Straight Pride rally."

Sullivan said Queer Nation chose to eat at a dining commons because "that's a major social congregating spot for students."

"We want to challenge the Southwest stereotype," Sullivan said. "Right now people think GLB students hang out at Worcester dining commons and straights have a separate 'oasis' at Southwest."

Sullivan said there are gays who live in Southwest and he hopes they will come to the dining commons and eat with other gay students. "We're going to congregate, eat, and enjoy each other's company," Sullivan said.

Hopefully, straight students will not feel displaced and will stay and eat with the gay contingent, Sullivan said. "We're not trying to displace people — we just want to increase the level of awareness at Southwest."

Andrew Hill, a bisexual resident assistant in Southwest, said he currently eats at Worcester dining commons because there are more gay students there.

Hill said he feels that many Southwest residents use apathy to avoid dealing with their homophobia.

"Southwest is very much like the real world," Hill said. "I mean, we have 5,000 residents here. Individuality is really de-emphasized. I think this is a key factor in the widespread disinterest here in diversity issues."

Chris Hayward, another Southwest resident, agreed that most Southwest residents probably will not show a lot of interest in the Queer Nation presence.

"I think Southwest residents will probably just see it as a nuisance type thing. I mean, I go there to get my food, eat, and get out. I don't think anybody really cares whether gay students eat there."

Although Hill said he thinks apathy is widespread, he also acknowledged that homophobia does occur at Southwest. He said last semester the entire complex was plastered with Bart Simpson posters opposing Queer Nation after the kiss-in.

200 fans welcome basketball team home

By MEREDITH O'BRIEN
Collegian Staff

The record-breaking University of Massachusetts men's basketball team, on the heels of Wednesday night's 98-91 loss to Colorado University in the National Invitational Tournament's Final Four, yesterday came home to a rousing show of support at the Curry Hicks Cage.

Nearly 200 students, administrators and area residents clapped and cheered as they converged on the team's bus while it pulled up to the Cage. As the players got off the bus, they walked through a corridor of fans, greeted by handshakes and pats on the back.

Monday night over 14 buses and 1,400 UMass fans trekked to New York City's Madison Square Garden to see the Minutemen play Stanford University in the NIT semifinals. The team lost in the last minutes of the game 73-71.

In spite of the team's losses to Stanford and Colorado, fans gathered at the Cage praised the team for an "extraordinary" season.

"It was a thrilling season. I had a heart attack at every one of their games they were so exciting," said graduate student Charles Tamulonis who said he attended nearly every home game.

Tamulonis said the team accomplished a lot more than people expected this year. "I was very excited that they went as far as they did. They made me proud to wear my UMass sweatshirt."

The 1990-91 season marked the Minutemen's first appearance in the NIT's Final Four. Rising from the lower ranks of the NCAA Division I, the Minutemen also gained national recognition this year with two nationally-televised games and ended their season with a 20-13 record.

UMass Assistant Dean of Students Ricardo Townes, a self-proclaimed "die-hard UMass basketball fan" who attended every home game, said the team can be proud of the excitement it provided the University during its period of low morale and debilitating economic woes.

"These young men have done wonders for the campus community, they have given us something to be happy about, something to rally around," Townes said.

After a brief word of thanks to the fans, Head Coach John Calipari spoke fondly about the team, especially its four seniors. "We devoted this season to them," he said.

Senior Guard Rafer Giles told fans they helped give him a special four years at UMass. "You should be proud of these guys right here," he said pointing to his teammates. "I've had special years with these guys. I love 'em and I love you all."

Senior Forward John Tate, who teared up when he thanked the UMass coaching staff for four years of support, said UMass fans has always been good to the team. "My sophomore year we only won 10 games but we still had fan support. And the fan support got better and better as we got better and better."

Junior Guard Jim McCoy, who this year broke the school's all-time leading scorer's record, said, while the crowd support this season has been outstanding, it has not always been that way.

"Since my freshman year, we had to beg people to come to the games, but right now people are begging us for tickets," McCoy said.

"Crowd support has been great this year," Giles said. "Since the first couple of years we haven't had too many fans, but now everybody's a fanatic and that's great."

meini was right — that a return to Islam, independence and dignity is better than being parasitic on Western civilization," Shahdadi said. "Islam is on the rise, and will be on the rise."

"When Arab nationalism speaks again, and it will, it will be in Sunni Islam," he said. "Egypt will be most vulnerable. In the long run, there will be more turmoil, more conflict and more revolutions."

Speaking of the Non-Aligned Movement, Shahdadi was very skeptical of its potential role. "The case of Iraq proves that no ideology can stand up against the technological power of the U.S.," he said.

Addressing the role of U.S. public opinion in this war, Shahdadi said, "The public does not ask questions. They have been healed from the Vietnam syndrome. The only check on the U.S. could come from the public — but the U.S. public rejoices, and does not ask how many have been killed or whether the killing was justified."

Peter Rowe, professor in the department of government at Smith College, said that the question of oil would continue to be an important one.

"Regionalism is the key to a new world order, rather than a universal agent like the United Nations," he said. "Despite its clear military victory, the U.S. cannot dictate peace."

"Both the issues of Palestinian self-determination and Israel's security concerns need to be addressed," he said.

Rowe strongly disagreed with Shahdadi's assertion that there is no compassion among the US people. Ambassador Akins too said, "We are compassionate people."

RE: Cafe Ashley Route 9 in Hadley

Yvanna Darling:

In light of our recent marital problems I feel it is necessary that for the children's sake we act as a cohesive unit and try to remain friends.

Could I suggest that we meet for the fabulous breakfast buffet at Cafe Ashley in Hadley on either Saturday or Sunday morning, between 8 and 1?

They feature an extensive array of delicious home-made belgian waffles, omlets, fresh baked pastries, breakfast meats and many other choices.

Frankly, right now it's not only my favorite restaurant, but even I can still afford to eat there.

Love,

Don

Good ice cream with a good conscience

By K.A. BURKE
Collegian Staff

One of the most important things that Ben and Jerry's Homemade ice cream has done is "given other businesses the opportunity to take a stand," according to Chuck Lacy, president and chief executive officer of Ben and Jerry's.

Speaking Wednesday night at Amherst College, Lacy, a 1980 Amherst College graduate said Ben and Jerry's, besides being famous for their premium quality ice cream, is known for their dedication to social concerns.

Acts of philanthropy include employing a bakery in New York state, which hires mostly homeless people, to bake brownies for Chocholate Fudge Brownie ice cream.

Also, Lacy said the company buys Brazil nuts from Brazilian rain forests for the Rain Forest Crunch ice cream, making it profitable for the people living in the region to leave the rain forests standing.

Lacy explained the history of Ben and Jerry's, starting when founders Ben Cohen and Jerry Greenfield were in seventh grade.

The two wanted to start a bagel business in Vermont, but did not have enough capital. They could, however, afford the materials necessary to start up an ice cream business.

They almost sold the business in the early 80s because it was not what they expected, but then they met someone who turned them on to the idea they could be a business with a social conscience.

An important thing about doing business in this era is "challenging convention," he said. Ben and Jerry's did this when Pilsbury, makers of Haggen Daz ice cream, told retailers in Boston they would no longer do business with them if they stocked Ben and Jerry's. They could have sued Pilsbury for anti-trust violation.

Instead, Ben and Jerry's launched their massive "What's the doughboy afraid of?" campaign, which consisted of "Bilboards, bumper stickers, an 800 number, and a one man picket by Jerry Greenfield outside the Pilsbury corporate offices in Minnesota," Lacy said.

"They didn't know what they were up against," and Ben and Jerry's therefore infiltrated the Boston market, he said.

Ben and Jerry's is committed to what he calls a, "social mission." The first part of this mission starts with the product, which supports the Vermont dairy industry. They buy their dairy products from a cooperative creamery which is owned by 500 Vermont family farmers.

The second part is the economic social mission, which includes profits for the shareholders, mostly Vermont residents, and, through a profit sharing program, for the employees.

The third part includes working with organizations such as One Percent for Peace, founded by Ben and Jerry's, which lobbies for the "allocation of one percent of the defense budget of $3 billion to peace through understanding programs," such as U.S. and Soviet citizen exchanges.

They have taken a stand against outrageous corporate salaries by making raises "start at the bottom and work their way up."

The corporation also gives 7 and one half percent of their pre-tax profits to "charities dedicated to helping people getting power over their lives."

One of the things which Ben and Jerry's will be doing in the near future is starting a business in the Soviet Union. Lacy said one of his dreams is to use the profits from this venture to fund citizen exchanges between youths from Vermont and their sister state in the Soviet Union, the province in which this business will be located.

The six foot, seven inch bearded Lacy handed out Ben and Jerry's brownie sandwiches to the audience, asking them to inspect the packaging, then the product, which he said is what he is most concerned with in his job.

He encouraged the students in the audience to not be cynical about business. He said, "hundreds of companies are doing what Ben and Jerry's is doing."

He also said the company is far from perfect and that one of the things they are actively looking to improve is their minority recruitment.

He encouraged young people to seek these companies out, and said the "difference is having the courage to do it."

LBG Counseling Collective offers support

By SARAH DEMASTER
Collegian Staff

The desire to give back to the community is a common theme expressed by members of the Lesbian, Bisexual and Gay Counseling Collective at the University of Massachusetts.

"I came out after coming to UMass, and being exposed to the gay community, and when I came out I really didn't know who to talk to," said Ali Caplan, a UMass student. The help she received from a collective member inspired her to become a counselor.

The group, composed of seven lesbian, bisexual, and gay men and women, offers confidential counseling, a library, information, and referrals to both homosexual and heterosexual members of the Five College community as well as non-students. The collective also holds "rap groups" every Monday at 8 p.m. in the LBGA office. Bisexuality will be discussed April 1.

Jeff Soares, also a UMass student, said he became a counselor "because I got a lot of support and help in coming out and I felt like giving something in return."

To prepare for the job, counselors undergo an eight-hour training session with the collective's advisor, Lydia Rackenberg of UMass Mental Health Services. Counselors also hold weekly meetings together with Rackenberg to discuss issues they have been, or might be faced with, in the course of counseling.

Michael, a resident assistant who wished to withhold his last name, said some people call for information, and "for some people it's issues they have with friends, be they gay or straight. Either friends have trouble with their sexuality, or they had a fight (for example)."

Caplan said, "A lot of time people have added problems with the stigma — problems with parents or friends in the coming out process."

While acknowledging that homophobia exists in the Five College area, Michael said, "My perspective about the negative is that this is the fourth or fifth campus I've lived on. I've been on campuses where gay, lesbian, bisexual organizations or counseling collectives didn't even exist.

"The way I look at it here at UMass, the gay population is lucky to have a program office or a counseling collective because some places don't even have that."

The collective, a Registered Student Organization funded by the Student Activities Office, was formed in the late 1970s. Located in 406G Student Union, the collective can be reached at 545-2645. Hours are Monday 11:30 a.m. to 7:30 p.m., Tuesday 12:15 p.m. to 2:15 p.m., Wednesday 11:30 a.m. to 2:15 p.m., Thursday 1:30 p.m. to 5:30 p.m., and Friday 11:30 a.m. to 3:30 p.m.

Lecturer speaks out against Nelson Mandela

By SONDRA SUTTON
Collegian Staff

The former mayor of Ibhayi (Port Elizabeth), Tamsanqa Linda, gave his sometimes controversial opinions on Nelson Mandela, the African National Congress, and other subjects yesterday.

Speaking at the University of Massachusetts, Linda said African Americans do not know what suffering in South Africa is like.

"African Americans have not suffered here in America," he said.

The presentation was sponsored by the New American Club, the Young Americans for Freedom, the Republican Club and the Minuteman.

The basis of Linda's lecture focused on his views about Nelson Mandela and the African National Congress. Linda said the only thing that Mandela was doing in South Africa was causing black on black crime.

Although many people in the audience said they supported Linda's views, some said they disagreed.

"Mr. Linda, as well as the crowd, made me feel very uneasy. I sat there and thought to myself, why in the world is one African man calling another African man, 'stupid,' 'boy,' and 'racist.' I feel Mr. Linda has a lot of soul searching to do," said Aurelia Branche, a Springfield resident who attended the lecture.

Ted Marvelias, of the New American Club, sa d, "His appearance is important because he toured the same time that Nelson Mandela was in the United States. He provides a viewpoint of Mandela and the ANC that is not being told. It is important to know both sides."

After the lecture, in response to Linda's remarks, Marvelias said, "America must know this."

Representatives from the "left" and the "right" debate the War

By AMY HENRY
Collegian Staff

Some 50 students came to listen to eight students from the "right" and "left" clash last night over the Persian Gulf War.

Marika Marllis, a Social Thought and Political Economy and Journalism major, who did not claim to speak for the newly-formed 10-person discussion group, said, "This was formed to prove we can have an intelligent debate on campus. It was not a win or lose debate. We thought it was important to hear both sides."

Each panelist gave a two-minute statement on the Gulf War followed by questions that were asked by both sides, closing remarks and questions from the audience.

Panelists included, on the "right" Glen Caroline, the president of the Republican Club, Steve Harrington, Christopher Woods and Paul McGonnigal who are all members of the Republican Club. Representing the "left" were Jason Rabinowitz, coordinator of the Communist League, Kira Sanbonmatsu, James Arthur Jemison and "Heartsong."

"The United States can't stand by as thousands of Kuwaitis are raped, killed, and tortured by Saddam Hussein," McGonnigal said. "He is the modern day equivalent of Hitler."

According to Sanbonmatsu, it was easier for President George Bush to go to war then design an energy policy.

Caroline said, "This war was most importantly about liberating people. Blood for freedom."

Jamison said, "The U.S. is a gang of people who have committed crimes such as the genocide of the Native Americans and slavery of Africans and they are in no position to be moralizing on what kind of person Hussein is. Economic sanctions would have worked."

Woods said, "Sanctions wouldn't work. The Iraqi people boosted their own production. Whether Jordan wants to admit it they lent a hand to Iraq."

Jamison said, "Why do we have time to wait for sanctions in other occupied territories such as South Africa and Northern Ireland and not Iraq?"

EDITORIAL/OPINION

The opinions on this page are those of the individual writer or cartoonist and do not necessarily reflect the views of the Collegian or the University unless otherwise noted.

We can really hurt each other

Homophobia comes in many shapes, sizes, and forms. It is easy for gay rights activists to spot when it is packaged in a "straight pride rally" or a "talk show" hosted by conservatives who are blatantly bigoted. It is much harder for "open-minded" people to see and exorcise the homophobia that resides within themselves.

This is painfully true for many homosexuals and bisexuals who battle inner waves of self-hatred on a daily basis.

Nearly all GLB students have been to gay bars and dances and heard, or even made comments like "he's such a flame," or "god, she's so butch," or "the reason I don't join the LBGA is because they're all so weird."

Trystan Skeigh

These remarks reflect the problems that we, as gays, still have in accepting ourselves and other gays in our communities. Coming-out means the beginning of a long road toward self-acceptance and self-love. Some of us have twenty or thirty years of imprinted fear and disgust from which we must recover.

It's a sad fact that many of the injuries gays sustain, individually and as a community, are self-inflicted. Here at UMass there is a recent, tragic example.

Jason McDonald is a UMass freshman who courageously chose to begin his collegiate career as an openly gay man. Jason has worked tirelessly for gay rights and has received a great deal of criticism and harassment because of his openness. Jason received death threats after he was involved in the Queer Nation kiss-in in the Republican Club office last December.

Ironically, the most devastating blow to Jason has not come at the hands of campus conservatives. Jason has also been harassed within his own gay community.

Jason was "outed" to his parents last week by a group of individuals who live on Jason's dorm floor in Brett, which is a diversity corridor that stresses tolerance for alternative lifestyles. The group, which included straight, bisexual and homosexual students, anonymously sent Jason's parents a packet of documents, including newspaper articles, disclosing Jason's sexual orientation. This act has had immediate, disastrous results for Jason.

His parents did not know that he was gay.

Jason depends on his parent's financial support for college.

Jason's father has cut him off financially, which means Jason can't come back to school next year.

A spokesperson for this group, who called me requesting that he remain anonymous, explained that Jason was outed because people on his floor are mad at him. He said Jason has been insensitive and paranoid, a charge echoed by a second member of the group, who also requested anonymity, and they both said that they felt Jason has become egotistical and self-righteous. They said people felt that Jason should be punished.

The point is, for whatever reasons, these individuals, out of anger and resentment, (and a great deal of hypocrisy), retaliated by focusing on Jason's personal vulnerability as a homosexual, in order to cause him an enormous amount of pain and difficulty.

This is homophobia in its most extreme form.

It is another bitter irony that the viciousness of this direct, personal assault on Jason McDonald far outweighs most of the gaybashing, verbal, and physical, that has been attributed to conservatives this year. I guess maybe gay community members just know how to hurt gays the most.

It is a sad fact that gay students who are closeted to their parents, risk this sort of malicious attack. What is especially grievous is that it often involves more than the destruction of students' relationships with their families. Because of financial dependency, it can also cost gay students their education.

And that's just the tip of the iceberg. Coming out to one's parents is the most emotionally difficult and traumatic experience most homosexuals will ever endure. And some of us don't endure, which is why suicide among gay teenagers is so much higher than the national average. It's also why alcoholism and drug abuse is disproportionately high among gay adults.

It's hard enough when a gay individual chooses the time and place to tell his/her family. When one is forcibly, maliciously outed by others, the trauma can reach unimaginable levels.

That this crime was perpetuated by people supposedly committed to sexual diversity on this campus only compounds the tragedy of this event.

It also serves as a harsh reminder that we who are battling homophobia must first deal with it in ourselves.

Let's bring democracy to elections

I am writing to introduce you to the Pioneer Valley Pro-Democracy's Fair Elections Pledge. We are going to be asking all candidates for the late Congressman Silvio Conte's seat to sign the pledge.

Pledge signers will agree to limit their campaign spending to $250,000, including no more than $10,000 of their personal funds. They will also agree to accept no contributions over $250 and to raise at least 80 of their funds from sources within the district, accepting no out-of-district Political Action Committee contributions. In addition, pledge signers agree to make Federal Election Commission campaign finance reports available to the public and media upon request and to participate in at least one public debate that includes all the other candidates.

James Karis

The second part of the pledge is aimed at the winning candidate, requiring him or her to actively support pro-democracy legislation which 1) provides public financing for all federal election campaigns and prohibits candidates who accept public financing from receiving private contributions, 2) provides free media opportunities for all candidates, and 3) establishes universal voter registration for all voting-age citizens.

Candidates for political office seek large contributions because it is so incredibly expensive to campaign and the biggest costs are for advertising. The average cost of running for a House seat in 1988 was $395,000; for the Senate, $3 million. While it is impossible to determine exactly how much money goes into TV advertising fees, we do know that in 1990 campaigns spent $203,313,300 on TV ads, according to the Television Bureau of Advertising. This involved a 26 percent increase over 1986, the most recent year for a national election without a presidential contest.

To pay these phenomenal campaign bills, politicians everywhere are turning to Political Action Committees – especially to the corporate PACs with their seemingly limitless resources. In the 1985-90 election cycles, the oil and gas industry PACs gave winning Congressional candidates over $10 million — ten times as much as all alternative energy PACs combined. In that same time period, military industries poured over $32 million into successful Congressional campaigns.

These kinds of contributions cannot help but put the politicians in the debt of their contributors. This fact is not lost on the general public. 70 percent of whom feel Congressmen and women care more about special interests than they do about the average citizen, according to a 1985 ABC News Washington Post poll.

And yet, despite this pervasive cynicism, people do want to be involved in the democratic process. In the 1990 gubernatorial election in Florida, Lawton Chiles limited his campaign contributions to $100 per person. He raised $2.5 million from 39,000 people and beat the incumbent, always a challenge.

Congressional incumbents are even harder to defeat, supported as they are by three quaters of all PAC contributions. In the 1990 Senate race, Paul Wellstone (D-Minnesota) was the only challenger to unseat an incumbent. Wellstone (outspent 8 to 1 during the campaign) has promised to shun individual campaign contributions of over $100 for the next four years once his campaign debt is retired. He has also refused to accept all PAC money.

Chiles and Wellstone are part of what Pioneer Valley Pro-Democracy sees as the beginning of a national movement – a movement to give the political power back to the people. We hope the current campaign in the First Congressional District will serve as a model for the rest of the country – an example of what can happen when the people, not the monied interests, control the elections.

To encourage citizens to become involved in the campaign and in the electoral process in general, we are circulating the Voters' Fair Election Pledge. Voters signing this document promise to make the candidates' responses to the Fair Elections Pledge a key factor in determining how they vote.

End the baseball salary feeding-frenzy

Major league baseball salaries are getting a little revolting. I hadn't really thought about it much until Roger Clemens signed a contract extension which pays him over $5 million per year. Well, I thought, he may well be the best player in baseball – at least it's debatable. And, since Jose Canseco of the arch rival Oakland A's is making $4 million-plus a year, surely the Red Sox could justify "The Rocket's" raise. But then I got to thinking...

Barry Wadsworth

Clemens is getting $5 million for pitching in a maximum of 35 games, which works out to $143,000 an appearance. Whether or not he, or any other athlete for that matter, deserves such an astronomical salary is irrelevant. What is important is that his pot of gold is a dangerous forecast of baseball's impending demise.

Player comparisons and free market capitalism have fused into a never ending salary spiral. Superstars demand, and receive, salaries commensurate with their peers. The owners, exercising their right under baseball's free agency system, risk large amounts of money on mediocre players, skewing the basis of comparison higher and higher. Just in the past year we witnessed the signing of New York's Don Mattingly for $3.7 million a year, which prompted Jose Canseco's $4 million deal, which in turn pushed Clemens' market value through the ceiling. And now New York's Dwight Gooden is asking for a contract comparable to Clemens', and the numbers seem to support him: He's had more wins in the past four years, and he's three years younger. Do we have the real $6 million man here?

In order to field a competitive ball club, owners must have high revenues, and this depends on the team's television market. The big cities pay their clubs upwards of $50 million a year for the rights to televise the games. So teams like New York and Boston, which have enormous population bases, can pay higher and higher salaries. However, certain teams are being priced out of the players "sweepstakes."

With the National League's two top players last year and a showing in the play-offs, the Pittsburgh Pirates seemed to have a bright future. But despite high attendance and fan support, the Pirates simply can't afford to pay what the market is offering their superstars. Their television revenues are only a fraction of New York's, and for an extra $2 million a year National League MVP will soon be wearing a new uniform.

This pattern is creating an imbalance. Those teams with the larger metropolitan bases are at a clear advantage over those such as Pittsburgh and Minnesota. If this spiral continues the talent will be polarized, leaving certain teams unable to compete, which will destroy the game.

Perhaps baseball needs to establish a league-wide salary cap such as the NBA, which would limit the amount of money any one team could spend. Player salaries themselves could be restricted into categories based on performance. Maybe federal legislation will be needed when the average fan can no longer afford to go see a game or when cities start losing franchises. Baseball has seemed reluctant to regulate itself, and it is headed for self destruction. The spiral has to stop.

Minuteman 'jeers' a mark of prestige

JEERS!

In fact, double jeers!

Jeers to the writers of the Minuteman for neglecting to include me in the "Cheers and Jeers" section of their issue. I was two for two in the way of Jeers and loving it. I'm not sure what qualified me to receive the two jeers in the previous editions, but the response was great.

Strangers who would hear my name in the D.C. would shake my hand and congratulate me. "Hey," they would acknowledge, "you've been jeered. Alright!" Never have I felt more acceptance and support from my peers as I did in the days immediately following my lashing at the hands of the campus conservatives.

Getting jeered is as enviable as a position as starting quarterback on the football team. So let's let Ted Marvelias play and let's keep the jeers coming, shall we?

'Phallic powers' control toilet access

The positioning of the restrooms in the Grad Towers is sexist! All graduate students of nuclear physics have offices closer to the men's room than to the women's room. This gives female graduate students of nuclear physics the subtle message that they are not welcome.

This setup is obviously the result of a conspiracy of the male phallic-worshiping powers that be.

We must fight this oppression!

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Competing with your partner will only lead to heartache. A close friend shares a life experience, giving you a fresh perspective. Listen attentively to your teenager.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Self-doubt vanishes when you receive a promotion! A more experienced person gives you wonderful advice. You are beginning to realize how much time and effort it takes to build financial stability.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Do not let other people's expectations prevent you from achieving your goals. Career pressures lessen when you get better organized. A friendship will last through thick and thin.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Seize any opportunity to advance your career but resist the temptation to gamble financially. An old debt could suddenly be repaid. Keep close tabs on investments. People make a fuss over you.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): A shorter financial plan works out better than expected. Take health concerns more seriously. As friends become more like family, you become protective toward them.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): A new research project could be part of the picture. Stick to tested methods and proven procedures. Evening is a great time for social activities. A candid conversation gives you food for thought.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Travel requires extra caution now. Valuable confidential data can be obtained from a friend who works behind the scenes. Guard any secrets you may learn today. Romance keeps you guessing.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): A partnership could make it difficult for you to advance certain personal plans. A willingness to compromise helps you solve any domestic problems. Romance thrives on trust. Give loved one more space.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): You get an excellent opportunity to air the plans you have been developing. Your colleagues should be receptive. Look for an angle that will win more cooperation from others.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Disquieting news may be part of the picture. An old problem could resurface. Do not shy away from a face-to-face meeting. Laying your cards on the table wins you new respect.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): The career and financial advice you receive from VIPs comes in very handy. Learn from an experienced older person who continues to play a major role in your life. Romance sparkles.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Keep your wits about you when in the spotlight. The little things you say and do could be magnified. Faraway places and people buoy your spirits. A whirlwind romance is possible!

Critic comes clean and trashes neo-traditionalism

By BILL ROSENBLATT
Collegian Staff

Astute regular readers of this column will have noticed my occasional polite derogations of the current movement in jazz that has been called neo-traditionalist, neo-conservative or, in the words of Francis Davis in Wire magazine, "Neo-phobic Youth." Now it is time to get specific. I resent the neo-traditionalist movement.

The movement began about a decade ago on the premise that jazz had been shunted into two camps roughly called avant-garde and fusion. The former was too abstruse and elitist, the latter was too superficial and commercial, and neither were tapped into the music's great tradition.

A principal articulator of this premise has been Stanley Crouch, a Village Voice columnist and liner-note writer. Crouch came to New York in the early 70s as a radical Black poet and drummer who participated in the decidedly avant-garde Soho loft scene. Now he spends his column-inches bashing the avant-garde as well as fusion and progressive African-American leaders like Amiri Baraka and Louis Farrakhan. So much for Stanley the Grouch.

However, I do agree with him and others that jazz had become dissolute during the 70s; it was indeed necessary to reestablish the music's continuum. The neo-traditionalists have done this to some degree by perpetuating the styles — mostly of the hard bop variety as epitomized by Art Blakey — that predated the avant-garde. Some of these youngsters (Christopher Hollyday, Joey DeFrancesco, Harry Connick Jr.) sound like 2-D cardboard reductions of the real thing, though others (Roy Hargrove, Ralph Moore, Branford Marsalis) have begun to show significant musical personalities of their own.

But the neo-traditionalists have missed out on one crucial aspect of the jazz tradition: innovation. "Dotting Bird's i's and crossing Dizzy's t's," as Down Beat critic Gene Santoro put it, is what passes for innovation among the young players (if even that). Wynton Marsalis may be a fine trumpeter, but when I see a list consisting of "Miles, Monk and Marsalis," as in a recent Down Beat letter, I get angry.

Various intelligent observers have admitted that the music is in the creative doldrums nowadays, but they add that the current scene is laying the groundwork for a period of innovation to come. I agree up to a point. For one thing, African-American music (in general) is innovative now and will continue to be so; it's just that most of the innovation is taking place outside the boundaries of jazz.

Furthermore, these observers usually note that jazz hasn't had a dominant creative force, on the order of an Armstrong, Ellington, Parker or Coltrane, in almost 25 years; the music just needs another one in order to move ahead. This is certainly true.

However, many fans of neo-traditionalism claim that the next Louis/Trane already exists in the person of Wynton/Branford.

Baloney. The former musicians were geniuses, not only because of the way they played, but because they thought of it in the first place. Will the "Next Picasso" paint in the Cubist style? Of course not. Similarly, the "Next Trane" may have roots in the original one but otherwise will sound new and different. Branford is actually in a good position to become the next Coltrane in a few years, but he isn't now.

The other major problem I have with the neo-traditionalist movement is that it is taking so goddamn long to pass by. It has been ten years; they have made their point. Former avant-garde and fusion players are jumping on the bandwagon by the dozens. Enough, already. Let's move on. Unfortunately, most jazz record labels are too busy looking for Wynton and Branford clones to notice the real, innovative new talent that is out there and starving. Maybe soon the public will finally get tired of formula albums by conservatory-trained robots with one Duke cover, one Monk cover, three or four standards and two excuses for originals that sound like second-year composition class exercises.

Softball hosts tourney

By THOMAS A. GEORGE
Collegian Correspondent

Throw on a UMass ball cap.

Today is opening day at Totman.

The University of Massachusetts softball team will host Army, Maine and Vermont for the two-day UMass Invitation Tournament.

The UMass team hosts its first game after spring break in California.

The team played double headers against Santa Clara and St. Mary's. It also faced Arizona State, Kansas and Sacramento State in the National Invitational Tournament.

"It was a rocky road [in California]," said head coach Elaine Sortino. "We were not totally healthy. It's tough when we've played four games, and they've played thirty."

Darlene Claffey will be on the hill for the game versus Maine at 3 p.m. Maine and Vermont are "always ready, always fighting" according to designated hitter Christine Collins. The senior captain hails from Springfield.

UMass has yet to play Army, but Sortino has her share of expectations: "One thing you can always count on, is that they'll be in shape."

Nursing nagging injuries and recovering from the trip topped Sortino's priority list. The team may need to start new players at third base and short stop postions, she said.

The tourney will kick off at 1 p.m. when Army takes on Vermont. UMass-Maine starts at 3 p.m.

Saturday, UMaine will face Vermont at 9 a.m., followed by Maine-Army at 11 a.m. UMass will then take the field against Army at 1 p.m., followed by the UMass-UVM game (3 p.m.).

Although not in the Atlantic 10 Conference, Army, Maine and Vermont are Division I teams.

This weekend's tournament opens a seven home-game season, balanced by eight on the road.

A series of quick wins could prove to be a big boost for this UMass team.

"It'll be a tough tournament, no two ways about it," Sortino said.

SMART STEALING — The baseball team faced Connecticut last night after having been rained out in Amherst on Tuesday. Final scores were not available at press time. The Minutemen see the Rams in Rhode Island tomorrow and Saturday for back-to-back double headers for their first Atlantic-10 games of the season.

Courtside Cager: a bench with a view

By FELICE COHEN
Collegian Correspondent

It's more than just water.

It's home games, sweaty towels, dehydrated players, screaming fans, close calls, bad calls, high fives, alli-oops, three-pointers, broken records, fouls, free throws, Cage waves, ref chants 'We want Elvis,' but for the most part, it's pure, clean excitement.

I live for Minutemen basketball.

The aura within the cage, the intensity, the heat. How many times have we been witness to this scenario: The Minutemen down by 15. Suddenly, a Rafer Giles three-pointer. Anton Brown-Will Herndon reverse alli-oop slam dunk. Then a Jim McCoy baseline jumper. Score is tied. Overtime. Tony Barbee lets one sink with nine seconds left to win the game. The crowd roars, the fans pour out onto the floor.

These guys never let up. And although they can be tough on themselves, they work together to the end. And proof? Making it to the Final Four of the NIT. And once there, they gave it their best shot.

Commentary

For many UMass Minutemen followers, Madison Square Garden was only a short bus trip away. Soon, we UMass suburbanites from farm country were mingling amongst New Yorkers and not even batting an eyelash in downtown Manhattan during rush hour. Holding our heads high and waving signs, we walked proudly into the Garden.

The excitement level was there, the support, the energy. These fans were ready. Sparked by the fans, this kind of energy is what really makes the Minutemen tick. But let the truth be told. If these guys weren't being refueled with water, their beats would be off.

This is where I come in.

For me, home games are a little different than for the average Minuteman fan. A die-hard hoop player since I can remember, it seems only natural for me to be involved as more than just a spectator. So I found my place among them . . . on the bench.

During the home games I sat perched at the end of the bench waiting for the players to be subbed or for a time out to be called. As soon as I heard the buzzer, I was off and running. Darting the first row of spectators, I shuffled towels and cups of water to quench the thirsts of these sweaty men.

As far as this being a job — well, I never heard of a job that requires you to go to basketball games, sit on the bench (with the players), get into the game through the locker room (without the hassle of waiting in the rain for tickets), then celebrate afterwards with the team.

Being a part of the UMass Minutemen basketball team is an experience I'll never forget. These guys provided the excitement that college sports are all about. These late night excursions added spice to an otherwise despondent evening of homework.

It's going to be a long time till we catch another home game at the Cage, so until then . . . I wonder if the Red Sox will be needing some one in their dugout to hand out Gatorade . . .

Men's hoop: making school history

By SAM SILVERSTEIN
Collegian Staff

John Calipari spent November in the unusual position of trying to convince people that his University of Massachusetts men's basketball team was not going to win the Atlantic 10 or make the NCAA Tournament.

The Minutemen had four starters returning from an NIT-calibre team and hopes were running unprecedentedly high.

Four months and 33 games later, Calipari has been proven a prophet. The Minutemen finished tied for third place in the league and seeded fifth in the A-10 Tournament, where their NCAA hopes were dashed by George Washington in the semifinals.

When measured by a more realistic yardstick, however, this season sizes up with the very best in school history.

The Minutemen finished 20-13 — winning 20 games for the first time since the 1976-77 season — were undefeated against nine New England area teams, and capped the season with a three-win sprint to the Final Four of the NIT.

"You can't really take too much away from this season," said Jim McCoy, who broke the school's all-time scoring mark against GW in the A-10 tourney. "It's been the best season UMass has had in a long, long time. We accomplished a lot that a lot of teams in the past have never accomplished . . . There were not a lot of teams that were still playing when we were playing."

Among the season's highlights: the emergence of sophomore center Harper Williams as one of the marquee big men in the A-10; the continued brilliance of McCoy, who overcame a preseason virus to repeat as a first-team All A-10 honoree; memorable game-breaking shots by Rafer Giles (vs. Boston College and Rhode Island) and Tony Barbee (against Siena in the NIT); and the late-season resurgence of point guard Anton Brown.

Starters Williams, McCoy, Barbee and Brown will all return next season — possibly joined by Will Herndon, whose eligibility will be determined during the offseason — along with a five-player recruiting class regarded as among the best in the Atlantic 10. Giles and John Tate are the only seniors who saw signifigant playing time this year.

The future's so bright, even Calipari, a habitual doom-and-gloomer, said he expects the program to improve upon this season's accomplishments next winter.

"If we get Will back, we've got the whole team back," he said. "And with the recruits we're bringing in, we should be better next year. We should be older and we should be more experienced in close games."

Crew to face Crimson on Charles

By LYNN FRANKEL
Collegian Correspondent

Rowing on the Charles River in Boston is a thrilling experience for all rowers. Unfortunately, because the University of Massachusetts crew team is a Dad Vail Division school and not a sprint school, rowing the Charles doesn't happen very often.

It does happen though . . . and this weekend, the men's varsity, junior varsity and novice crews will head to the famed Charles to take on perhaps the best crew in the country . . . Harvard.

It is no surprise that head coach Dave Trond anticipates an extremely tough race. The Harvard team consists of the top-recruited prep school rowers from around the country. The Harvard crew will certainly challenge the experienced UMass squad.

Trond said he is looking for a strong, controlled row from his team as they face the poised Harvard team.

He said he is hoping that this weekend's race will prepare the team physically and mentally for the upcoming spring season. Teams like Wesleyan and the Coast Guard Academy loom in the future and have traditionally challenged the Minutemen.

Trond said he expects a polished performance from his varsity crew.

Rich Scannell, Dave Ring, Nat Delmanzo and Chris Marino, have rowed for UMass for four years. Michael Rademacher and Jeff Vohr have rowed for three. Brian Jewett and Kieth Burgoyne have returned after a novice season to round out the eight.

Mary Lockyer's four years of experience as a coxswain also plays an important role in the speed of the shell.

The team returns to the water after a three-month training period indoors and comes off a week of intense spring break training in Oak Ridge, Tennessee.

Sox' Marshall walks, is fined $250

By DAVE O'HARA
The Associated Press

WINTER HAVEN, Fla. — Mike Marshall, unhappy with a utility role and the failure of the Boston Red Sox to trade him, was fined $250 and threatened with stiffer penalties yesterday for walking out of training camp.

General Manager Lou Gorman said that Marshall was fined for his unauthorized walkout Wednesday.

Marshall did not show up for yesterday's game with Detroit and Gorman said that if he does not return within 24 hours, he will be subject to a fine of $1,000 a day in accordance with Rule Five of the Uniform Player Contract.

Earlier, Gorman said the Red Sox were considering disciplinary options, including fines, a suspension or placing Marshall on the disqualified list.

Marshall, a 31-year-old first baseman/outfielder, is guaranteed a reported $1.2 million in 1991 for the final season on a multi-year contract.

"We're looking at our options," Gorman said.

Gorman reiterated that he has told Marshall several times he is trying to trade him, but there is little interest by other clubs. If Marshall is not traded, Gorman said, he will remain a member of the Red Sox.

"He is absolutely AWOL," manager Joe Morgan said Wednesday night. "He came to see me today and said he was thinking about leaving camp. I told him not to do it, that if he did, it would be insubordination."

Marshall, who has a .270 average in nearly nine major league seasons, walked out less than 24 hours after going 4-for-4 with a pair of doubles in a game with Cincinnati at Plant City.

He was not available for comment, leaving after talking with Morgan and noting he was not in the starting lineup. He went back to being a reserve with the return of regular right-fielder Tom Brunansky from the injured ranks.

Marshall, acquired from the New York Mets last July, became expendable when the Red Sox signed slugger Jack Clark as a free agent and signed Brunansky. All three are right-handed hitters.

Easter celebrations recall Gulf War victory

By PATRICIA CALHOUN BIBBY
Associated Press

Worshippers across the United States celebrated the renewing message of Easter on Sunday — a poignant lesson for some in Georgia and Illinois who are rebuilding their homes and their lives devastated by a spate of tornadoes.

Others revels in the traditional Spring rites of Easter egg hunts, sunrise church services and bunny appearances. And New York City pedestrians out in their bonnets — with all the frills - for an annual Fifth Avenue stroll.

More than 1,000 soldiers in Fort Campbell, Ky., had special reason to savor this Easter. They returned home Sunday and were greeted by a colorful crown of family and friends awash in yellow, red, white and blue.

In New York, gauwkers outnumbered the bonnet-bearing in the traditional walk. The Easter Parade, really just a casual mingling in which city dwellers enjoyed the opportunity to stare at each other without reprisal, drew several thousand people, police said.

Hats ranged from a photo collage and paper mache tribute to the victory in the Gulf War to a headdress touting vegetarianism and bonnets celebrating bunnies.

The altar of St. Patrick's Cathedral was adorned with a magnificent display of cherry blossoms, lilies and azeleas. Cardinal John O'Connor told about 3,000 people that Easter doesn't mean "strolling down Fifth Avenue, as delightful as that may be."

Instead the dat offered Christians a chance to renew their faith and "reject Satan."

The joy of the Biblical tale of Jesus Christ's resurrection was tempered with sadness in parts of Georgia as residents tried to recoup from tornadoes that ripped through the state last week.

In Cobb and Douglas counties, where a string of tornadoes left millions of dollars worth of damage, residents picked through debris for their belongings.

The storms left LeRoy and Hazel Anders of Douglasville in the same condition they were in when they married 57 years ago — with no belongings.

"We've got to start over again," Anders said, tears rolling downs his cheeks.

In Lemont, Ill., southwest of Chicago, many residents also spent the day cleaning up from a tornado that destroyed 25 to 35 houses Wednesday.

AP photo

Members of the U.S. Army's 3rd Armored Division chase a camel in the Iraqi desert as a form of Easter amusement.

The Rev. Charles Maxwell-Harris of the Lemont United Methodist Church told about 400 people that God could rebuild their lives, just as Christ was resurrected.

"The poor od response to the tronado has been even more powerful than the tornado itself," he said after the Easter service. "As the cleanup continues, it gets demoralizing."

In Fort Campbell, returning soldiers in the 101st Airborne Diyision were welcomed by a crowd wearing Easter bonnets swathed in yellow ribbon and waving American flags.

Outing 'ruins' UMass freshman, shocks gay community

By CHRIS MUTHER
Collegian Staff

On a campus that is noted nation-wide for dealing with homophobia, one group has continued to perpetuate it to a University of Massachusetts freshman — homosexuals.

Jason McDonald, 18, said he was "outed" to his parents by gay activists on campus last week.

"They've ruined my life," McDonald said. "I'm really shaken up by this. You'd think gay people would be more understanding of parental issues. They've destroyed me."

The gay activists sent McDonald's parents a package of materials that, McDonald said, "clearly spelled out" that he is gay.

"My mom thought it was great, she was showing off articles that my name was used in or that I was quoted in," he said.

His father's reaction was quite different.

"My father hit the roof," he said. "He told me to stop being politically active in 'that program'. He couldn't even bring himself to say the word 'gay'."

"He asked me to 'try out being straight' for a year," McDonald said. "He told me 'those' kind of people only work at K-Mart and don't get anywhere."

McDonald said as a result of the outing, his parents cut him off financially. He said this might mean the end of his education.

"All I want to do is go to school," McDonald said. "And because of what they've done they've put that in danger."

He said he has no idea where he will live when the semester is over. "My worst nightmare has come true."

McDonald has been active in the UMass gay community since coming out last semester. He was a co-founder of the UMass chapter of the group Queer Nation. He said he is a member of the Lesbian, Bisexual and Gay Alliance Steering Committee as well.

As a result of his activity, McDonald said he began to receive death threats at the end of last semester. The harassment became so severe that McDonald was put up in the Campus Center Hotel.

"After my picture was on the front page of the Collegian, I began to get phone calls, I even saw my name written in chalk in a death threat in the Campus Center," he said.

McDonald added that he has contacted lawyers and is planning to sue the activists for invasion of privacy.

A member of the gay community, who wished not to be identified, said there was talk within the gay community for several months about outing McDonald to his parents. She said she was unable to help prevent the outing because of personal problems.

"No one deserves to have this happen," she said. "I feel a loss of safe space in the community."

Lydia Rackenberg, a therapist in Mental Health Services, said she sees the outing as "an appalling invasion of privacy, no one has the right to make that choice for someone else."

"I think people assume a certain level of trust within the GLB community," she said. "[If McDonald was outed by someone in the gay community] it seems like an even deeper hurt and betrayal."

Rackenberg said the process of coming out is a very sensitive and therefore is something that the individual should do only when they feel ready.

"When someone decides they're ready to come out, they need to be ready to deal with the ramifications that may result," she said.

Jailed students confined for a cause

By JOE O'CONNOR
Collegian Correspondent

The University of Massachusets Division of Public Safety and Auxillary Services is holding a mock "lock-up" tomorrow, in the Campus Concourse from 10 a.m. to 2 p.m., according to Raymond Babb, a sergeant in the UMass police department.

"Prisoners" will try to raise "bail" money. The money raised will go to purchasing a van for the escort service.

Although the escort service has been increasingly popular, from nearly 1,000 students in 1985 to over 7,000 in 1990, it has never owned a van, according to Babb.

Collegian photo by Carrie Wyeth

The "jail" in the Campus Center Concourse.

Until now, Housing Services has lent the Escort Service a van and a police cruiser has also been used. Now that may change.

There will be no minimum amount set for "bailing" someone out, but Babb said UMass police have set a goal of $10,000.

"If anyone appreciates what the escort service has done, please come by and contribute," he said.

Prisoners may "turn themselves in" on the Concourse, or, if they choose, be "arrested" where they work. Anyone in the mock cell might meet Joseph Duffey, President-Chancellor of UMass, or Jo-Anne Vanin, the Dean of Students, Babb said.

They also might meet some members of the UMass basketball or football team, he said.

According to Jim Weaver of Public Safety, this will not be the only fund raiser. Local popular student bars will be contributing a portion of their proceeds on a certain date to the Division.

At press time, Twisters, Charlie's, and Delano's expressed interest, while it is certain that next Wednsday, from 9 p.m. until closing , "The Spoke will be donating some of their receipts to the cause," according to Weaver.

Maine gay civil rights bill makes it to House

By TRYSTAN SKEIGH
Collegian Staff

Friday, Maine's gay civil rights bill, L.D. 340, won the approval of the Judiciary Committee by a one vote margin in a 7-6 squeaker on its way to the Legislature's floor.

According to Peggy Reinsch, a legislative analyst for the Judiciary Committee, if the Judiciary Committee had not sent the bill on to the House with its blessing it would still have been brought up and debated because it has many supporters within the legislature.

Reinsch said the Maine legislature debates a gay civil rights bill about "every two years," and she said "the past few times it has passed in one house and then been killed in the other."

Michael Burts, a gay African-American LBGA member, said for him, a Maine civil rights law "would be a victory and a defeat, because they have approved a bill for my orientation but not for my color."

Burts said Maine's African-American population is less than 1 percent, and that bigotry toward Blacks is widespread.

"If I would travel to Maine and get off a bus I would have a police cruiser following me everywhere, wondering what I was doing there. For a White, this probably wouldn't be the case," he said.

Burts said Black gays in Maine are almost "non-existent," and explained it is difficult for Black gays to find a niche in the "mostly White gay community" there.

"So to me, the possibility that Maine may get a gay civil rights bill is only a very small victory," Burts said.

Lucas McNeill, another LBGA member, said the possibity of the Garden State gain-

Basketball tournament to come to Haigis Mall

By TAMIR LIPTON
Collegian Staff

It's being billed as Haigis Hoopla: The biggest basketball bonanza ever to take place in Western Massachusetts. And it is coming to Haigis Mall, April 26-28.

The Hoopla part is a 3-on-3 basketball tournament in which teams of four from all over Western Massachusetts will compete against one another for various prizes.

Some 12 Baskets will be set up at Haigis Mall. If it rains, the event will be pushed back to the following weekend.

Professor Glenn Wong, the head of the Sport Management Program at UMass had been thinking about offering a class in Event Management for a long time. Wong's problem was that he did not know what kind of event to present.

"I had the idea of having some kind of event and I've had all kinds of ideas," he said. "I've thought of running two pro tennis players and two celebrities and having them play doubles, I've thought of having boxing matches... and even bringing the [Harlem] Globetrotters to UMass."

Wong settled on basketball at the suggestion of professor Peter Thomsen, professor of the Event Management course.

"I knew Glenn was thinking about some type of event management course," Thomsen said. "The idea intrigued me and I went to Glenn and asked him what he thought about basketball. He said yes, and here we are."

But putting together a festival of this magnitude has been difficult, according to Thomsen.

In the beginning, it was hard for the class to get sponsors, but when the group inked The Princeton Review and M&M Mars, sponsors started to "snowball."

Since then, Coca Cola, Stop and Shop, d'angelo, Silver Screen Design, Kinkos, Cape Cod, Spalding, the National Basketball Association and the Town of Amherst Leisure Services and Supplemental Education have all agreed to sponsor Haigis Hoopla.

The biggest sponsor however, is WHMP 99.3 FM which has agreed to give up 150 spots of advertising time to advertise the event and broadcast live from Haigis Mall, the weekend of the festival.

According to Thomsen, the value of WHMP's contribution is close to $4,000.

"Once M&M and the Princeton Review agreed to sponsor us, things began to snowball," said Bruce Cook, a student in the class.

Wong said, "This whole thing was really started from scratch which I think is the best learning experience for the students."

The students were divided into groups, some are in charge of advertising, others publicity, sponsorship, etc.

"The class is great," Cook said. "It's more like a business meeting than a regular class."

Thomsen said, "It's been much more than a typical class. It's always been fun and I'm learning more as a teacher.

M&M Mars has donated 50 cases of Twix bars, Cape Cod has given 60 cases of potato chips, Spalding has contributed 12 basketballs for prizes, the NBA is giving 36 hats, there are t-shirts, sweat shirts, food, etc.

Teams will be charged $40 to compete and each player will receive a bag full of goodies, including a T-Shirt.

All proceeds will go to a scholarship fund for a high school student in one of the three counties.

"We talked about a lot of charities," Wong said. "I very much wanted something in UMass.

"I felt given the financial situation, that this was where we might be able to help out... and at least raise awareness of the [financial] problem," he said.

The students meet with an advisory board composed of nine faculty members from different parts of the school. The board includes Wong and eight others. It serves as a committee which offers suggestions and oversees much of the work which is going on, according to Thomsen.

"The biggest concern [now] is getting people to sign up to play," Thomsen said. "Our biggest challenge is to convince the students that this is a big event."

In fact, they are projecting 200 to 250 teams and 3,000 spectators.

Wong said, "We are not calling this a 3-on-3 basketball tournament, this is a festival, we want to create a festive atmosphere, we want people to come out and have a good time.

"As you can see, we timed this event with UMass doing well in basketball," he said jokingly.

The fun starts Friday night with a pre-event Registration Party featuring members of the UMass basketball team. Included will be an exhibition of thunderous dunks and long range shooting.

No definite decision has been made as to whether the class will be offered again next year, according to Wong.

Waltham fire kills one

WALTHAM (AP) — Authorities believe the careless disposal of a cigarette caused a weekend fire that killed a 53-year-old man and injured six other people — five of them firefighters.

Robert Arsenault, 53, died from burns and smoke inhalation at Waltham Hospital after the two-alarm fire late Saturday at his home.

Another resident, Stanley Bubier, 39, was in stable condition yesterday with second- and third-degree burns at Brigham and Women's Hospital in Boston.

Five firefighters also were injured in the two-alarm blaze, which broke out around 5:30 p.m. Saturday at 171 Willow Street, Deputy Fire Chief Paul Connolly said.

One firefighter was in stable condition at Waltham Hospital, one was tended to for smoke inhalation at Newton-Wellesley Hospital and released, and the three others were slightly injured and did not need to be hospitalized.

The fire broke out in an upstairs room of the two-story brick structure, Connolly said. Five people live in the building.

The cause of the fire remained under investigation, but fire officials believe it was caused by the careless disposal of a cigarette, Connolly said.

Student victories highlight Amherst Town Elections

By ALEX DERING
Collegian Staff

The final results for the Amherst Town Elections have been tabulated.

Francesca Maltese will serve a one-year term as Moderator.

Incumbent Elisa K. Campbell was re-elected to serve a three year term on the Select Board.

The two seats for School Committee, each of which has a three year term, were won by incumbents Doris P. Cruz and Katherine Vorwerk Feldman.

Vincent O'Connor and Allen Torrey each won a Hampshire County Commission seat.

Running unopposed were Margaret Roberts, who will remain at the Redevelopment Authority for another five years, and Rosemary Sprague, who will serve as Oliver Smith Will Elector for another year.

The complete list of students who won three year seats on the Town Meeting is:

Precinct 2: Matthew C. Pavesi, Marjorie C. Decker and Hollis E. Crowley.

Precinct 3: Kevin W. Newnan and Richard B. Rigney.

Precinct 4: Dennis M. Crowley III and Robert S. Murray.

Sharon Lang and Robert W. Witherall, two students from Precinct 4, each won a one year term on the Town Meeting.

Irish Easter Rebellion recalled at memorial service

By JON MARCUS
Associated Press Writer

BOSTON (AP) — Patrick Vaughan stood quietly as the names of friends dead for three-quarters of a century were read aloud beneath the flag of Ireland.

Vaughan, 91, survived the Irish Easter Rebellion of 1916. His brother John and 33 other men died. They were remembered yesterday by the hoisting of the Irish flag at Boston's City Hall.

"I'm pleased that this was done," said Vaughan, who wore two faded medals on his chest. "I'm sorry that it wasn't done a while back, that more of my buddies weren't here.

"Too many people don't remember," he said. "They've left it to us old-timers and we're dying out."

The rebellion was begun outside the General Post Office in Dublin on the Monday after Easter, 1916. It was crushed within a week by British troops.

"Thus began modern Ireland," said Irish General Consul Liam Canniffe. "We owe a lasting debt to the memory of those 1916 men and women. Their sacrifice led to change."

Canniffe, Vaughan and Boston Mayor Raymond Flynn helped raise the Irish flag over City Hall Plaza, where it was to fly beside the city and U.S. flags for the next week.

RESIDENTIAL EDUCATION/HOUSING SERVICES

IMPORTANT ROOM CHOOSING INFORMATION

SPECIAL INTEREST HOUSING COMMUNITIES

Do you see yourself here?

Special interest housing communities have been created by students and staff to enrich your on-campus living experience through cultural, educational and social activities. They are an effective way for students to meet people who share certain common interests and concerns. Many special interest programs, or communities, offer courses in the residence hall lounge, or at a nearby classroom, and all offer the possibility of close relationships, and shared activities.

If you elect to live in a special interest community, you of course retain all your rights and opportunities to participate in all-hall and all-campus activities and program.

Interested in applying?

Important! Filling out a specially stamped Housing Preference Form requesting the specific program is essential. The Housing Preference Form (HPF) is made available at information meetings. If you miss the information meeting, pick up your specially stamped HPF at the Housing Assignment Office, 235 Whitmore Administration Building (545-2100), during Room Choosing - April 17-26.

Curious? Want more information?

Come to a scheduled information session, contact the Cluster Office where the community that interests you is located, or call Sally Majewski, Student Development Coordinator, 545-0422.

Health & Fitness Programs

Two programs, located in John Adams and Dwight House, provide for students interested in health, fitness, nutrition and/or 'wellness' to live and work together in settings which promote these common goals as a means toward healthy lifestyles.
JQA, Southwest Area, 545-1927.
Dwight House, Northeast, 545-0888.
Thurs., April 4 8:00 p.m. 19th floor JA
Tues., April 12 7:00 p.m. Dwight Rec Room

Butterfield Dining Community

At Butterfield, mealtimes offer a unique opportunity for residents to get to know the approximately 130 other residents of this hall. That's because the hall is the only residence on campus to operate its own kitchen and dining room. With the exception of the chef, this dining arrangement is entirely student managed and staffed.
Butterfield, Central Area, 545-4209.
Thurs., April 11 7:00 p.m. Main Lounge

International Program

Through living in a hall with other students from around the world, the Program promotes and encourages American-International student relationships. Participants are required to take a one credit colloquium on cultures. Thatcher House will provide housing from September through May including Thanksgiving, Intersession and Spring Break.
Thatcher House, Northeast Area, 545-2034.
Thurs., April 4 6:30 p.m. Thatcher Lounge

Wellness Program

The Baker/Chadbourne/Greenough Wellness Program corridor is an alcohol and drug free living option. Its purpose is to provide students who have made the choice not to use alcohol or other mood altering substances (for any reason, including light or occasional use), a supportive place to live. Students can also live off the corridor and be part of the Wellness Program which includes support groups and student organized social and educational activities.
Greenough House, Central Area,545-4215
Tues., April 2 7 p.m. Greenough Lounge 1st floor

L.I.F.E. (Leadership Is A FUNdamental Experience)

The goal of the L.I.F.E. Program is to guide students toward successful leadership, and the consideration of leadership, in a variety of contexts: the classroom, the residence hall, and the campus community. Participation in a one credit colloquium is required.
Coolidge, Southwest, 545-0368.
Wed., April 3 6:00 p.m. 5th floor Coolidge.

Progressive Education Project (PEP)

The Progressive Education Project (PEP), relies on active interaction between students to extend their own educational priorities into their residential lives. PEP provides a supportive environment attuned to the needs of students partaking in alternative educational plans (IDIC, Inquiry Program, STPEC, etc.) as well as others interested in progressive education. Weekly discussions, lectures and workshops will be planned by PEP students.
Cashin House, Sylvan Area, 545-0621.
Mon., April 8 7 p.m. Cashin Lounge

Social Diversity Program

The Social Diversity Program provides a safe but challenging living environment to educationally explore issues of diversity (e.g.: racism, sexism, gay-lesbian/bisexual oppression, disability oppression, anti-semitism, etc.). Programming events and activities occur throughout the semester. Students can choose to enroll in EDUC 290A: Social Diversity in Education which is offered in Brett and fulfills a Gen Ed requirement.
Brett House, Central Area, 545-4218.
Mon., April 1 7:00 p.m. Brett 4th lounge

Study-Intensive Communities

Located in John Quincy Adams and Brooks House, both of these communities provide a noise free (24 hour quiet) living environment, and an optimal atmosphere -- social as well as academic -- to enhance serious achievement while at the University.
CASLE: Commitment of Academic Success Living Environment,
John Quincy Adams Tower, Southwest, 545-3510
Study Intensive Community, Brooks House, Central Area, 545-4218.
Wed., April 3 8:30 p.m. JQA 22nd floor lounge
Wed., April 10 7:00 p.m. Brooks 4th floor lounge

Suite Group Housing

This living option is designed to assist students who wish to live in close proximity to friends and associates who share similar interests. In the suites of the Sylvan residential area, students, in groups of 4 to 8, register with the Housing Assignments Office prior to the start of Room Choosing.
For more information, contact the Housing Assignment Office, 235 Whitmore Building, 545-2100.

The Michele Cocuzzo Human Kindness Project: Helping Others Through Service

What does it mean to help others through service? In Lewis House this community explores and involves students in that idea. Residents participate in volunteer projects in the Amherst area, and promote the spirit of human kindness through sponsorship of films, programs, and discussions in the residence halls. Participation in a three credit seminar is required.
Northeast Area, 545-2034.
Wed., April 3 8:30 p.m. 117 Lewis

Multicultural Living Communities

The goal of these two programs, which are communities of ethnically integrated floors, is to address social, academic, and cultural issues and needs of students of color while they attend a predominantly white university. At ALANA emphasis is placed on fostering skills which lead to excellence academically, socially, and eventually professionally. The NUANCE Program emphasizes leadership and involvement in hall programs and activities.
ALANA, Grayson/Field, Orchard Hill, 545-4205
NUANCE, Gorman, Central Area, 545-2745
ALANA: April 3 7:00 p.m. Field Lounge
NUANCE: To Be Announced, call 545-2745

French, German, Japanese & Spanish Language Suites

This living/learning credited experience in Brown House provides an opportunity to speak a foreign language and learn the culture. Two credit required course meets weekly in the suite. Students at all levels of language skill are encouraged to participate. Sponsored by Residential Academic Programs.
Brown House/Sylvan 545-0737; 545-2882.
Thurs., April 4 7:30 p.m. Brown House lounge.

The Worldwatch Program

This living option, designed by students, provides residents the opportunity to explore current environmental issues on both a global and local level. There are three main components to the Worldwatch Project -- community service, community education, and an academic course. Participation in a one credit colloquium is offered.
Webster House, Orchard Hill Area, 545-4208
Thurs., April 4 9 p.m. Webster main lounge.

Non-Traditional Age Programs

There are three places in the residence hall system which provide older students the opportunity to live and study with other undergraduates who are 23 and over, in a quieter, more mature environment. Each program has its own unique aspects dependent on the needs of those living in that particular residence hall community. The programs vary in size and residential locations.
McNamara House, Sylvan Area, 545-4255

EDITORIAL/OPINION

The opinions on this page are those of the individual writer or cartoonist and do not necessarily reflect the views of the Collegian or the University unless otherwise noted.

George Bush is our shepard and we his flock of sheep

1992 is ever creeping near, and the approaching presidential election is gearing down to be little more than a formality. The electorate loves President Bush, and unnaturally massive numbers support his every move. There is talk of erecting temples and shrines in his honor. Not even Thomas Jefferson could beat him now, let alone Jack Kennedy.

George Herbert Walker Bush — the guiltiest man in American politics today — will steal the show come election day. Flags will flap in the breeze as the band wails Hail To The Chief. The only person left confused by the whole thing will be Dan Quayle who will be out of a job, replaced by weapons expert Colin Powell.

True lovers of liberty and justice will shudder ... and shit in their pants. Once again we will bear witness to the ignorance and apathy which paralyzes the American electorate, and ensures our own doom in the process.

Along with his boys (North, Poindexter, et al), George Bush is wanted by the Costa Rican Democratic Republic for multiple counts of drug dealing and illegal weapons handling. And it was Bush's CIA that put Noriega on the US payroll, in a position Noriega used to further a cocaine and money laundering business. As the brain trust for the Contra arms felony, George Bush was responsible for the death of over 260 U.S. Marines when Iran bombed a US base in Lebanon with an American-made warhead; one weapon of many sold to Iran for money which Bush and then-President Reagan used to finance an illegal war in Central America.

The Bushman was also responsible for ordering the illegal invasion of Panama. Under General Bush's command, it was the United States that broke Geneva Convention rules by using unnaturally high fire power in a residential neighborhood of downtown Panama City.

Christopher Mattera

All these criminal acts of self indulgence fall into shadow when compared with Bush's latest atrocity, waging war in the Middle East. With over one hundred thousand Iraqis dead, most of whom were civilians, this time should be one of national mourning and reflection. Instead, President Bush calls for celebration and speaks of Americans everywhere as "heroes." And at a billion dollars a day, Bush has bankrupted this nation.

Ethnocentric and immoral foreign policy, coupled with economic ineptitude and downright self-righteous zeal is sure to be a losing combination in a healthy democracy...but in this country the electorate is ill, and the case seems to be terminal.

George Bush has a brilliant political mind. The truth is, you can almost hear the gears in his head grinding away when he is asked a difficult question. Just like a corrupt political computer, his brain is programmed to churn out the right answer in most situations. Not morally right ... just Right. What ever answer will further his cause, and semantics be damned. Even in the infancy of career in public service Bush had cultivated the proper mindset for his business ... and the lessons he later learned from Ronald Reagan — in the fine art of image maintenance and holding an audience — promoted Bush to "Super Politician" status. Never mind that he is a greedy little bastard with a heart full of hate. Never mind his personal agenda of fascism guaranteed to whip this country back well into the Dark Ages.

President Reagan, Bush's latter day mentor and spiritual guru, is another brilliantly clear example of the electorate's dulled senses at the polls. He won landslide victories and enjoyed enormous popularity despite his disregard for all that the flag stood for ... yet it was in those same Stars and Stripes in which Dutch wrapped himself up, and proclaimed himself and his people Holy. President bar-none, Reagan sank America into economic disaster. He ignored the Constitution, increased the nation's oil dependence, decreased conservation efforts started by Jimmy Carter, and pulled the financing of vital environmental action.

Also, Mr. Reagan financed death squads in El Salvador, Nicaragua, and Guatemala, hailed corporate and governmental criminals as heroes, invaded and lied about invading Grenada, cracked jokes about nuking Moscow, remained oblivious to the rip-off at Housing and Urban Development, traded weapons for hostages, ignored the savings and loan scandal, and oversaw an explosion of poverty and homelessness and violence on this nation's streets. Yet Ronald Reagan rode off into the sunset a rich and comfortable man, surrounded by a halo of denial.

The fact that the grounds for impeachment and imprisonment were overlooked is clearly the electorate's failing. In both instances these two cheap-jack punks gave us ample evidence, and plenty of time. But they are heroes now. They are white men who ran totally amok because they could, because nobody, or at least not enough of us, bothered to take the time to get outraged. The nation sat stoned on the carefully constructed images and PR bullshit of these two cowboys. Rather, than shake off the stupor of indifference and ignorance, we are the electorate that gives the nod to the highest approval rating of any American President in the last century. When George Bush wins reelection to four more years of Gestapo-ism, we all might as well give up on this country until the year 3000 ... if he doesn't blow up the planet by then.

Don't fool youself: No talks with the PLO

This letter is in response to Hussein Ibish's article ("Palestine Power Play: Talk to the PLO," Mar. 26)

I hope you understand that during the Gulf Crisis, without moving a soldier or firing a shot, Israel witnessed humiliation from her two worst enemies, Iraq and the Palestine Liberation Organization. I am writing this letter so you will understand why Israel will not bow to anybody, including her ally the United States.

If you think that articles can liberate Palestine then start writing about the liberation of your own country, Lebanon, which is under occupation by Syria, and leave the issues of Palestinians and Israelis to themselves.

You forgot to mention in your articles from last semester and this semester that Israel is not to be blamed for the Palestinian situation. Palestinians could have had a state larger than Israel if they had only accepted the 1947 United Nations partition plan. Instead they opted for a war which they couldn't win. Having reached out for everything, they were left with nothing. Hussein Ibish, don't be blind to the reality of history.

I doubt if there is a leader in history who has brought so many calamities upon his unfortunate people as Yassar Arafat.

Israel cannot deal with Arafat, the leader of the PLO, because he has not really led, but has followed the whims and caprices of his people. Instead of confronting them with reality, he has fostered their capacity for illusions.

The Palestinians are drunk on words. When Saddam Hussein threatened to destroy half of Israel, they already saw Tel Aviv in flames. When he invaded Kuwait and defied successive UN resolutions they cheered him to the echo, and it was Arafat who led the cheers.

Ibish, in politics you look for good friends, not tyrants like Saddam Hussein, so next time tell us about the Kurds who have been gassed. Since you are Phoeno-Arab, what are your feelings towards the Kurdish cause? Has Israel gassed the Palestinians?

Let me tell you that few politicians are prepared to let principle stand in the way of expediency, but here was a happy instance where principle and self-interest could have been combined. If the PLO had sided with the UN, the Palestinians would not only have allied themselves with legality, but with their own most consistent friends, Kuwait and Saudi Arabia.

I would suggest that the Palestinians in the territories negotiate peace with Israel instead of Arafat, since they have lost an opportunity to back a loser. Where they could have been on the side of the victors, they are on the side of the vanquished. Palestinians must come in touch with reality. If they do, Israel is willing to talk peace. Land is not negotiable.

Whitmore here to help or hinder?

I have a dispute with Whitmore. I'm sure over the course of your college career you've had or will have a dispute with the place whose nickname — Whitless — is an accurate description. My dispute involves the Housing Assignment Office and its so-called Variable Rate System. I'm living on campus in a double-single, an unfortunate oxymoron in this case.

Joseph Montagna

It just so happens that my roommate last semester chose to move out (thank God) leaving me alone. I didn't ask for this arrangen ent but I didn't complain about it. What I am complaining about is the Housing Assignment Office forcing me to pay a $150 surcharge because my former rommate disappeared and the administration was unable to reassign another student to my room. It's either that or move out. That's the message I received in a notice that implied coughing up the extra $150 was the best option.

I don't like it. I don't think that it's a reasonable policy when students must pay for a convenience they didn't request. I'm sure many would agree with me, especially those who are victims of the VRS. It's either pay of move with the VRS system -- unfair but legal. Even the sound of that abbreviation spells doom for students. Well, what if you can't afford to pay yet another fee and moving halfway through a semester is nothing less than a major inconvenience?

I hate to whimper, but this brings up once again the treatment of students by the administration. In my nearly four years at UMass I haven't heard one good word about Whitmore(less). In fact, I've heard some awful things about it.

The lines, the fees the angry grimaces from students and employers, just the whole condescending attitude toward students makes traveling up that ramp to the building unpleasant to say the least. I don't know, maybe the higher-ups there are trying hard, and I realize the difficulty of administrating a school this size, but all I know is that dealing with Whitmore has been one of the worst things for me personally and probably for most of us students here.

The last few generations of college students in this country have sometimes felt oppressed by an authoritarian, factory-style university system that's only interested in churning out students and making money.

Often student have tried to make some changes by working together. Some of that spirit is still with students today and the VRS policy is an example why. This could bring in a larger questioning of what the higher education system in this country is really about and how students are viewed by it. But that's another story.

I do realize that there are other more important things to complain about in the world. I also know that we as students are fortunate to be here at this still fine university. Don't get me wrong, I still think UMass is a great school. But, as with everything, there are drawbacks here; at UMass the biggest drawback is Whitmore.

run there. For Greg Anthony, Anderson Hunt, Larry Johnson and Stacey Augmon: Good luck men, you'll have visions of dollar signs in your heads at night until the NBA draft. I hope none of you have to take pay cuts, though.

No NCAA recap is complete without a mention of arachnophobia, which explained the Syracuse first round choke to Richmond. The Spiders get my nomination for the first annual 'Put garbage in its place' award. Please, Billy Owens, declare hardship and enter the draft so we can all remember how you left a loser.

For all you Temple haters, bear with me, cuz the Owls' showing in the NCAAs put a good light on the Atlantic 10. Remember how they didn't win the regular season title or the post-season tourney either, and yet they get to the final eight? Congrats to Mark Macon! Good things await you after graduation. You're a class act in my column. Just don't freakin' cross the Mass. state line.

Maybe you're wondering who I like in tonight's game, and maybe you don't give a crap. Well at any rate, here goes nothing. Kansas started slow, almost losing to Pitt, but kicked butt against Indiana, Arkansas and North Carolina. Alonzo Jamison could become the big star against Duke tonight. Ya gotta love Adonis Jordan just for his name.

On the other hand, there's the giant killers — Duke — with Christian Laettner and Bobby Hurley. Hurley's been effective when he hasn't been crying for his bottle. Laettner should be a lock on this year's all-tournament team. Don't just pencil in the Blue Devils as champs cuz they beat UNLV.

I see a game of defense, but if Duke can use their height advantage with Laettner, they can win. These teams are pretty evenly matched, believe it or not. Look for Kansas to hang very tough and beat the spread, but lose as the Blue Devils become champs and non-chokers. In a year when Dean Smith gets thrown out of a Final Four game and UNLV loses, anything can happen.

41 OUT OF 50 STATES HAVE OPTIONAL RETIREMENT PLANS.

WHY NOT MASSACHUSETTS?

Optional Retirement Plans (ORPs) are an accepted part of American public higher education. Together they form a nationwide, portable pension system, allowing academic mobility — which enriches experiences, fosters the exchange of ideas and learning, and promotes the cultural and ethnic diversity of our institutions and their communities.

Massachusetts needs a portable pension system in order to compete with other states for high-quality faculty and administrators during the current financial crisis and in the future. A strong public university system is essential for Massachusetts' long-term economic health.

WHY NOT HAVE AN OPTIONAL RETIREMENT PLAN IN MASSACHUSETTS?

The proposed Optional Retirement Plan is carefully designed so that it will not increase pension costs for the Commonwealth of Massachusetts or its citizens. It will not have an adverse effect on the Massachusetts Retirement System, nor will it require additional administrative personnel.

TIAA-CREF is working with sponsors of legislation that would allow the Board of Regents to establish an Optional Retirement Plan in Massachusetts. In the last year alone, five states have implemented ORPs, and California is in the process of doing so now. Currently, ORP-type plans are offered in 41 out of 50 states. And TIAA-CREF is the only organization chosen in all 41 of those states.

TIAA-CREF: THE POPULAR CHOICE

TIAA-CREF is building a sound financial future for more than 1,000,000 people at over 4,500 institutions of higher education and research. And over 200,000 retirees are now enjoying the benefits of their TIAA-CREF annuities. People just like you. Here are a few good reasons why:

Expertise—TIAA and CREF are nonprofit organizations focused exclusively on the education and research community. We pioneered pensions for your profession and we have been leading the way ever since.

Full Investment Choices—Sound retirement investing requires both security and growth: security, so the resources are sure to be there when the time comes; and growth, so your retirement income will be sufficient for the kind of retirement you want. TIAA-CREF provides you with all of the investment choices you need—for growth, diversification and safety.

Performance—The CREF Stock Account outperformed the mutual fund industry averages for the last one-, five-, and ten-year periods. The CREF Money Market Account has shown excellent returns since its inception, outperforming the industry average since May of 1988.*

Security—Your future is protected by the largest retirement system in the world. We currently manage over $84 billion in pension assets. Because of its stability, sound investments, and overall financial strength, TIAA has received the highest possible ratings from all three of the industry's leading independent rating agencies: A+ (Superior) from A.M. Best Co., Aaa from Moody's, and AAA from Standard & Poor's.

The trouble with Jack

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Death and destruction accompanying the drug-gang movie, New Jack City has put the movie maker on the defensive.

Shootings and rioting arrived with the release of the Warner Brothers film, based on the life of Harlem Drug lord, Nickie Barnes. A man was killed in New York and disturbances erupted in Chicago, New Jersey, Nevada and Los Angeles.

Warner Brothers spokesman Robert Friedman said nationwide only one cinema pulled the movie.

"Ninety-nine percent of the American theaters have no problems whatsoever," he said. "Unfortunately, where youths get together, there are often problems."

New Jack City placed second in the weekend box office tally with an impressive $7 million plus in receipts on only 862 screens. But the film probably won't go into expanded release.

"Films like this have a limited market. It won't go any wider," said John Krier of Exhibitor Relations Co., which monitors motion picture performance.

The film stars Wesley Snipes as a flashy, ruthless crack dealer. Rap artist Ice-T, Judd Nelson and director Mario Van Peebles play policemen out to destroy his drug empire. The dealer is eventually brought to justice, but is not punished. Instead a citizen takes the law into his own hands.

Peebles insisted that the film doesn't incite violence and is in fact an anti-gang movie.

Surgery, Cop Shoot Cop, Unsane
Davis Student Center
Friday, March 29

God made distortion, and it was good.

That's what I thought to myself as I stood there in the Davis Student Center at Smith College Friday night privy to the pulverizing sounds of Unsane, Cop Shoot Cop and Surgery. It was a true orgy of noise, distortion and feedback.

Unsane was the first band up with an in-your-face approach that viciously attacked the senses with an immense wall of distortion. Their mosh-inducing rhythm section coupled with a guitarist that played way too fast and way too hard could have been easily accepted by any good thrash audience near you.

In fact, the guitarist played his instrument so hard that he broke a string twice, at one point leaving the rhythm section to show their wares. One can see why they are a highly-touted rhythm section on the lower East side of New York City. One can't help but think that these guys will make themselves known to households across the country in the near future. They deserve to.

What's alright for Goodfellas is not alright for Jack

By MARK ANDERSON
Collegian Correspondent

"I didn't like New Jack City because I thought it glamourized [gang violence] . . . I think Goodfellas deserves to win the Oscar for best picture." — film critic Gene Siskel on Late Night With David Letterman, Thursday, March 14.

I used to think Siskel had a clue. I'd expect this kind of colorized hypocrisy from an industry Yes-Boy like Rex Reed or Joel Siegel. But THIS from a man who hyped Roger and Me and Do the Right Thing last year when both went virtually unnoticed at the Oscars? I'm disappointed.

As some might be inclined to say, DON'T BELIEVE THE HYPE!

The recently-released Mario Van Peebles picture New Jack City begins with the dubious claim (courtesy of a crew straight outa Compton) "You are now about to witness the strength of street knowledge." Rather surprisingly, it delivers. Not always a pretty sight, but it delivers.

And it's a credit to the writers (Thomas Lee Wright and Barry Michael Cooper) and Mr. Van Peebles that this movie doesn't shortchange its subject by presenting us with another Beverly Hills Schlock. A few dopey Hollywood scenes notwithstanding, the reels contain hard-as-hell material that isn't about to compromise its gangsta lean for the It's-Okay-For-Italians-But-Not-Africans suckers like Siskel.

Overall, this picture is a fine piece of celluloid with some great performances by Wesley Snipes and rapper/social critic Ice-T. Having not seen Goodfellas, I can't comment on its worthiness for the industry's best picture award. I'm sure it was good too. The biggest downer about this whole incident on Letterman, though is that it reads like a weathermap.

(To borrow from the recent lecturer Kris Parker) Sleep Techniques like the above quote will keep the masses away from New Jack City and keep the Godfather sequels and look-alikes coming straight outa Hollywood. I hope I'm wrong. But I have a hunch that the messages (they are there) will scarcely make it out of the inner city environs they were filmed in.

It's a pity too, because like most of Ice-T's work, behind all the bragging, violence and gutterspeak, lies some of the strongest anti-drug and anti-gang messages around. Of course, the media will continue to focus on the packaging and disregard entirely the package contained therein.

And as for glamourizing the gangsta lifestyle, even disregarding the above hypocracies, (once again) DON'T BELIEVE THE MUH FUHN HYPE! Certainly, violence is all over the place and New Jack City more than earns its R-rating. (It's a wonder such a potentially controversial film wasn't slapped with an NC-17 albatross.) But this movie glamourizes gang violence like Jaws glamourized swimming.

So go see New Jack City. See it expecting to be affected by the graphic violence and snapshots of street-life. Then remember that was exactly the film's intent. And don't forget these frightening images the next time you hear your nightly news program tally "just another gang murder."

■ Surgery, Cop Shoot Cop and Unsane

Cop Shoot Cop's set was more of a premeditated assault on the crowd. Whereas Unsane had more free-form embellishments in their live performance, it seemed as if Cop Shoot Cop knew what they wanted to do to the crowd before they had even begun. The drummer's kit, consisting of a snare drum, pots and pans and something that looked like a very large cheese grater, gave their otherwise tight sound a urban immediacy.

It took the first four or five songs for Cop Shoot Cop to achieve the intensity worthy of the audience's attention. At this point, it was as if something just snapped and they suddenly spewed forth unto the crowd a variety of entrancing rhythms and mind-blowing samples.

Surgery was the last on the bill as well as being the most accessible group of the night. They had a straightforward indie-rock sound that seemed to please the crowd. The handful of people that were moshing about for Cop Shoot Cop and Unsane were joined by many others when Surgery played. There was no stage diving, however, as the half-foot platform used as a stage would not allow for that.

Surgery's set seemed to lack a certain intensity that was prevalent with Cop Shoot Cop's and Unsane's. Maybe it's because they seemed too practiced to hit the crowd with an spontaneous outburst of insanity, but admittedly some malaise during Surgery's set could be attributed to the lack of beer for as they went on, the concession stand ran out. Nevertheless, the privileged few who attended left the show pleasantly intoxicated by the overflow of distorted noise that so gracefully enveloped the Davis Center.

Angelo Moore of Fishbone crawls across the crowd in the Student Union Ballroom Wednesday night. It was quite a night indeed with Moore's indecent exposure and the crowd's exposure to some new tunes off of the group's anxiously-awaited album, which will be released in April on Columbia.

YOUR DAILY HOROSCOPE
By JEANE DIXON

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Pay attention to other people's good ideas. A joint investment opportunity may arise. Express your thoughts clearly to avoid misunderstandings. Postpone a shopping trip.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): A great day for finalizing business negotiations. Those who have taken positive steps will soon see their incomes rise. Any trips you plan now could be delayed. Stay close to home base.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Back off for a while and others will come to you. Do things that are in your best interest. Sign papers after conferring with lawyers. Surround yourself with familiar faces this evening.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Concentrate on getting joint financial affairs in order. Two heads are better than one when plooking for ways to reduce expenses, increase savings. Believe in yourself and success will swiftly follow!

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Simplifying your day-to-day schedule will reduce tension. Continue to develop the spiritual side of your personality. Those who have doubted you in the past will do a complete turnaround.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Draw on your experiences and you will stay on the right track in business. What you feel, what you can express – an to attentive audience. Look beyond appearances when you meet someone new.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): You benefit by doing something for a humanitarian cause. The public's response to your ideas will delight you. Anticipate possible setbacks and have alternatives in mind.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): New creative and emotional fulfillment are likely now. Share your newfound happiness with someone special. Lavish love on a child and watch the trust between you grow stronger.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Be receptive to new ideas and suggestions, even if some of them seem a bit risky. Only by considering all of your options can you be certain of making the right decision.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Your ability to adapt to unusual circumstances is heightened today. A love relationship reinforces your idealism. Mull over complicated policy matters before taking a public stand.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): A new friendship could bring many benefits. Working from behind the scenes gives you certain advantages. You will have greater success in romance if you quit wearing your heart on your sleeve.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Your career recieves a welcome boost, thanks to someone else's actions. Set a good example by getting the day off to an energetic start. Old loyalites could be tested.

quarter.

The defensive line up of tri-captain Rick Mullins, Corey Cronin and Gary Wood refrained St. John's attack to eight shots on goal in the third quarter. A John Salerno-Bolger combination was the only goal allowed by Ted Kellerman. Kellerman finished the game with 15 saves.

With five minutes remaining in the third, St. John's was called for its first penalty of the game. But UMass was unable to capitalize on any of the three man-ups allowed in the second half.

Millon again exploded to the net three minutes into the fourth, unassisted. Salerno answered unassisted with the ninth and final goal for St. John's at 9:39.

Millon netted his fifth and final goal for UMass soon after, followed by Guaglianone-McAleavey and McAleavey-Kushner combinations.

McAleavey is just seven points shy of breaking Jeff Spooner's ('77) career assists record of 141 points.

tributed to UMass' demise. URI's Ralph Cerato, the Rams' number eight hitter, led his team with three hits and two runs scored.

In the second game against the Rams, which will be finished today, Jim Telgheder fell into the same traps which Stone said are holding back the UMass pitching staff.

"We have to pitch more aggressively," Stone said. "Our pitchers have been throwing tentatively, throwing high and falling behind in the count. That leads to our defense playing tentatively as well."

UMass managed to jump back into the game and take the lead, sparked by Bright's second homer of the trip. And while Graziano was on the mound with two outs and none on in the seventh, a win looked imminent. But a walk and a home run later, it was a tie ballgame, and that's where the Rams and Minutemen will pick it up today.

Claffey throws no-hitter, softball takes own tournament

By THOMAS A. GEORGE
Collegian Correspondent

Collegian file photo

The softball team spanked Vermont 11-1, squeaked by Army 3-2 and silenced Maine 6-0, sweeping their Invitational Tournament this weekend at Totman Field.

Few things are as painful as catching a flaming softball with a cold hand, on a cold day, in a cold glove.

One of them is facing Darlene Claffey.

Claffey led the University of Massachusetts softball team to a clean sweep of the UMass Invitational Tournament against Maine, the United States Military Academy and Vermont.

The sophomore hurler earned a no-hitter in the team's home opener against Maine, driving the team to a 6-0 win. She put one runner on base and had six strikeouts in the outing. Her season pitching record stands at 6-3.

"It's nice to start that way, when you get home," she said.

"She did a great job," said head coach Elaine Sortino. "I can't even tell you how tough it is to pitch in that cold."

The young Bears field a crew of seven freshman and six sophomores on a squad of 18.

The UMass scoring effort was aided by senior Barbara Marean who hit a triple in two at bats. Sophomore Sherri Kuchinskas contributed a single and triple in three at bats. Junior Peggy Bush and senior Christine Collins each hit a single and a double, and sophomore Amy Cockley hit two singles.

Claffey again took the mound in the UMass-West Point contest, as junior Holly Aprile finished the 3-2 win. This moves Aprile to a 2-4 record this season.

On Saturday, UMass faced West Point for the first time ever, and shut them out of the ballgame until the bottom of the sixth inning.

Army connected four consecutive hits and at 2-1, Sortino made a change.

She pulled Claffey and brought then center-fielder Aprile to the mound, into a bases-loaded situation.

With two quick outs on infield hits, the hurler from Afton, N.Y., was given a little breathing space. Aprile looked as though she was out of the situation, but a routine grounder was mishandled at first, and a runner scored. A second runner was thrown out crossing the plate, ending the inning tied at 2.

At the top of the seventh, a lead-off double from senior Cherie DellAnno was called back. She batted out of order and created a team out.

DellAnno singled. Marean then hit a shallow fly to centerfield and as Army's shortstop and centerfielder collided, DellAnno crossed the plate to score the winning run.

"The Army team was about as tough and mentally aggressive team as we will see all year," Sortino said. "[The win] wasn't pretty, but we got it done."

Like UMass, the Vermont team had beaten both Army and Maine. Yet the two undefeated teams completed the most lopsided rout of the tournament.

Aprile remained on the mound for a 11-1 lambasting of Vermont.

UMass connected with 14 hits for 11 runs, with one error.

Aprile went 4 for 4 with a double, a triple and two RBIs. DellAnno had a double and a triple, with three RBIs. Rachael Lawson contributed three RBIs behind two hits and freshman Heather Dorsey banged out two hits with one RBI to cap the effort.

UMass plays a double header against Rhode Island at 3 p.m., Tuesday at Totman Field.

Duke's gain is bettors' loss

By MICHAEL MORRISSEY
Collegian Correspondent

A funny thing happened in college basketball this weekend: my Tar Heels lost! Oh, and in that anti-climatic second game, the Duke Blue Devils beat UNLV, proving this writer correct.

First things first: For all of you people foolish enough to risk it all on the Runnin' Rebels, I pity you. Granted, there were enough people jumping on the bandwagon to make anyone lose their sense of reality.

Commentary

However, in the future, make sure you look up in your sports history books the letters V (Villanova, baby, 78/from the field), C (Cincinnati Reds, see also Los Angeles Dodgers), and of course, D (Douglas, James 'Buster'). These will cure anyone of their gambling habit.

Next up, an All Points Bulletin for University of North Carolina senior forward Rick Fox. Where were you man, you pulled one of the biggest disappearing acts in NCAA history! Four for 22? Pass the rock to a non-choker, like Hubert Davis. You had a couple of chances to pull the Tar Heels ahead, and you did a New England (in your case, N. Carolina) Brickmaster imitation.

Anyway, Ricky my man, I bought you a one way ticket to Italy. I hear Spain is looking for an American player, too. Don't sweat it, we'll find something. There's no sense waiting for the NBA draft in June. The sooner you leave, the better. I hear Tar Heel fans are real forgiving after the first 10 years or so.

Next item: How in the world do the Blue Devils make it to the Final Four almost every year and, at the same time, you've got these slime bucket coaches with investigations pending complaining about 'The System,' Prop. 48, the unfairness of it all? If it seems like I'm making Mike Krzyzewski and his program holier-than-thou, it's because they are. Hey Tark, hey Jimmy Boeheim, look up 'student-athelete' for me!

I've got to give credit where credit is due, and UNLV certainly had a hell of a long

Lax shames Redmen, 17-9

By ADRIEN MATT
Collegian Staff

JAMAICA, N.Y. — Mark Millon and Kevin O'Connor racked up over 50 percent of the University of Massachusetts lacrosse team's goals against St. John's, enjoying a 17-9 victory.

The Gorillas (1-1) tucked away their first victory of the season against the 1-5 Redmen. St. John's endured losses against Delaware (22-7), Yale (13-8), Syracuse (24-5), Hofstra (13-12) and C.W. Post (15-8), their only win against Mt. St. Mary's (19-6).

Millon scored the first of UMass' goals three minutes into the game and continued to feed the net throughout the afternoon. He finished the game with five goals and no assists.

St. John's Andy Bolger retaliated almost one minute later unassisted. Redman Chris Johnston combined with Bolger two minutes later. UMass' tri-captain Rick Senatore answered unassisted, tying the score at 2.

O'Connor then won the faceoff and went straight to the net, a move that became his trademark for the remainder of the game.

The Redmen's Gerard Mule and Brian Bugge tied the score at three then put away two more goals to end the first quarter at 5-3.

O'Connor again won the faceoff and again went to the net five seconds into the second quarter. UMass staved off St. John's for more than five minutes while netting two more. A Hugh O'Callaghan-Jim Kushner combination followed a Kushner-Mario Guaglianone goal.

Bugge answered unassisted, after which no Redmen netted a goal for over seven minutes.

UMass put away five goals in that time, scored by tri-captain Jim McAleavey, Ed O'Callaghan (McAleavey assist), Mario Lopez, O'Connor and Millon (McAleavey assist).

Although Johnston and Bugge combined at 2:39, the Gorillas remained undaunted, exemplified by Millon's unassisted goal 30 seconds later.

The score stood at 12-7 to the half, St. John's capitalizing on only one of four man-up opportunities.

"I can't believe they haven't had a penalty yet," said UMass coach Ted Garber at the half. UMass had been called for eight penalties, while St. John's had none. Garber said the UMass team he saw in the second quarter looked like the team he saw during spring break.

Twenty-two seconds into the second half, O'Connor again drove straight to the net after winning the faceoff, but it would be the only UMass goal for the

UM drops 1, ties another

The University of Massachusetts baseball team has some unfinished business to take care of.

That's why by the time you pick up this paper, the Minutemen will be coming to bat in the top of the eighth inning in Kingston, R.I., against Rhode Island, with the score tied 7-7.

The occasion is the continuation of the second of four scheduled games against the Rams, who defeated UMass 7-5 in the opener.

The Minutemen (3-9-1) will then play two more seven-inning contests against the Rams in Atlantic-10 Conference play. Play gets underway at 11:30 a.m.

This weekend's action started with a 6-6 tie against Connecticut. The deadlock was called after nine innings due to darkness, in a game that UMass coach Mike Stone said slipped away.

"We got two quick outs in the last inning and gave it away," Stone explained. "We had a couple of errors in the late going that really cost us."

The game will be recorded as a tie.

UMass led the Huskies in the early going, thanks to a home run barrage. Mike Tobin and Steve Corradi both hit solo shots early on, while Brian Bright smacked a two-run homer.

The Huskies did most of their damage in the third, parlaying two hits and two walks into four runs. Sal Tinnerello and Sean Irey had two hits and two runs each to pace the Huskies.

With UMass up 6-5 in the ninth, Stone brought in Rob Graziano for starter Ron Villone, whose effort Stone characterized as 'strong.' But a crucial error in the ninth spoiled Graziano's save opportunity and left the two teams tied in the darkness.

Saturday against URI, UMass started off on the wrong foot, falling behind 4-0. Minuteman starting pitcher Scott Meaney went five and one-thirds innings in what Stone termed an 'uncharacteristic' performance for Meaney.

"It was not up to Scott's usual level," said Stone. "He was struggling, throwing strikes and throwing high."

The Rams benefitted from 10 hits and five UMass errors, which Stone said all con-

DAILY COLLEGIAN

TUNE IN!, TURN ON, FREAK OUT

The real reason you read the paper

It's your horoscope — because who wants to read the news?

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Stop worrying about your looks, no one really cares about that gigantic growth forming on the end of your nose. Be happy that you are good at being ugly. Spend some money on yourself – do some laundry. We're begging you.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): What is seen as painstaking caution by you is seen as neurosis by your friends. Oh, sorry, we mean those poor saps you pay to hang around you. Give them a raise. Go shopping – buy some clothes that were made after the 70s.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): You feel sweet and gentle today – but don't worry, that's only temporary. Start that biker commune you always dreamed about. Invite a Taurus to join you – we hear they pay well. Strong drugs help ward off depression.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): A terrific day for you and your partner to firm up. Please do it, it's a disgusting sight to see you two in shorts. Those of you without a partner, count your blessings. You'd only attract a Capricorn.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): You have a remarkable capacity to gather all the local gossip. Too bad it's so boring. Make life exciting – spread a rumor. You have that feeling of wanderlust – oops, we meant lust. Take a cold shower.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Cut down on expenses today. Stop calling those 900 numbers. Say 'hi' to someone special. Say 'hi' to someone you don't know. Smile and say 'hi' to everyone on the street. It'll make you friends. No, really, it will. Honest.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Entertain someone. Go to confession, and entertain a Priest. After all of the recent festivities, they need a good laugh anyway. Read something besides these horoscopses, they are a scam, anyway. Remember, Hemingway drank beer, too.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Do not reproduce. You are in line for an active night – check your bedsprings and apologize to your roommate. Lysol your home. Lysol your friends' homes. Take a bath – that's what's causing the smell in your home.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Relax. Skip a class. Don't do your homework today. Stay away from Taurus friends, they are short on cash this week. Hit the bars tonight. Maybe you'll get lucky. Or maybe you'll get hives.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): You want to please everyone today. Stop being such a jellyfish. Take up a new hobby. Bungee-jumping is supposed to be nice at this time of year. No matter what, keep smiling. You're good at it.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): You are feeling ambitious today. Be a backstabbing pud, you're good at it. Bring out the old saccharine grin, it'll get you places. Like jail. Avoid people with guns. They have reason to use them on you.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): It may be time to distance yourself from a stressful environment. Move to the backwoods in a shack. Then go fishing. Try your hand at spontaneous bullfighting. Bo knows bullfighting. I like your socks.

'We screwed up!' Library supposed to be horizonal

By DAVE LASSIE
Collegian Staff Mutt

The Tower Library, known to many onlookers at the University of Massachusetts as a giant, imposing, vertical monolith, was supposed to have been built horizontally, according to sources close to the project.

Built in 1983 for over $2 million, the 28-floor building has been constantly fighting waves of controversy regarding its construction. With this recent allegation, the Massachusetts Construction Corporation, the original contractors hired by the University to build the Tower, held a brief press conference yesterday at the University Press Office demanding the library was properly conceived and constructed.

"We built the Tower with exact specifications in mind. We always knew it was to be a vertical building. We knew that all along," said Steven Colt, MCC president.

When asked if he ever considered constructing the Tower on its side, Colt simply said, "Absolutely not."

But an MCC worker, Keith Loop, one of 540 workers who helped build the Tower, stated in a telephone interview with the Collegian that he always knew the Tower was intended to be a horizontal structure. He never raised this point for fear of losing his job.

"The Tower was a horizontal construction. I saw the original blueprints myself and knew it was true. MCC decided to build it vertically so they would make more money. When they did that, the project took longer and MCC took in a much greater profit," Loop said.

Loop also said that raising questions regarding the nature of the Tower project was dangerous.

"They [MCC] would get rid of you in a minute if you asked any questions. Bang, they would fire you. Many of the guys got the boot," Loop declared, "for arguing in favor of following the original construction plans."

Another MCC construction worker who worked on the original Tower construction project, Howard Fleggum, said that everyone knew the library was intended to be a horizontal job.

"It became kind of like an inside company joke. We all knew we were building the Tower the wrong way. But there was nothing we could really do and no one wanted to cause any trouble," Fleggum said.

The MCC has denied these allegations and has refused access to the original blueprints. At the press conference, Colt said the University administrators and Physical Plant officials who oversee all new construction projects, were well aware of the vertical nature of the Tower Library. Colt also laughed at

Places to go to come

By COMING UP SHORT
Collegian Gossip

The Campus Center/Student Union Complex, a place for students to congregate and study, has turned into a hot-spot for those interested in a little, as Bob Eubanks would say, "Whoopee."

Certain places have been rumored to be known for the more lusty and horny to "let it all hang out." One such place is a certain office on the eighth floor of the Campus Center, where the members of the Board of Governors do a lot more than "congregating" on Thursday nights.

"Girl, you know it's true," said a flushed but satisfied Head Corrigan, vice chairperson of the Board. "everybody thinks we're discriminating, but actually we're too busy fornicating."

The office of the somewhat-SGA treasurer Phalli Donut is the site of what the student governors have been calling the "Chess Club," but rumor has it there's more than "castling" and "capturing rooks," involved.

"My favorite part is when my playing companion kings me," said Jerkmeoff Turnmeon, another senator involved in the club.

The media, it should be said, is no exception from the trends of tawdry sex and heavy romance. In the crevices of the Campus Center Basement, in the offices of this very newspaper, there are deeds done which rumor has it "is hot on and off the presses."

An anonymous source said more than stories have come off on the Associated Press wire machine.

"Listen, the darkroom is where it really develops," said a frustrated and lonely staffer. "The editors' meetings are always closed-door, too. Why do they get to have all the fun?"

Some disgrutled, and perhaps left out, RSO members are visibly upset at what they deem to be "unprofessional behavior."

Said one of the "marshals of morality": "These people are disgusting. They disrupt the work atmosphere I've tried so hard to maintain. It spreads bad vibes and bad germs around the office. It's my job to break up this crap."

Also at the top of the list for those secretive and cliquey interludes are:

The Minuteman — which is about how long the action lasts, is known for its standard "Me-Tarzan You-Jane" line, which attracts all those women looking for a life of their own.

WMUA — who listens at 3 a.m. anyway? The DJs are up to a lot more than "spinning the hits."

People's Market — Where the produce and bagels are always fresh. The people of People's are into the "all-natural."

We Beg Your Pardon

The Collegian forgot to make any digs at Guy "I'm such a man, my parents named me one" Glodis (epiglotis) last week. Since we've done it so many times this semester anyways, Guy is not a member of the Republican Club. The Collegian regrets the error.

The Collegian incorrectly reported last week that President-Chancellor Duffey was arrested for punching out Student Trustee Angus McQuilken. He wanted to punch him in the mouth, he said yesterday, but refrained. There was no arrest.

University of Massachusetts Police said that the report of a horse of many colors in Friday's edition was incorrect. Police said the student who reported the incident was tripping.

The Collegian regrets that it did not make any veiled references to the intellect of the reader last week. To make up for his transgression, Editor in Chief Terry Starmer said in a press release, "The Collegian hopes you fuck off, you hopeless wonder."

SGA taken over again

'What a bunch of dorks,' SWAT leader sez

By A. NELL RETENTIVE
Collegian Staff Inmate

After citing "horrible betrayal and heartache at the hands of an uncaring administration," the Student Government Association implemented yet another drastic change yesterday when all of the senators resigned, and requested SWAT teams to oversee the student body.

"I can't believe it, " said Spew Master Dan Checkmeout. "We trusted these guys to clean up our mess, and what do they do? They leave. We need some kind of leadership."

"We figured we had enough material for our resumes, said Checkmeout, explaining his original move to hand over the SGA to the administration. "I mean really, why else do you think we got involved in this joke at all? I finally woke up and realized I needed a letter of recommendation, so me and five of my buddies decided to suck up to the Administration."

Checkmeout admitted that the recent defection of many of the key administrators he "sucked up" to put a damper on his plan, which is why the senate resorted to the SWAT team tactic. He also said he felt betrayed by the administrations actions.

"How was I supposed to know they were gonna bug out on us? Geez, you just can't trust anyone anymore, ya know that? So, we decided to call in the SWAT team. It's not like anyone would notice a big change. Hell, someone's gotta take the administrations place, and no one's gonna laugh at these boys. Oh, no. They have guns."

Checkmeout and his cohorts have been exalted by an unlikely group — the UMass conservatives.

I.M. Anazi, the leading UMass conservative, commended the senate's actions. "Finally," he said, "a conservative government. And these guys have guns. Why can't we have guns? No one would laugh at us then," he said, echoing Checkmeout's sentiments. "Every student should be allowed to bear arms — unless they are pinko commie hippies."

Anazi went on to express delight with the senate. "It's good to know that underneath it all, the senate is made up of good all American patriots," he said, taking a swig of Coors Lite.

When asked if the senate would try to retain any authority over the SWAT team, Anazi replied, "Hey, look dude. Me and my buddy Checkmeout are gonna head up to the TOC, drink some lightweight beer, and belch real loud — something we shoulda been doing all along. Time to celebrate with my man Dan!!!" President-Chancellor Joe Duffey said he was happy with the arrangement. "They are doing what I never had the guts to admit I wanted to do," he said. "Golly, I'll miss the show."

Les Stompem, the regional director of the SWAT team, had only this to say: "What a bunch of dorks. They should get a life."

President-Chancellor Joseph Duffey and Provost Richard O'Brien were arrested Friday in front of Whitless Administration Building on charges of disorderly conduct and assault and battery after a fight in which O'Brien received a broken nose.

According to witnesses, O'Brien and Duffey were on their way to a meeting to discuss the reorganization of higher education when O'Brien tried to park in Duffey's personal parking space outside the home of UMass bureaucracy.

Calling O'Brien a "slimy Brit' and accusing him of trying to take his job before he left, Duffey rammed O'Brien's car and then got out and punched him in the face.

O'Brien, who swung wildly but couldn't land a punch, sputtered through tears that Duffey was nothing but a "spoiled, self-serving West Virginian hick."

After posting bail with money from the Scholarship Fund, a pouting Duffey proclaimed he "was leaving and never coming back," and left for American University.

O'Brien, who could't find anyone to bail him out, spent the night in jail.

ARRESTS

● Angelo Moore, lead singer for the rock group Fishbone, was found not guilty of indecently exposing himself at last week's UMass concert. His defense lawyers argued that he really had nothing to expose and after a show-cause hearing, the judge agreed.

● Amy Henry and Dr. Abel, the University's specialist on STDs and their prevention, were arrested Friday at Health Services on charges of indecent harrassment with a profilactic.

Observers said that despite repeated warnings from patients and Health Services employees, Abel and Henry could not resist from "gleefully" shooting condoms at them like rubber bands.

Police said Henry and Abel were slippery and difficult to apprehend because they were wearing his personally designed, latex, nonoxynon 9-lubricated body condom which Abel hopes to sell to DuPont. Abel and Henry are being psychiatrically analyzed.

● Guy Glodis, Ed Corrigan, and Ted Maravelias were arrested, but who cares.

● Board of Governors Program Council coordinator Sean Linnane was arrested at last week's Comedy Night for allegedly embezzling $3,000 from the proceeds of Casino Night which he organized in support of the Brain Tumor Society. As police dragged Linnane away he shouted Schwarzenegger-like, "It's not a tumah!"

Duke to wed Whoopi

By JOHN BIRCH
KKK correspondent

On April 16, leading American redneck David Duke will be married to actress and comedianne Whoopi Goldberg. This somewhat pitiful event will occurr on the steps of the White House.

There will be an estimated number of about 300 people in attendance.

Some of those expected to attend are: Editor-in-Goon of the MiniMan Ted Marblehead, sellout Tassholeage Linda, and the New York city Saint Patrick's Day parade organizers.

When asked why she would marry such a poor excuse of a human being, Whoopi replyed "I wanted to know what being married to a bigot was like. Besides, I don't have anything to do that day I want to see how his fellow facist buddies react."

Duke was reported in saying, "I can not wait until we are married because I want Whoopi to tell me how terrible of a person I really am. Then I will not feel so bad when I act like the asshole that I really am.

Anyone who would like tickets to the wedding can reserve them by calling 1-800-TEACH THE BASTARD SOME MORALS WHOOPI.

"It was built on end by the MCC," Cluckis charged, "so Steven Colt made $500,000 more than he would have, had he followed the original plans we all came up with."

Cluckis said that he had his hands tied in the situation since he had no authority to alter the construction schedule of the MCC once the building of the Tower had begun in 1983.

"I could only watch in horror," Cluckis said.

All the leading Physical Plant officials in charge of the project at the time could not be reached for comment, except for Pell Goosty, who was head of building maintenance from 1980-1984, when he retired for unknown reasons.

Goosty said, "I don't know anything."

charges that original construction plans were ignored so MCC would rake in more money.

"Everyone knew it was to be built straight up in the the air. We had the approval of all important officials and it was the best way to build the Tower on the campus. We all agreed that this method [vertical construction] was the best," Colt said.

He also demanded that there was no foul play in the construction of the library. Colt said "we knew exactly what we were doing. And so did everyone else."

The UMass official in charge of construction at the time the Tower was built was Paul Cluckis. He admitted that the library was built on its side in order to be more efficient, cheaper to maintain, and more aesthetically pleasing.

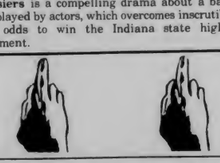
Collegian Staff Puritan
and SCOTT WEISS
Who We've Never Heard of Either

Hoosiers is a compelling drama about a basketball team, played by actors, which overcomes inscrutiblyistical-tional odds to win the Indiana state high school tournament.



O'BRIENNE: I found this movie to be very entertaining and realistic, especially the portrayal of the cheerleaders. Their cheers were enthusiastic and loud, and their costumes were very appropriate. This gave me a feeling about the movie that I can say it was something that I enjoyed as a movie feeling that I liked it very much overall.

WEISS: I liked the movie very much too. It had many scenes, which, in a row all together, produced the overall effect of being a movie very effectively. I especially "liked" the scene at the "end" when the Hickory High School "team" won the basketball "game" on a last-second "shot."

O'BRIENNE: I disagree. Just because that shot gave Hickory High School more points than the other team doesn't mean it "won" the game. There were lots of things in the movie that helped the team win, including the cheerleaders.

WEISS: That is my point exactly! There were lots of things in the movie, which I already said is made of lots of different things all put together into one big thing, which is a movie that I thought was very effective and accurate.

O'BRIENNE: I must admit, there were times in this movie when you had to say that the audience thought this movie was very enjoyable and effective and realistic. The violence was a little bit too much in some scenes, however. When the coach got mad at his team and slammed the locker room door, I thought that was unnecessary. And I think I didn't like it when I sat in the theater and I saw in the movie I am talking about one of the players take off his shirt. That was unnecessary too. But other than the unnecessary violence and people taking their shirts off, I think I believe I'd say this movie is definitely worth seeing. Thumbs up.

WEISS: I think I already said I disagree and that's my point exactly! The player took off his shirt because that's what the director of this effective and realistic movie told him to do, and I don't think it was the actor's fault inparticularlessly.

O'BRIENNE: Stop agreeing or disagreeing with everything I say. It's obnoxious.

WEISS: Then stop saying things that I either agree or disagree with. And take your hand off my knee.

O'BRIENNE: I disagree. I think it is the actor's fault that he took his shirt off. And if you don't like it you can go stick your thumbs up your . . . .

Um, next week, Meredith and Scott will review Kramer vs. Kramer.

Student's face freezes

By SPAMELA SWILLHED
Collegian Staff Mutant

A University of Massachusetts student didn't heed his mother's warning and got a face full of trouble yesterday.

Egor Scowl's face froze when he contorted his face into a grotesque frown. Scowl's mouth is pulled down to the right side of his face, and his eyes are permanently crossed.

"I warned him, but he wouldn't listen to me," said his mother Lotta Scowl. "I said to him at least a hundred times, 'Egor, if you make that face, it'll freeze like that.' And now it has. But I suppose Mr. Big College Man knows more than his own mother."

Dr. Ima Quack, resident plastic surgeon at Cooley-Dickinson Hospital in Northampton, said Scowl's face may never relax. "His muscles just froze. They may never go back into place again, I'm afraid. Because of the way his mouth is set, he may never talk properly again."

Quack went on to say that it was important to heed the advice to never make faces. "It's the hidden problem in America," he said. "So many kids today just won't listen, thinking it's a mere scare tactic, and not a genuine, heartfelt warning. At least 500 kids a year have permanently frozen faces."

Egor Scowl, ignoring his doctor's advice that it would be useless to speak, expressed some dismay and irritation at the turn of events. "AAggghhrg. Auuuuucht. Ra hed ot ooo ooo it ut ahh i i aaaay."

Amidst the chimes of "I told you so" from his mother, Scowl grudgingly wrote his comments down.

"Ma had told me not to do it, but I did it anyway. This is gonna kill any chance I have of ever becoming Mr. Universe."

"This is a damn inconvenience," he continued. "How am I supposed to drink or eat? And shaving! How am I gonna shave? The only bright spot to that is that I may be able to hide my face with my beard."

Quack said that Scowl will be kept under observation at Cooley-Dickinson.

"For God's sake, will you put on some clean underwear this time?" his mother said, as she left.

Students come to 'Celibate Pride' rally

By SEXUAL Collegian Staff Prude

Over 5,000 students, some screaming, some doing the lambada, others ripping off their clothes, came out in droves to the Student Union steps to protest Ted "Repent now ... please?" Maravelias' latest rally, the "Celibate Pride" Rally.

"You know, there wouldn't be such a thing as AIDS, pregnancy or abortion if we just stopped having sex," Maravelias said, his voice barely audible over the shouts of the counterprotestors, known as Sexy Nation. "Why do you all have to be so promiscuous?"

Maravelias was the only student speaking at the rally. In contrast, many of his conservative colleagues, including Governors Bill Hewitt, Guy Glodis and BOG Vice Chairman Ed Corrigan, were counterprotesting, and Glodis was seen doing the lambada with SAO Director Rene Carew, whom he is scheduled to marry this week.

Hewitt, who was seen wearing a sticker saying "Hot and Sexy," said, "Ted's gone too far this time. It's one thing to condemn homosexuality, but to condemn sexuality as a whole —that's ludicrous."

Corrigan said, "Ted has no right to tell me what to do with my life. I'm going to have sex whenever the hell I please. He'snot my mother, for crying out loud." He was seen wearing a pin that said "Straight and Sexy."

Sexy Nation was started by members of Queer Nation and the Republican Club as a response to Maravelias' repeated calls for campus-wide chastity. As Glen Caroline, president of the Republican Club and co-founder of the group with former LBGA Gov. Laura Silver, "gays, lesbians, bisexuals and straights all agree that we just want to have sex. It's so much more fun than going to conservative meetings or even drinking. This is how we survive, you know."

Another speaker at the rally, Sister John Francis of the Cross from the Order of Sisters of Perpetual Chastity, said that sex is wrong because it takes people away from God.

"You young people should dedicate your lives to serving God, not to searching for pleasures of the flesh," she said, noting that sex and pregnancies have kept otherwise talented men and women from becoming priests and nuns. She was met with shouts such as "Get a life, Sister," and "Get some real clothes."

Maravelias said, "Don't worry, Sister, they're just jealous because we're going to heaven for our sacrifices, while those heathen are going straight to hell." He was hit with a flurry of pocket-sized Gideon's Bibles.

Silver, who was dancing with various staff members of the Minuteman, said she was glad to see such a high turnout. "It's great to see that people — even Ted's girlfriend — are tired of Ted's garbage," she said.

There was some pushing when Maravelias spotted his girlfriend in the crowd and tried to drag her to his side of the steps. "Leave her alone, you fascist!" said Trustee Angus McQuilken, wearing a "Sexy" sticker and dancing in the crowd with former Senate Speaker Dan Chesnicka.

Education Committee to explore merger plan

By TAMIR LIPTON
Collegian Staff

Proposed legislation that would merge the state's three public universities into one should be completed by the end of this week, according to John Brazil, president of Southeastern Massachusetts University.

Once completed, the proposal will be forwarded to the Legislature's Joint Committee on Education, where it will be discussed sometime in the future.

The proposal would combine the University of Lowell and Southeastern Massachusetts University with UMass' three campuses, n Amherst, Worcester and Boston. In addition, the plan redefines the roles of the Board of Regents and the Board of Trustees.

If passed by the Legislature, it would probably become effective by the end of this fiscal year, Brazil said.

The plan to merge the five schools as one stems from a commission created three years ago by David Saxon, former president of the University of California.

"We are using most of the provisions of the Saxon plan, but it is being modified," Brazil said.

University spokesperson Karin Sherbin said, "The proposal has not been finalized. It is being revised continuously. It comes from the Saxon plan, but only in concept and nothing is definite."

President-Chancellor Duffey could not be reached for comment yesterday.

A Statehouse spokesperson said the Joint Committee on Education would be discussing the proposal to merge the five campuses today.

However, a member of the Committee on Education, who asked not to be quoted, said she was unaware of any such meeting. She further said she did not know what the exact proposal was.

The committee will also consider Governor Weld's proposal to replace the Board of Regents with an education secretary, who would assume the Regents' role of overseeing public higher education.

However, Weld's proposal goes against the Saxon Commission's suggestion that the Board of Regents' role be a very important one. Weld's proposal would abolish the Board entirely.

The Saxon Commission states that, "The Board of Regents of Higher Education should retain all coordinating authority for the system of public higher education. . .In addition, the Regents should assume new responsibilities in the area of formula-based budgeting for the public institutions."

"By coming together with one Board [of Regents], we can maximize our resources and not duplicate them," Brazil said.

This does not mean that academic programs would necessarily be cut just because they are offered on the other campuses, according to Brazil.

Trustees from both Lowell and SMU voted to support the merger last week.

"Collectively we are more formidable politically than if we acted as one," Brazil said.

Weld's proposed budget of $471 million for higher education in fiscal year 1992 falls short of the 1988 budget which was approximately $750 million, according to a report in the Daily Hampshire Gazette.

Weld's budget examined

Officials say budget only touches on downsizing state government

By EVE EPSTEIN
Associated Press Writer

BOSTON — Gov. William F. Weld's 1992 budget comes up for debate soon, but administration officials acknowledge it only begins to address the governor's promise to downsize state government.

"One of the frustrations of the whole process is that a lot of things that the governor wants to accomplish cannot be accomplished until the state is on sounder financial footing," said Dominic Slowey, a spokesman for the secretary of administration and finance.

Weld submitted an 18-month plan to trim $2.7 billion in late January, but the plan was designed to address the short-term need for cuts to erase the deficit and convince Wall Street the state is on the road to fiscal recovery.

The 18-month plan shifted some government agency functions — moving the Department of Corrections to Public Safety, for example. It also called for some one-time cost saving measures, like state worker furloughs to save money in fiscal 1991.

But the governor's proposal did not eliminate whole programs or agencies on a large scale. That's because the new administration has been busy trying to handle more immediate problems.

"When you're in such a crisis atmosphere, it's difficult to get a sense as to the direction that you want to move the state," Slowey said.

Eventually, the administration will begin to look at shifting some functions to the private sector and eliminating other programs altogether. Those are the kinds of cuts Weld talked about during the campaign.

"You would hope that by 1993, the economic situation is turned around and that it gives you some breathing room to actually sit back and think, and think in terms of perspective of what you want state government to look like when you leave," Slowey said.

For now, the administration is busy running numbers — trying to figure out just how much it costs to run government under the current system, and how much cuts and restructuring would save.

"I think that in order to define what you want government to do, you just need more time," Slowey said. "You also need to have the freedom to think about what things you want government to do rather than trying to stop a hemorrhage."

People who are already fighting cuts say they have little faith the governor can make substantial changes without hurting the poor, the elderly, the mentally retarded and others who rely on government services.

Deborah Weinstein, executive director of the Human Services Coalition, said the term "restructuring" has become a buzzword for cuts that harm the needy.

"I'm getting really sick of restructuring as a word," Weinstein said. "During the campaign, that was a way of saying, 'I'm cutting one person's area but not yours.'"

Weinstein said she is willing to look at proposals for saving money, but doubts they can be achieved without reducing services.

Slowey said he doesn't know what programs face deeper cuts, reorganization or outright elimination in the future. But he said more downsizing is sure to come.

SGA leaders face threats, harassment

By MARC ELLIOTT
Collegian Staff

Frustration concerning the restructuring of the Student Government Association reached an all time high yesterday when SGA President Natasha Diephuis reported to University Police that a can of flammable liquid with a note telling her to "draw her own conclusions" was found in her mailbox in the SGA office.

Governmental Affairs Chairman Alan Van Tassel later admitted to placing the can of Trichloro-ethane in Deiphuis' mailbox as part of a practical joke. Diephuis decided not to press charges.

Student Trustee Angus McQuilken found the can yesterday morning with a note attached that read "Draw your own conclusions."

News Analysis

The Trichloro-ethane, a highly flammable solvent used for cleaning typewriter parts, was supposedly meant to represent lighter fluid, the substance used by Gregory Levy to burn himself on the Amherst Common five weeks ago.

"I think it's really sick," said Diephuis after being shown the note and 'lighter fluid.' "I know that some people think it was a really silly thing to do on the town common, but I took it really seriously."

Van Tassel said that the note and "lighter fluid" was not an attempt to torment Diephuis.

"I was just teasing her and — my God — I did not mean to emotionally torment Natasha," Van Tassel said.

Van Tassel went on to say that he has been trying to get in touch with Diephuis so that he can apologize.

"I'm not going to pretend that it wasn't pretty tacky because it was," he said.

Diephuis said that she thought she was being harass-

Jewish students celebrate 'journey' of Passover

By RORY EVANS
Collegian Staff

Rabbi Saul Perlmutter loves Passover.

"Passover is such a great holiday," he said. "I could talk about it all day."

Perlmutter led one of two Seder dinners conducted Friday night at Hamden's kosher dining commons. Students led the second.

"I found the Seder thoroughly enjoyable. We had good singing and good participation," Perlmutter said.

This year, the celebrants tried new customs at the dinner, Perlmutter said.

"There is a point in the service when a matzoh is broken into three pieces and the largest piece is hidden. This year, before we hid it, we did a Sephardic Jewish tradition which is to place matzoh on one person's shoulder and everyone at the table got up and followed this person for a walk around the room and then back to the table," he said.

This ritual is the symbolic reenactment of Jews placing their bread-kneading troughs on their shoulders and leaving their lives of slavery in Egypt, Perlmutter said.

During the recitation of the 10 plagues, another non-customary tradition was practised.

According to Perlmutter, the 10 plagues are the 10 bad things that happened to the Egyptians each time they denied the Jews their right to freedom from slavery.

"This year, everyone blew up a balloon and said something that's plaguing them now. Then all of the balloons were popped.

This was symbolic of getting rid of things that plague us today," Perlmutter said.

Perlmutter said although Passover is a biblical and historical holiday, each year it gives its celebrants a chance for new personal freedoms.

"Passover seems to have an enduring relevance. Passover is about taking a journey — us getting up and moving from places where we've been oppressed to places where we can realize our potential," he said.

"Passover starts in spring, a time of birth and a time for our own rebirth. It's a time to think about getting up to move to greater freedom, greater fullness of living."

Perlmutter said a custom at the Seder had a contemporary slant this year, with regard to the war in the Persian Gulf.

The custom is to take a drop of wine out of a glass of wine to commemorate each of Egypt's plagues. Perlmutter explained that in the Judaic faith, wine is a symbol of joy, and in removing those 10 drops of wine, the drinker feels sympathy for the pain of others, even enemies.

"This custom is important today — wherever we stand on what should have been done in Iraq. We don't rejoice in our enemies' suffering. We hope our liberation comes without the pain of others."

There will be a passover service Friday night at 7 p.m. at the Hillel House on North Pleasant St., and this week there will be a table on the Campus Center Concourse selling food for students celebrating Passover.

Next week will be Holocaust Memorial Week, and a number of events are scheduled.

Tonight, Paulina Stark, a soprano in the music department, will perform Robert Stern's compositions inspired by the Holocaust. Leopold Teraspulsky will accompany on the cello. The performance will be at Bezanson Recital Hall in the Fine Arts Center at 8 p.m.

Professors address economic growth

By JASON GEORGE
Collegian Staff

The struggles that many college students and others are having finding jobs seems to have made people think more about the Massachusetts and United States economies.

These topics were addressed by University of Massachusetts economics professors Andrew Brimmer and Leonard Rapping in a panel on "Recession and Recovery" in the Campus Center last night.

Both panelists agreed on a cautious scenario of modest economic growth in the near future, but disagreed on the means of achieving an end to the current recession.

"Recessions are inherent in the [U.S. economic] system," Rapping said. "The essence of the debate in macroeconomics is whether or not there is anything we can do about them."

Rapping was referring to the question of whether or not the government should actively intervene when economic problems arise.

"In this case, the best thing to do is probably nothing," Rapping said. "Any interference would probably make things worse."

Rapping put his ideas about a role for the government in the context of the Massachusetts economy, where he feels state government will be unable to find ways to increase the growth of production and reduce unemployment.

"Probably what we have to do is retrench the state government, as it got bloated in the 1980s," Rapping said. "We're not talking about fine-tuning here, but cutting with a meat cleaver."

Though Rapping's approach sounds drastic, he believes it is the only way to end Massachusetts' economic woes.

"The rationalization process [in government] ends up being just a series of cuts across the board," Rapping said. "We might then reach the position where the state is seen as more pro-business and as a facilitator for industry."

Brimmer, who sees the current recession as a result of the rise in oil prices following Iraq's invasion of Kuwait Aug. 2, felt the government should take a more active role in ending the economic downturn.

"The Federal Reserve waited too long to undergo a vigorous easing of monetary policy," Brimmer said. "They should have recognized that interest rates were restricting the amount of available credit."

When the Federal Reserve keeps the interest rates for borrowing money high, businesses and consumers borrow less and investment and consumer buying suffer as a result.

Run benefits homeless, abused kids

By DAVID RIVERA
Collegian Correspondent

The 10K "Run for Runaways" road race to benefit homeless and abused children will take place Saturday, April 6.

Sponsored and organized by the Newman Student Association, the 12th annual fundraiser donates all its proceeds to The Covenant House. The organizers hope to raise $10,000, most of which will come from sponsors.

The Covenant House organization, founded in New York City's lower east side in 1968, provides food, clothing and shelter to teens who have become homeless or have runaway because of abuses at home.

"The race began 12-years-ago, and we had only about 20 runners. Two-years-ago we had as many as 520, so it's become very successful over the years. Last year we raised $7,000 which all went to the covenant house," said Sister Millie of the Newman Center.

The organizers of the race want people to know about the crisis concerning homeless and abused teens.

"Some of these young people find themselves without any shelter and some fall prey to drug pushers and pimps because they have no one else to turn to. The Covenant House program provides the basics as well as counselling to help them get on the right road," Sister Millie said.

Celeste Poulin and Beth Pollard, both student organizers, said the race has become a UMass tradition and that teams from school organizations, such as the Air Force R.O.T.C. and fraternities, have created a competitive spirit that helps with getting more sponsors for the cause.

"It has become both competitive and fun. we get serious runners and we get people who just walk the route. We encourage anyone who wants to participate to do just that; you don't have to be a runner," Poulin said.

The race will start at 9:30 a.m. for walkers and 10 a.m. for runners, from the Boyden side of the Alumni Stadium track. Prizes, donated by local merchants, will be awarded to the top three winners in five age categories. Registration tables will be set up on the Campus Center Concourse throughout the week, and on-sight registration will also take place before the race.

Students organize 'higher education day' to protest Weld's proposed education cuts

Students are organizing a higher education day at the Statehouse in Boston on April 17 to protest Governor Weld's proposed education cuts.

The event, which has the theme "Business Needs Higher Education in Massachusetts," will kick off with a 10 a.m. press conference on the Statehouse steps, according to Student Trustee and rally organizer Angus McQuilken.

"We're trying to get the presidents and CEO's of Boston companies to denounce Weld's proposals," McQuilken said.

After the press conference, students will go to the Statehouse to lobby for their representatives' support.

Speakers scheduled to be at the press conference so far are the chairman of the Massachusetts House of Representatives' Education Committee and the president of the Fall River Chamber of Commerce Mark Montigny.

An organizational meeting will be held Thursday at 8 p.m. in the Student Union Ballroom. Students, faculty, and staff are encouraged to attend.

"The purpose of the meeting on Thursday is to get as many students, faculty, and staff there as possible to hear out what Weld's proposals are and figure out how we're going to respond to them and to plan for the 17th in Boston," McQuilken said.

State Representative Stan Rosenberg (D-Amherst), President of the Faculty Union John Cole, and McQuilken will speak at Thursday's organizational meeting. Student Government Association President Natasha Diephuis will be master of ceremonies.

Arab blood isn't enough; the US wants Arab wealth

Now that the dust has settled on America's Desert Storm, and the collective mind of the United States returns to its usual resting place — the wallet — the bloodhound-brained media has set off on the money trail. We are being treated to a barrage of blather about "Saddam's Billions," a preposterous argument being advanced by agents of the Al-Sabah family and other pirates, and being swallowed whole by the credulous press and public alike.

Hussein Ibish

The simple and obvious trick of this amateurish propaganda is to use the term "Saddam" in most of the general discussion of the money in question, but to conveniently switch to the term "Iraq" or "Iraqi government" when making any specific allegations of ownership, investment, or property rights (as on 60 Minutes).

Simply put, the money in question does exist, and all or the vast majority of it is in the overt and covert investment operations of the Iraqi Republic. Most of these were put into place to facilitate the acquisition of technology that is denied to many Third World nations to keep them defenseless. Such acquisitions are entirely legitimate and proper. To identify Iraqi foreign investments as the personal fortune of President Saddam is a deliberate and cynical manipulation of the ignorance of the public. Its function is as a pretext for the looting of Iraqi assets, which is, after all, the name of the game.

The United States, where the government is heavily implicated in the greatest theft of all time (the S&L scandal), is naturally the end of the real money trail. All such roads lead to the new Rome. Like its imperial predecessors, the United States is pleased to extract from its subjects booty, tribute, and taxes. The war was firstly for the enforcement of dominance. But, economic greed was a close second to power-lust and military sadism. Kuwait as a particularly profitable neocolonial outpost and placid petrol pump is a small but not unimportant rock in the mountain of international inequities that form the basis of the "American way of life."

The United States has consolidated its control over the Gulf which contains no less than 80 percent of global oil reserves. States like the United Arab Emirates, Saudi Arabia, and of course good old Kuwait, can be relied upon not only to keep oil prices down and supplies flowing, but to in effect give much of it for free.

These states, especially Kuwait, make a habit of investing most of their petrodollars in the west. Thus, the west buys oil with cash that often never leaves their economies, and only nominally changes hands. It may be bought on an individual or corporate basis, but at the national level, it is taken. One thing is for sure, the Arab world will never see most of that money.

Iraq is to be looted by "reparations" (extortion) payments. United States interests will take most of the contacts to rebuild Kuwait.

Further, the only area of United States industrial supremacy, the weapons industry, was threatened by budget cutbacks. The war has served as a high-tech weapons commercial on international TV, promoted even absurd systems such as the laughable Patriot, renewed interest in the "Space Defense Initiative," and secured large contracts at home and abroad. For example, the Al-Sauds will be spending $21 billion on US arms in the next two years alone (known as the 'manna from Saudi'), plus about 10 more on maintenance.

The single most direct form in which the tribute is made is in the distribution of the cost of the war. Almost all sources have the United States looking at a huge profit when the monetary cost/benefit ratio is calculated. It has spent, at most, $48 billion but is pledged, and will certainly receive, at least $55 billion for this hideous war, the triumph of "Entrepreneurial Imperialism."

Quite clearly, the real story is Uncle Sam's, not Saddam's. Billions (and Trillions). Recent United States behavior in the war and at the GATT talks demonstrate as invigorated tendency to loot and coerce, rather than compete without bullying. The true kingpins of international larceny conduct their sordid affairs out of palatial offices, not in Baghdad, but Wall Street and Washington.

A rock 'em sock 'em hoop season when we needed one

Bittersweet. Nerve-wracking. Thrilling. For fans of the UMass men's basketball team, this season left them proud and exhausted.

A year with a 20-13 record, a new all-time high scorer, a bid in the National Invitational Tournament's Final Four and a trip to Madison Square Garden, can hardly be called an ordinary one.

Meredith O'Brien

The proverbial underdogs went farther than anyone ever anticipated this year and, despite that loss to George Washington which knocked them out of the Atlantic 10 finals, snagged them their first-time-ever NIT Final Four bid. We won't (the refs were biased) discuss (the refs were biased) the GW game for fear (the refs were biased) that those overly emotional UMass fans (the refs were biased) will get as riled up as Red Sox fans do when they hear the name — Bill Buckner.

But during a time when the University budget had been severly slashed, a war had erupted in the Gulf and Victor Kiam's mouth had again ignorantly flapped in the wind, we needed something to boost our morale. The basketball team fit the bill.

I'm sure most fans did not go to games simply to escape the anxiety and doldrums of the economy and General Schwarzkopf. Most people I saw at the games were people I had seen at the Cage since I'd started going to games my sophomore year. But for many people, on campus and off, the newly-found pleasure of going to basketball games was uplifting and a gloriously heart-wrenching experience.

The number of fans who became wrapped up in "Minuteman Mania" did not increase dramatically only because the team started winning. . .although many did jump on the bandwagon, embracing the "starting seven" as the greatest thing since Dr. J. It was not just the numbers piling up in the win column that lured the hordes there.

This year's team played with heart. They, almost always, predicted to lose by 10, never gave up and proved that when UMass was down, a little scrappiness would help them fight their way to the top. Their successes, alongside their close losses (losing eight games by a total of 12 points or in OT), provided a good example of what can be accomplished when the chips are down.

The most exciting moments of the season were brilliant illustrations of the team's tenacity which, while it didn't bring them to the NCAA's, got them farther than any UMass team that came before them:

Rafer Giles' 1,000th point (a three-point) shot, netted in the last seconds of overtime, beat Rhode Island by one; the Will "I can jump over cars" Herndon dunks constantly roused the crowd to their feet when the team needed a boost; and, of course, there's the "shot of the century" at the thrilling OT-Siena game in Albany which advanced them to the NIT's Final Four.

The Siena game, was, without a doubt or hesitation, the game of the year — testimony to an entire season where neither the fans nor the team gave up.

Outnumbered by 13,000 Siena fans (who had the potential to grossly out-yell us but sat on their hands all night), the 1,000 die-hard UMass fans collectively lost their voices with frantic yelling, successful in outdoing the lame Siena people. Even when the team was down by three with 2.9 seconds on the clock — the Siena announcers telling everyone that tickets to the Siena semifinal game would be available at the ticket office after the game — the UMass fans were still loud and confident.

The team reflected that fervor with its own intensity as Tony Barbee sunk the three-pointer with 2.3 seconds on the clock, securing an overtime. Then the UMass defense, coupled with Jim McCoy's lone shot, secured the Minutemen's slot in the Final Four.

While the team was narrowly defeated (73-71) by Stanford at Madison Square Garden in front of the thousands of UMass fans who faithfully followed them to New York City, and suffered another loss to Colorado in the NIT consolation game, more than 200 people still showed up to welcome them home last week.

The fans said they still cared, were still proud of the team that had provided them not only entertainment, but something to believe in. But in the back of everyone's minds, was that haunting thought. . .move over UConn. . . .

ed because of her decision Friday to veto the appointments of six new senators to the student senate, which is felt violated the SGA constitution. The senate's coordinating committee appointed the six senators in an attempt to revive the body which was forced to dissolve three weeks ago because there were not enough members.

Diephuis is one of the five SGA officers who asked the administration to step in and restructure what they claim is an ineffective student government at the beginning of this semester.

This incident was preceded by a history of harassment which has been directed at the SGA officers since they made the request Jan. 30, according to former Treasurer Daniel Chesnicka and Registrar Rebecca Rudko.

"My tires were slashed, my car was rammed three times; that's about $2,000 worth of damage," Chesnicka said. "I received threatening phone calls on a continual basis, the Minuteman printed my home phone number. When I was still speaker, people went into my desk and copied personal materials and put them in other people's mail boxes."

Registrar Rebecca Rudko said she has been getting obscene phone calls that name student government figures. She said that former Treasurer Karen Talbot has also been getting phone calls and that McQuilken gets death threats on a regular basis.

"If they think they can scare us into submission they are horribly mistaken," Chesnicka said. "The issue is the effectiveness of student government. These acts prove that those who oppose restructuring student government would rather harass people than address the issue. Who is selling out now?"

"We will live through this episode," said Brimmer, who expects the national economy to begin expanding in the summer of 1991.

"However, I see no boom on the horizon," he continued. "And consequently there will be no rapid expansion of job opportunities."

The panel was sponsored by the UMass chapter of Omicron Delta Epsilon, an international economics honor society.

WOMEN'S ISSUES

'Right to Know' is Wrong

By JASON GEORGE
Collegian Staff

At a time when it appears increasingly inevitable that the United States Supreme Court will overturn its 1973 decision Roe vs. Wade, the struggle over abortion rights is becoming increasingly more focused at the state level.

In few places is this trend more apparent and more disturbing than Michigan, where abortion rights opponents are pushing for congressional passage of a so-called "Women's Right to Know" bill.

This law would stipulate that a woman be presented with six different forms of information at least 24 hours before an abortion. This information includes the gestational age of the fetus and a description of its development at the time, a "medically accurate" photo of the fetus at its gestational age, the type of abortion procedure to be used and any possible physical risks to the woman.

Also, women are to be apprised of procedures which would follow if complications arose, plus alternatives to abortion such as adoption.

The problems with this bill, which are many, begin with its name. The use by abortion-rights foes of the name "Woman's Right to Know" obscures the fact that there is no positive right to anything for a woman choosing to seek an abortion. The bill stipulates that a woman must be forced to see things which are intended to influence her against having an abortion. In fact, the law would be better called the "Woman's Obligation to Know."

Ed Rivet, the legislative director of Right to Life in Michigan, summed up his view of the law's intention in a recent Wall Street Journal article.

"She's going to have to see what it is that she's about to abort," Rivet said. "We want to have these women decide whether they still want to have an abortion after they've seen that."

Rivet and others seem to make little attempt to hide their intention of brainwashing women who have already entered into the terribly difficult choice of whether or not to have an abortion.

Attempting to make women feel guilty by forcing them to see the fetus that they are carrying, in addition to vastly complicating the choice that they are making, also simplifies abortion far beyond many of the issues that a woman must consider.

Why, for example, shouldn't women be forced to read statistics and see films about child abuse or poverty among children, or other problems resulting from unwanted births?

Abortion-rights foes seeking to appeal to a woman's sense of guilt to prevent an abortion should perhaps be forced to read columns such as that of Derrick Jackson's in Sunday's Boston Globe. Jackson writes of a one-day old baby with its umbilical cord still attached and covered with birth fluids which was found in Dorchester with a smashed skull.

Note from the Editors

The editors regret to inform the community that we are resigning effective today for a variety of personal reasons. It is with much sadness, though our G.P.A.'s will undoubtedly thank us at the end of the semester.

We encourage readers with an interest in women's issues to apply for the posts. You do not need experience to apply. Please consider it, for the Women's Issues page is vital in ensuring that women have a voice in the UMass arena.

EVERYWOMAN'S CENTER NEWS

• The Counseling Program at the Everywoman's Center has been restored. Funding has been guaranteed through the spring of 1991. A major effort is underway to restore the program on a permanent basis. Your support and encouragement is appreciated. Walk-in hours at the Everywoman's Center are Tuesday and Friday from noon-1:30 p.m. A counselor is available by phone Monday, Tuesday, Thursday and Friday mornings from 10 a.m.-11 a.m. Counseling appointments are available by appointment. Due to the time-limited nature of our current funding, counseling will be short-term with an emphasis on assessment and referral. Call the Everywoman's Center at 545-0883 for details.

• Do It Yourself (Pro-Se) Divorce Workshop, April 22. Divorce can be an emotionally difficult and financially costly process, and many women are unable to afford the high cost of obtaining legal representation. In many cases, self-representation may be a viable alternative. Everywoman's Center and the Legal Services Office will co-sponsor an introductory workshop on the do-it-yourself or "pro-se" divorce process. Jenny Daniell, staff attorney at the Legal Services Office, will present information about pro-se divorce and will also be available to respond to questions and facilitate discussion. This event will be at the Bangs Community Center in Amherst from 7 p.m.-8:30 p.m. This event is free of charge and is open to University and community women. Pre-registration for this workshop is requested and childcare will be provided on a limited basis. For additional information, contact the EWC.

• Female Partners of Bisexual Men Support Group, a free, monthly support group for female partners of bisexual men, will meet Sunday, April 7, at the Everywoman's Center, Wilder Hall, UMass. Issues to be discussed include invisibility, relationship management, monogamy/non-monogamy, marriage, AIDS, safe sex, homophobia and anything else that members wish to address. Confidentiality is assured.

"I see the world gradually being turned into a wilderness. I hear the ever-approaching thunder, which will destroy us too. I can feel the sufferings of millions and yet, if I look up into the heavens, I think that it will all come right, that this cruelty too will end, and that peace and tranquility will return again."

— Anne Frank

If you can't afford to get sick. . .

Perhaps one of the greatest challenges facing women in the 1990s is America's deteriorating health care system. In a time of single motherhood and tremendous economic discrimination against women, many of our sisters literally cannot afford to get sick.

Rua Kelly

Many women also cannot afford to get pregnant, as Massachusetts' government officials declared last week.

A recent Boston Globe editorial repeated the conclusions of state officials, stating that ". . . nearly three times as many African-American babies die before the age of one than White babies. The percentage of African-American women who receive adequate prenatal care has dropped in two years from 60 to 54 percent." Black women, in particular, are doubly victimized by a system which cannot provide for them or for their children and simultaneously denies them reproductive rights via sterilization abuse and stringent abortion laws.

However, a bill recently introduced in the U.S. Senate by Senator Edward Kennedy (D-Mass) may begin to address women's needs on a national level. The "Comprehensive Prenatal and Early Childhood Health Care Act" is an initiative that provides funding for the development of community health centers in impoverished areas, both urban and rural.

If the bill passes, more money will be allotted for vaccines to the states, and both substance abuse prevention/treatment programs and smoking cessation in pregnancy programs will receive dollars for education, training, and technical assistance. New health centers will be established in areas urgently needing them, specifically targeting young mothers and pregnant women through outreach programs.

A spokesperson for Senator Kennedy described the bill's chances of passing as "very good" despite our nation's fiscal problems, and cited the bill as part of Kennedy's ongoing struggle to raise the status of women in our communities.

The Act, however, may run into some opposition from the Bush administration, who have put forth their own plan. However, they target only 10 cities, and obtain the funding by cutting into other areas' infant mortality programs.

Every day in America, ". . .107 infants die (and) 700 more babies are born with a birthweight so low that they are 40 times more likely to die in the first month of life," yet we spend our money on missiles, not people. With the passage of this bill, perhaps we could look towards a better future for America.

ARTS & LIVING

Look to the indie labels for good British pop

By DAVE GERVAIS
Collegian Correspondent

If you are like me (which you probably are not) all these Rides, My Bloody Valentines and Lushes can get a bit boring after listening to them for the one thousandth time. These days, however, there is plenty of great British pop out there, and I am not referring to the spoon fed major label junk. Independent British labels are putting out music that is, in my opinion, of equal or greater value to the Rides you've been taking.

For instance, if you are into the feedback psychedelic pop thing, a new record by Boo Radley will interest you. It's entitled Kaleidoscope, and consists of four songs on Rough Trade UK. There are plenty of distant vocals, and the feedback is nicely contrasted by an acoustic guitar in the foreground.

Two other singles I've encountered in the feedback pop category come to mind. The first in by Creation Records' The Telescopes. It's a seven-inch single with a song called "Celeste" on the A-side. The powerful bass line on this excellent cut will have you unconsciously humming "Celeste" for days after you hear it. Starting to get the picture?

The second single that comes to mind is by a band called The Lavender Faction. At first this group reminded me of the Wedding Present so much that I started singing "My Favorite Dress." But I quickly found that there is a lot more to this Lust Record band than some silly dress, and the mercilessly sloppy guitar work won me over, especially on the title track, "In My Mind." Check out this superb seven-inch single, but do so soon since all Lust records are limited editions of 1000.

Pure, more refined pop is always nicely represented by the Sarah Records label, based in Bristol. For three or so years this small label has been consistently releasing great seven-inches by bands like the Field Mice, the Sweetest Ache, and the Orchids. Two new sevens have recently been released, one by The Field Mice and one by a band called Tramway. The new Field Mice record is more of the same: light, Rickenbacker guitar work with catchy drum beats on "September's Not So Far Away," and interesting added male/female vocals on the mellow B-side, "Between Hello and Goodbye." The Tramway record is not one of Sarah's best, but the title cut of this seven-inch EP, Maritime City, combines catchy lyrics with drum machine rhythm and an instigating guitar. You ought to check it out at least.

So give your Ride/MBV/whatever records a break. The really great pop is on import seven-inch singles these days, and the major labels won't miss your business, I promise.

School children learn to admire the art of poetry

By NOA CHRISTINE BEN-YEHUDA
Collegian Staff

Ask your average University student to recite a little William Blake and you might come up with a blank. But ask one of students in Chris Soucy's Common School class of 10 to 12-year-olds and you could be impressed.

Is it a ghost or a fire? A ringed lake or a graveyard?

Picking through the clues given by Richard Wilbur, Soucy's class is trying to decipher Riddle Poem. Josh Zacharias and Gregg Rundle take sides — the ghost and the fire respectively — and argue their points with eloquence.

"Well this part. . .'I have no thoughts of buried bones; for I am bodiless and bright'. . .makes me think it might be a ghost," says Gregg.

"But it's obviously a fire! 'Bodiless and bright' is like fire and the part 'where far in the forest I am laid in a place ringed by stones' means a campfire!" argues Josh.

Unlike many classes you might attend in college, every one of the students seems to have something to say. One boy falls backwards out of his chair in his excitement, others simply squirm, arms raised awaiting their turn to interpret. After much haggling, Soucy finally comes clean, "Congratulations Josh," he says, "it was a campfire."

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Be receptive to new ideas. Other people could come up with some excellent business suggestions. Do more serious thought about a complicated personal relationship. It may be time to set the date!

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Romance is a source of real delight now. You could find yourself on a public event or community project. Resist the temptation to take promises at face value. Get the facts.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Seize on opportunity to air the plans you have been developing. your colleagues should be highly receptive. Listening to classical music with a loved one will be soothing to you both.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): It is time to apply the brakes. Both money and a friendship could be lost. If you are not careful now. Avoid sounding secretive - it could turn others off. Romance sizzles tonight!

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): The atmosphere could turn combative today. Avoid getting involved in risky business of any kind. A love or professional relationship could become quite stormy. Take the initiative and make peace.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Be certain you show team spirit today. It is very important that you not appear standoffish or unconcerned. Be more nurturing in a romantic relationship.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Expect the unexpected and be prepared to roll with the punches. Changing conditions favor your efforts in the area of finance. Follow conservative methods to ensure your financial security. Wonderdog Wedderman lurks.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Keep your wits about you when in the spotlight today. It is the little things you say and do that reflect heavily on you. Try a new hairstyle and update your wardrobe.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): You could make an important discovery or connection in an unexpected way. Be open to new trains of thought and unusual opportunities. Work carefully to avoid making costly mistakes.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): A raise or promotion may be in the works. Draw close to people in high places. A message from afar sheds light on an important matter. Give parents, children and pets extra loving.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Count on an interesting pal to add spice to your day! You will not be idle. Someone who works with you could be the best companion of all today. Get out and socialize.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): You will have an opportunity to shine in the public eye today. Be cheerful and cooperative and you will attract favorable attention. This could be an opportune time to negotiate a new contract.

himself, Soucy is pleased when, as the children discuss the favorite and least favorite poets they have encountered since the beginning of the poetry section, one boy pipes up with, "William Carlos Williams was cool."

Other favorites are Maya Angelou, T.S. Eliot, Edgar Allen Poe and Robert Frost. A number of the children singled out their fellow classmates as well.

The kids have been lead by Soucy and a teaching intern into the world of poetry by subject rather than by period or genre. Each week a new subject is introduced, "snow," "moon" or "animals" for example. New poets and poems are then introduced and discussed in the comfortable casual setting of the Common School. The students later try their hand composing. Initially this project was met with some dread.

"At first I thought it was going to be boring," said one student, "but now I find it really interesting."

Having a subject to focus on helped to direct the students in their writing endeavors. Sitting in an informal circle they talk about their techniques and tricks for writing. "I just had to sit quietly for a long time before I could get into it," says one boy.

Most striking about this experiment in education is in the discovery that the feelings and frustrations felt by fifth and sixth graders is no different than what older students or writers face when it comes to comprehending and creating poetry.

In search of Fame

Claim to Fame
Hampshire College
Sunday, Mar. 31

Last night, Barry Weil presented eight characters in search of a celebrity, all played by himself, in his new play Claim to Fame, presented by the Hampshire Independent Productions. Each ne're-to-do-well tells his or her own story about a brief but cataclysmic brush with a famous person, from Jesus to Lee Harvey Oswald.

Each story explores the awe that shallow mediocrities feel for those who are truly accomplished and simultaneously exposes the human weakness of those who pretend to power. Perhaps the author patronizes his characters, but he also has affection for them and this failure to fully work out the recognized contradiction makes the show dynamic, but also unconclusive.

The first couple of acts were the weakest and I regret to say that Barry is less convincing as himself than any of his other characters. I'm not sure how his show needed any introduction, but the one we got was too forced, too insincere, or should I say too self-consciously sincere.

Interestingly enough, the three women whom Barry created, acquainted with Adolf Hitler, Marilyn Monroe and Janice Joplin, were the most developed, believable and witty of the eight. The staging tried to fill up the huge dance studio space by moving characters from one area to another, but Weil was at his best in the intimate moment and probably would have been just as powerful with a chair and a spotlight.

A master story teller, the unassuming Barry Weil, who will graduate from Hampshire this Spring, is more likely to go on to become a celebrity himself than one of their groupies.

American Express Announces A Great New Travel Program.

Now students can get the Card and get 3 roundtrips on Continental Airlines, for only $129 or $189 each.

There's only one way to cover a lot of territory without spending a lot of money. And that's by getting the American Express® Card. It's the only card that offers an exciting new travel program exclusively for students—including three roundtrip certificates on Continental Airlines.

Just look at the map and pick the place you'd like to visit. If it's on your side of the Mississippi River, you can use a certificate to fly for only $129 roundtrip. Or, you can cross the Mississippi for $189 roundtrip.

You have your pick of more than 150 cities in the 48 contiguous states. And you can fly almost anytime—because there are no blackout dates. But you must make your reservations within 14 days of the day you leave. And the maximum stay is 7 days/6 nights and must include a Saturday night.

In addition to this great travel program, you'll also enjoy all the benefits of Cardmembership as well as other exclusive student privileges. They include a quarterly magazine filled with informative articles on summer jobs, careers, campus life. Plus valuable discounts from leading retailers.

But remember, there's only one way to get all this—and that's by getting the American Express Card. Just call us (have your bank address and account number on hand). What's more, with our special student offer, it's easier to get the Card now while you're still in school than it may ever be again.

So get the Card. And get ready to cover new territory on either side of our Great Continental Divide.

Membership Has Its Privileges.®

CALL 1-800-942-AMEX

If you're already a Cardmember there's no need to call. Information about your certificates will be arriving soon.

geographical market? Two expansion teams that puzzle me are San Jose and Tampa. When I think of hockey, these two cities pop right into my mind. A southern expansion team didn't work before, so what makes you think it is going to work this time?

Remember the Atlanta Flames? They are now the Calgary Flames. What about the California Golden Seals? They no longer exist. If it weren't for superstar Wayne Gretzky, Los Angeles would still be leading the league in lowest attendance.

Mr. Ziegler, presently there isn't one NHL team south of the Mason-Dixon Line. With the decrease in television coverage how do you expect to sell hockey in the South? If I were sun bathing in 80 degree weather on a warm beach, my mind would not be on an evening hockey game.

The icing on the cake happened three years ago in Boston during the Stanley Cup Finals, when the Boston Bruins played the Edmonton Oilers. A funny thing happened that night in Boston Garden, the lights went out. Some important decisions needed to be made about the situation, but the President was nowhere to be found. Where were you? Oh, I remember now, you were on vacation. Probably a much-deserved vacation at that. Hey, what's more important — your leisure time of your league's image? Not a smart move.

In 1989 Pete Roselle retired as Commissioner of the National Football League after 30 years of service. He left a league that flourished under his guidance with revenues at an all-time high. He knew when it was time to leave and let some new ideas be created. Mr. Ziegler, the NHL has not flourished under your guidance. Instead of progressing, it is regressing. For all of us hockey fans, please do us a favor — retire. If you needed to take a vacation during the Stanley Cup Finals, maybe you need to take a permanent vacation away from hockey!

Softball hosts struggling Rams, UMass leads series

Softball hosts the struggling URI Rams at 3 p.m. today on Totman Field. The Rams enter the contest 1-11 and UMass enters with a three-game win streak.

By CHRIS MIRACLE
Collegian Staff

After winning their own Invitational Tournament this past weekend, the University of Massachusetts softball team is tuned up for today's double header against Rhode Island. Game one begins at 3 p.m. at Totman Field.

It will be the first Atlantic 10 Conference meeting of the year for both clubs, but these games will not count towards the conference standings. That matchup will be played at URI, April 16.

"They are a tough team," UMass coach Elaine Sortino said. "Both teams are strong regional components and since they're so close, it makes sense to play them twice."

The struggling Lady Rams come to UMass sporting a 1-11 overall record. Their latest lost came at the hands of Yale, 3-0. Surprisingly, the Rams' only victory resulted in splitting a double-header with Connecticut.

URI lost the first game 1-0, but recharged itself, shutting out the Lady Huskies 5-0. Megan O'Neil, a junior righthander with a 3.71 ERA, chalked up the W in the late game.

"If you beat UConn 5-0 at UConn, you are doing something right," Sortino said.

UMass certainly wants to do the right thing and the same thing as last year against the Rams when the Minutewomen defeated URI 1-0, 3-2 in a doubleheader held last May.

"We have close games every season with URI," Sortino said. "These games come down to a player doing something wrong. So we hope to do more right."

Freshman Kathy Regan, a right hander with a 0-2 record (1.81 ERA) and sophomore Jennifer Ahpanowicz (0-5, 2.66) round out the top of URI's rotation.

Top hitters for the Rams include Christine Hilla, an infielder and junior Julie Moreau. Hilla leads the Rams in batting, standing at .250 right now. Moreau, with two doubles and a triple on the year has her slugging percentage at .300.

No hitting streaks nor base stealing records are on the verge of being broken by the Rams thus far this season. Their only streak, not one to proud of, is losing their first nine games at the start of the year after competing against schools in the South during their spring break. In the North the Rams are 1-2.

Holly Aprile (3-4, 2.60) and Darlene Claffey (3-3, 2.50) will split the pitching duties this afternoon. Claffey has six shutouts on the year, including the 6-0 victory over Maine last Friday. Claffey has pitched 50 innings this season while Aprile has hurled for 38. Sortino said she was still uncertain as to who would pitch the first game.

Amy Cockley, outfielder/firstbase, leads the Minutewomen in batting percentage (.500). Shortstop Barbara Marean is right behind her teammate at .439 while leading the team with a .659 slugging percentage. Marean is tied with catcher Cherie DellAnno for most runs scored at 10 a piece.

Riding a three-game winning streak, the Minutewomen still are not 100 percent in the injury category as some players are still hurting from their trip to California.

Salary cap would keep the bill low

"Here we are at beautiful Fenway Park on opening day. The Red Sox $5 million pitcher, Roger Clemens, has just thrown his first career no-hitter. Roger, you sure had your good stuff out there today. You struck out the Oakland A's $4 million first baseman, their $3 million third baseman, and their $6 million rightfielder three times each. Let me see, where is my calculator? Oh, never mind, just carry the one and add the three. . . Why, you just earned $2,391,111.11 per strikeout. How do you feel?"

"I feel great, could you excuse me for just one second? I have to get my agent on the phone so he can call Lou Gorman to get my contract renegotiated. This must be worth at least an extra couple of grand per year. What a day!"

Baseball players should not have contracts on a day-to-day basis. If players have a big game, they try to swing a new deal to get themselves a couple extra mil a year. Baseball salaries have gone through the roof. It is beyond the humorous stage when the fans can laugh at th astronomical wages these athletes are earning. Major League Baseball must institute a salary cap before players start coming out of retirement to earn these millions of dollars.

The NFL has instituted a sharing program of television revenue. Under this system the teams in the small markets can compete with the teams in the small markets can compete with the teams in the larger markets Baseball has no such deal. How are teams in the small media-markets expected to compete with the likes of the Los Angeles Dodgers, the New York Yankees and the Atlanta Braves in the free-agent market? Baseball is a true capitalist society in which every team fends for itself. There is a problem with this. The Milwaukee Brewers and the Seattle Mariners do not own their own stadium, they do not won their own cable network, and they cannot swing a $50 million cable deal. Salaries have gotten so high that the small media-market teams are being muscled out by the big media-market teams. The only way to give all the teams a fair shot at free agents is to institute a reasonable limit on player salaries.

The owners keep guaranteeing the players huge salaries and the burden will inevitable be absorbed by the fan. The owners will shrewdly conceal the increases to the fans at first. Initially, the fan might still pay the same on the ticket prices but there are many other areas for the owners to recoup their losses. At the stadium it costs $6 to receive a cold pretzel and a warm beer. These prices are bound to go up. A parking spot in the same county as the stadium can cost the fan $10 a game. The owners cannot raise the prices any more. Who knows what it will cost when Clemens pitches his first perfect game and heaven forbid he wins another Cy Young. Following the recent decision of collusion cases, the owners are down $280 million to the players. How long can the owners continue to guarantee these astronomical salaries?

Baseball needs to put itself in perspective. How can a man look himself in the mirror and honestly feel he is worth $5 million a year? Of course he is going to take it; he would be a fool not to. However, these professional athletes do not deserve to earn millions of dollars a year for playing a kid's game. The President, who is guiding this nation in a time of war, earns $200,000 a year. Pascual Perez, a career .500 pitcher, is frequently injured and has a history of drug problems, yet he earns $2 million a year. What is wrong with this picture?

What ever happened to playing for the love of the game? The pioneers of modern baseball had to work during the off-season in order to support themselves. They were true fans of the game and money was not a factor.

Some believe a salary cap on baseball restricts the free market, but baseball should look towards the NBA. The NBA is one of the most successful and well-run leagues and uses the salary cap very effectively. They even have players offering to give up a portion of their salary to stay within the salary cap. This sort of act of unselfishness is hardly seen in Major League Baseball.

The players feel that someone should make the money, so why not them? All the revenue is generated by the fans. The owners should not receive all the profits and neither should the players. The money should stay in the pockets of the fans. The salary cap would help keep the money in the pockets of the fans.

A salary cap is necessary for baseball to maintain the diminishing shreds of integrity the game is desperately trying to clutch to. The skyrocketing salaries are causing this nation's pastime to become a farce. With a salary cap in place, the baseball salaries can be curtailed before they reach the level of the national debt.

Baseball sweeps

The University of Massachusetts baseball team put itself near the top of the Atlantic 10 Conference by winning three games against Rhode Island yesterday afternoon.

Those three wins — an 11-8 extra-inning affair, a 4-3 victory and a come-from-behind 6-5 win — give UMass a three-game win streak going into today's 3 p.m., contest with Holy Cross in Worcester.

The victories were spearheaded by pitcher Ron Villone (2-0), who got the win in games one and three. Gary DiSarcina batted in two runs to cement the first win for the 6-9-1 Minutemen, according to URI coach Dave Morris. [The first UConn game was officially called a tie.]

"Both of the second two games were close," said Morris. In the second game, UMass broke a 2-2 deadlock with two homeruns by Ian Torres and Derek Dana, then withheld a Ram rally which saw the tying run thrown out at the plate. Morris said he disagreed with the call at home. Rich Grayham won that outing.

The Minutemen, up 4-3 in the third game before falling behind 5-4, plated two in the top of the seventh to complete the sweep.

Ziegler offsides, out of bounds

You hold a very powerful position Mr. John J. Ziegler. Being President of the National Hockey League (NHL) for over 20 years, the league has sought your guidance countless times and countless times you have come through for them. But your recent decisions have really baffled me. As a true hockey fan, I am really worried about the direction in which you are taking hockey. Could it be time to step aside?

Mr. Ziegler, why are you trying to hold on to outdated ideas? In the early 1970s, you and the NHL Board of Governors came up with a brilliant idea — to have a super series between the Soviet Union and NHL All-Stars. The series was a huge success, but give most of the credit to the Cold War.

Bill Keene

With tensions between the countries on the rise, slogans such as "The Russians are Coming" and "The Superpowers Collide" were catchy phrases to get the attention of the public. Let's face it, Mr. Ziegler, the Cold War is over! The rivalry between us just isn't there. Glasnost has hit home with many Soviet players playing in the NHL today.

When the Soviets toured this past season, your audiences got a great look at the up-and-coming stars of the NHL, namely the minor leagues. You see Mr. Ziegler, the Soviets weren't playing in the NHL; they were playing the minor leagues. Why? Because the NHL clubs got smart. Why risk hurting your starting players when you can bring up minor players to play in this meaningless exhibition with seats half-filled? I didn't see the Boston Bruins play the Soviets; I saw their minor league team, the Maine Mariners.

Mr. Ziegler, why are you inept at selling your own product? What were you thinking when you signed the television rights of the NHL over to SportsChannel America (SCA)? Of the four major sports (baseball, football, basketball and hockey), the NHL ranks dead last in media coverage. As a matter of fact, you haven't had a major network contract since NBC and Peter Puck came across our screens in the mid-70s.

A few years ago, ESPN had the rights to your games. Reaching over 50 million households, the broadcast crews did a superb job of bringing hockey back into people's homes. The NHL was on the right course in getting a contract with a major network!

Along comes SCA with an offer you apparently couldn't refuse. With a viewing audience of seven million households, SCA will pay you $51 million over the next three years to broadcast the NHL games. ESPN only offfered $32 million over the same time period. Was the extra $19 million worth losing the 43 million households? I don't think so!

Mr. Ziegler, why are you expanding in the wrong

Duffey to speak on student aid before Senate

By TAMIR LIPTON
Collegian Staff

President-Chancellor Duffey is scheduled to present a proposal for increased student federal funding to the United States Senate Committee on Labor and Human Resources Thursday morning at Springfield College.

"Legislation has tilted," Duffey said yesterday. "They're less considerate of middle-income families and independent students.

"I'm suggesting that they strengthen the base grant, provide more work study and provide new provisions of loan repayment," he continued.

Duffey's prepared testimony will outline four points:

- Funding for basic grants;
- Greater Congressional support for federal campus-based student aid programs;
- Extending federal student loan programs;
- Greater attention to the needs of dependent students of college-age from working families.

Duffey's testimony will urge the committee to make increased funding for Pell Grants, the basic building block of student aid.

In 1986, an increase in Pell Grants of up to $3,100 was appropriated for the 1991-92 school year, however, the maximum award being given is $2,400.

In 1978, Congress cited an annual income of $25,000 as that level at which a student should be eligible for a basic Pell Grant. Today, a family with an income of $49,615 would be eligible for the minimum award.

However, grants are only being given to families who earn below $35,000. In addition, families who earn over $28,000 are only receiving the minimum grant of $200.

Duffey will also be proposing that eligibilty for loans be broadened.

"It's great that students are becoming independent, but the funds for those students are diminishing," he said. "The levels of loan capital available to students and their families is today far too limited and eligibility requirements are too restrictive."

Duffey said he would like to see new mechanisms for student loan repayment over an extended period using the federal income tax system.

"Students should have to pay back loans yearly based upon their salaries," he said.

Duffey was asked by Senator Edward Kennedy to attend the hearing and present testimony.

Kennedy's office could not be reached for comment yesterday.

State work force cut 1,600; 400 more layoffs by April 15

BOSTON (AP) — The Weld administration has reduced the state work force by 1,600 positions, but still must cut 400 more to meet a self-imposed deadline of 2,000 by April 15.

Figures released Monday showed 900 workers either had been laid off since Gov. Weld took over in January or had been notified as of Monday that they would be let go.

An additional 709 positions were eliminated through resignations, retirements or deaths.

"These numbers show we're on target to accomplish our work force reduction target of 2,000," said Dominic Slowey, press secretary to Secretary of Administration and Finance Peter Nessen.

But Slowey also said some key agencies within the executive branch will not meet targets set for them for this month.

During his campaign for the Republican nomination for governor last year, Weld said 10,000 state employees could be eliminated without hurting services.

He ordered 2,000 jobs cut by April 15, an additional 1,000 by June 30 and an additional 4,000 during the fiscal year beginning July 1.

The job cuts are part of Weld's plan to reduce the anticipated budget deficit. The cuts are expected to save about $60 million during the full fiscal year beginning July 1.

The health and human services secretariat was told to eliminate 1,155 jobs by April 15. It has moved to drop 956 employees by that date, but 315 of them are not certain to be off the payroll by then because they work for the Department of Mental Retardation where staffing levels are dictated by court orders.

The Weld administration is negotiating to ease the requirements.

Health and Human Services spokesman Joseph Landolfi said the goal of 1,155 will not be reached by April 15, but officials think they will cut the payroll by 1,200 jobs by June 30, some through layoffs, others through attrition.

The departments of Revenue and Education and the Executive Office of Labor also failed to meet their targets, Slowey said.

He said it was decided to cut 123 instead of 173 Department of Revenue jobs so tax collections would not be jeopardized.

The Department of Education will reach its goal of 101 layoffs, but more than half will be later than April 15, said Edward Melikian, a spokesman.

Officials said the Board of Regents of Higher Education and the Department of Public Safety exceeded their goals.

Slowey said the Legislature's payroll has grown by six employees, from 934 to 940 since Jan. 3.

"It's clear we are moving in the right direction while the Legislature continues to move in the opposite direction," he said.

But there were 969 employees on the legislative staff late last year, and the number may have been artificially low in early January because workers for a number of outgoing legislators were no longer employed.

LET ME IN!! — A lonesome campus pond duck waits by a Campus Center door in hopes of an intellectual conversation.

Bromery, Collins to rally for higher ed

Randolph Bromery, the former chancellor of the Board of Regents of Higher Education, and congressional candidate James Collins are expected to visit the University of Massachusetts at Amherst campus today as part of a campaign tour to the state colleges and universities.

According to Commuter Area Government President Ted Chambers, Bromery and Collins will speak at a noon rally on the south steps of the Student Union, followed by an open forum from 12:30 p.m. to 1 p.m. at the Student Government Association office, 420 Student Union.

Bromery, who was also UMass chancellor from 1979 to 1982, and Collins will speak about the current status of public higher education, Chambers said.

Collins, a former state representative who also served as chancellor of the Board of Regents, is running for the 1st Congressional District seat vacated by the death of Silvio Conte six weeks ago.

Chambers said the fact that Collins graduated from UMass should make him accessible to student voters. About 3,000 UMass students have registered to vote in the district.

"He's got the best overall record for the students — protecting the interests of students," Chambers said.

Both Chambers and Commuters Vice President Sue Church encouraged students to attend the rally and participate in the special election.

"(The rally) is the opportunity for students to come out and decide for themselves," Chambers said.

Prop. 2½ 'strangling' cities and towns

Proponents seek to raise tax cap as state local aid dries up

By EVE EPSTEIN
Associated Press Writer

BOSTON (AP) — The Proposition 2½ tax cap is strangling cities and towns, those who favor raising the limit told a legislative panel yesterday, but backers of the limit warned against change.

Those supporting change endorsed a number of proposals that would allow the limit to rise at the rate of inflation, which would mean doubling the 2½ percent property tax growth limit that has been in place for 10 years.

"Towns and cities across this commonwealth are having a fiscal crisis," said Frank LeBart, chairman of a group called the Suburban Coalition, who supports allowing the levy limit to rise at the rate of inflation.

LeBart, a retired businessman, said he originally supported the Proposition 2½ limit, but believes it is time to loosen the financial restrictions the cap imposed on communities.

Local aid reductions have also hurt cities and towns, he said. The Weld administration has proposed reducing local aid by $270 million for 1992.

Supporters of the change said the realize they are fighting an uphill battle, since the House rejected proposed changes to Proposition 2½ last month during debate on a deficit reduction plan. The changes had been proposed as a way to offset the local aid cut.

Rep. Stanley Rosenberg (D-Amherst) who spoke in favor of raising the tax limit, noted the past defeat, but said he would push ahead. "If at first you don't succeed, try, try again," he said.

But Barbara Anderson, of Citizens for Limited Taxation, disputed the notion that citizens and towns have been choked for funds because of Proposition 2 1/2.

"I really fail to see what is broken here that needs to be fixed, " Anderson said.

Under the present system , voters can override the tax cap to pay for specified projects. Anderson said override measures pass about half the time they are placed on the ballot.

"People will vote to raise their own taxes if they think there is a need for it and if they can pay for it," she said.

Disabled students grapple with accessibility

By AHVA DAVIS
Collegian Correspondent

For many students here at the University of Massachusetts, walking to classes, getting lunch, taking a test or going to the bathroom is no problem.

For others, that is not the case.

Janna Sorge of Abilities Unlimited said the most annoying thing about this campus is that "you can't just get into buildings."

Sorge, who is in a wheelchair, said it is hard to get around on the sidewalks in front of Morrill Science Building because of the poor conditions of the sidewalk.

Sorge is not alone in her complaints. Many other disabled students, while finding accessing certain buildings difficult, also find taking notes in class, reading a book or making a phone call are equally as difficult.

However, University officials have vowed to try to rectify these problems.

Paul R. Appleby, director of Disability Services said a van service is one of the many resources available at UMass to aid disabled students in accessing buildings.

Ramps have been installed along with at least one accessible bathroom in each building. But there are some buildings without accessible facilities, such as Machmer, and the Curry Hicks Cage, because the structures are too old.

When Sorge recently had an appointment in Machmer's CASIAC office, she said she had "to call to meet somewhere else because Machmer is not accessible."

Lack of funds is sited as the main problem for the slow renovations. "If more money was available, then more could be done," Appleby said.

Another complaint many disabled students have with the lack of accessible buildings at the University is its housing arrangements. There are a limited number of dorms with disabled accessibility located mainly in the Central and Northeast residence areas. Some students say this does not give them much of a selection of where to live.

"[Disabled students] deserve the same living options that other students have," Appleby said.

Sheymaya Laurel, an activist for accessibility, said she gained an interest in disabilities by working with handicapped people who made her more aware, until she herself became disabled.

"There are groups at all level that lobby for government funding to support places such as the Stavron Center for Independent Living which is run by disabled students, for the physically impaired," Laurel said.

A Telecommunication Device for the Deaf, which works like a computer modem, is available at the University to allow hearing impaired students to talk to with each other.

For students who are visually impaired, reading aides, books on cassettes and note takers are available. For the blind, a mobility instructor is available to help a student get around and learn the campus.

Sign language interpreters who translate what professors say, as well as note takers and tutors are also services provided by the University.

"There's still a lot more that can be done, that needs to be done, and that should be done," said Appleby.

Peace activist pulls out of race

NORTHAMPTON (AP) — Northampton peace activist Lisa Baskin said yesterday she was pulling out of the Democratic primary race for the 1st Congressional District seat left vacant by the death of Silvio Conte.

Baskin issued a statement saying the shortness of the race precluded a grassroots campaign and she was having difficulty raising the money needed for extensive advertising.

Although her name will remain on the ballot, her departure leaves nine people still actively campaigning for the Democratic nomination and three seeking the Republican nod.

The primary elections for the seat held by Conte, a Pittsfield Republican, are scheduled for April 30. The general election will be June 4.

The remaining Democrats include state Sens. John Olver of Amherst and Linda Melconinan, who moved to West Springfield to run; State Rep. Christopher Hodgkins of Lee and former State Reps. James Collins of Amherst and Sherwood Guernsey of Williamstown.

Plus, Hampden County Commissioner Leonard Collamore; Easthampton attorney John Arden; Amherst psychologist Stephen Bloomfield, and Smith College professor Donald Robinson of Ashfield are also in the running for the Democratic nod.

Running in the Republican primary are former Westfield State Rep. Steven Pierce, who was defeated by William Weld in last year's gubernatorial primary; Clarksburg broadcasting executive Donald Thurston, and Pittsfield lawyer Jane Patashnik.

Pierce, who quit his job as Weld's secretary of Communities and Development to run, has the backing of the top party officials, while Conte's widow, Corrine, has endorsed Thurston.

Conway fisherman falls into pond

By MARK HENSLEY
Collegian Staff

A Conway man was rescued Saturday morning from Cranberry Pond by Sunderland Fire personnel, two University of Massachusetts police officers and two other men after he fell from his canoe while fishing.

Mark J. Fortier, 30, was taken to Cooley Dickinson Hospital in Northampton by ambulance where he was treated and released. According to police, another fisherman heard Fortier's cries for help and summoned police and fire personnel who rescued him with a canoe and motorboat. Environmental Police are investigating the incident.

ARRESTS

- Michael G. Michalski, 18, of Holyoke, and Lance M. Brown, 18, of Dalton, were arrested Saturday morning at Draper Hall on charges of allegedly breaking and entering with the intent to commit a misdemeanor, larceny and malicious damage.
- William J. Phair, 19, of Lawrence, was arrested Saturday at Coolidge Residence Hall for allegedly being a minor in the possession of alcohol.

THEFTS

- A man reported Saturday the theft of a Klein 12-speed racing vicycle from the roof rack on his vehicle which was parked in lot 31. Estimated value $2,000.

FIRE

- Two dumpster fires, one in Lot 42 and one at the Boyden Gymnasium were extinguished by fire personnel on Saturday morning. According to police, the Boyden fire was intentionally set but police are not sure that the fires are connected.

Know thy enemy: AIDS can and does touch us

After having read Chris Muther's interview with "James" (March 15) a fellow UMass student who is HIV infected, my reaction was fierce. I was shocked and could share his frustrations. Although I am not HIV positive myself, the present political climate called for me to have complete sympathy for people who feel there is "no hope" because they may be infected with a virus that, in their minds, is "lethal" or "an automatic death sentence."

Saad Hopkins

The sad thing is the majority of the population doesn't even know a fraction as much about AIDS/ARC/HIV as they think. To understand the disease is to have a comprehensive knowledge of the immune system itself, and to understand how HIV attacks. It is important to understand how the virus may change according to personal biochemistry, and what one can do to avoid or survive it.

As much as I hate saying the "government" is "behind" it all (even though they usually are), I must say the reason why the majority of AIDS cases eventually die is because of the government's lack of responsibility in terms of dealing with the issue. There is so little information regarding survival and coping with this epidemic, that persons like James think there is no possibility of getting through it. And, it is these same people who will face trial eventually when (and I DO hope I'm wrong!) it has been discovered that there was a cure all along, but the intention was to kill off as many "faggots," junkies and poor people as absolutely possible. Pretty sad folks!

Some of you out there are heterosexual, and among you there is still this myth that you are not at risk. I've decided to help and counsel James because he feels as if he has no one else to absolve him of his pain and mental suffering. Having AIDS, or any derivation sucks and it's hard to be optimistic when you're feeling like shit. What if one of your brothers, or sisters, contracted it? The embarrassment is hell enough, should they decide to tell you. It's not like cancer, where the sympathy and the buckets of tears, mixed with the love and care, roll in by the truck full. The fear of being rejected and hated, the friends who stop calling, those who were intimate then don't "know" you, is a nightmare of which none of us could dream of facing.

If this happened to you, and you reacted justly, how could you live with yourself? Any moron who understood how HIV is contracted knows that you can't get it from talking, hugging or having someone cry on your shoulder. Who knows, perhaps the one you're sharing your bed with is HIV positive and doesn't even know it.

In short, study your enemy! Read, and get the facts about AIDS, get involved in it's prevention, and medical developments. And for those who may know a loved one who is infected with HIV, or has full blown AIDS, don't fear them, for now is the time that they need you most! ACT UP and fight AIDS, not people with AIDS. As for me, I'd gladly give up my time to help a stranger when no one else will. How many of you would do that?

If we looked past the hype, we would all become feminists

"I am not a feminist because feminists hate men." Oh. So what does that make me? I am definitely a feminist, but I sure as hell do like men. The definition of feminism as provided by the American Heritage Dictionary is the, "advocacy of the political, social, and economic equality of men and women." Nowhere is it said that feminists hate men. In fact, who says a man can't be feminist himself? Interestingly enough, the woman who made the statement quoted above went on to complain about problems she has dealing with sexism.

I am worried by this fear of feminism. How can we ever expect to realize the "American Dream" when so many people in this country are openly opposed to equality for women? Too many people are afraid of change. And who can blame them? If the system works for them, of course they wouldn't want it to change. But the system does not work for everyone, and I cannot sit back and let the oppression in our society go by unchallenged.

Some of you may say that I am making a big deal about nothing. After all, women can go to college, women can have careers that were formally restricted to men. But I ask you, why are there so many women on welfare? Why are so many women's children forced to grow up without the advantages that their more wealthy peers regard as basic rights? Why can I not watch TV, read a magazine, see a movie without getting the message that I am inferior and less important to society? I can assure you that it is not due to any fault of character on our part. Our culture is just completely oriented toward men.

Jessame Hannus

I was demonstrating a rather angry version of a song the other day and the man I was singing to asked me where I got my anger from. I grimaced at him and laughed. I get my anger from the culture I live in. My anger comes from the constant reminder that I can never let my guard down. I am angry because I am sick and tired of fighting all the time. I am sick and tired of the constant struggle for self-affirmation. And I am angry because I am constantly attacked for being angry.

These attacks bother me more than anything else. How dare someone attempt to tell me that I have no right to be angry, and nothing to be angry about? I hate the fact that people find it so easy to disregard the arguments of feminists. I also resent the fact that people assume that because I am angry about how this society treats women I must obviously hate both men and the United States. As though any attack on our society is an attack on democracy and the United States, and standing up against the oppression of women automatically entails the oppression of men.

My problem is that I can think of many explanations for society's treatment of women and reaction to feminists, but I cannot think of any way to change these problems. When I encounter sexism in daily life I often don't know what to do. It is hard to know what tactics to use when I am often attacked for simply trying to discuss things like a reasonable human being. Perhaps someday the human race will find better ways to communicate.

Why to vote for Parker

I'm writing to tell you one reason I'm running for Student Trustee: The impact of the budget crisis on UMass.

Our University is being dismembered. Gov. Weld has proposed cutting Mass. public higher education by $183 million, $93 million from the state allocation for public higher education, and $90 million by eliminating financial aid (changing grants to loans).

It's been my job, as Statehouse Action Project Coordinator for the SGA to organize the student lobbying effort on Beacon Hill. I've organized meetings at the Statehouse between students from UMass and members of the legislature at which we've pointed out to representatives that Massachusetts invests less in its public higher education system than any other state in the union.

This weak level of investment has had consequences: it has made UMass the third most expensive public institution in the nation, nearly four times the cost of attending the University of Texas at Austin. It has also meant that the quality of the education provided at Massachusetts' colleges has declined significantly. This decrease means larger class sizes, fewer available courses, and a lower quality of life on campus.

As Student Trustee, I will fight to hold the line on tuition and fees and the state's allocation for public higher education, to preserve financial aid, and to continue working to guarantee the rights of the students of UMass.

'Glimpses of Israel' stirs community rage

We the undersigned Afrikan-American and other Third World students and community members wish to take a clear position opposing the showing of the "Glimpses of Israel" photo exhibit in the Augusta Savage Gallery of the New Africa House. We wish also to dissociate ourselves from those few individuals who would represent themselves as "the New Africa House" and thus claim to represent the entire Afrikan-American community.

We oppose the showing of this exhibit in the New Africa House for the following reasons:

- The exhibit is one-sided and ahistorical in that it does nothing to represent either the Palestinians who make up a large proportion of Israel's population nor does it make any reference to their heroic struggle for their land in the face of brutal repression by the Israeli state.
- We want to make clear that we, as Afrikan-American students on this campus, are in solidarity with our Palestinian sisters and brothers in their struggle and that we do not support the policies of a state which, while claiming to represent an oppressed minority, perpetuates murder and brutal repression against another people and their legitimate liberation struggle.
- We wish to make clear that no single person or tiny group of people can represent or legitimately claim to represent the New Africa House.

The New Africa House, along with the Malcolm X Center, is the geographical and spiritual heart of the Afrikan community on this campus. It was created through the struggle of students and has been maintained by students who have had to fight twice in two decades to keep it. It is we, if anyone, who will speak in the name of the New Africa House.

We recognize and empathize with the historic oppression of the Jewish people and will continue to oppose the intolerance and harassment of Jews as well as the ideology and practice of anti-Semitism. However, our solidarity with the plight of the Jewish people does not extend to giving uncritical support to the policies of a state which over the course of history has repeatedly and continuously acted as the agent of repression in relation to the Palestinian people, and which has aided and abetted the racist apartheid state of South Africa in its oppression of our fellow Afrikan people.

A photographic journey to Israel

By ALISON BUCKHOLTZ
Collegian Staff

This photo, entitled "The Jewish Quarter," is just one of many on display at the New Africa House.

Notwithstanding the rock-bottom cost of international airline travel nowadays, the cheapest way for UMass students to get to Israel is the photography exhibit "Glimpses of Israel: A Visual Travelogue" at the Augusta Savage Gallery of the New Africa House until April 11.

The nearly 50 photos, taken by senior Alisa Berkowitz, "aim to reach students' emotions as well as their intellect," she said. In an effort to illustrate the wholeness of Israeli experience, she has combined both the mundane and the momentous, from the bureaucracy of an absorption center queue to thousand-year old archeological sites.

Each glimpse is exactly that: a momentary peek at a different aspect of Israel. In the time a shutter clicks, we see a sunrise at Masada; the doorway of a Druze village; a lush, reforested Mt. Carmel; a lone sailboat floating through the Gulf of Aqaba.

Modern life is juxtaposed with surprising ease against this ancient backdrop. A young girl dressed up as Queen Esther for Purim leans casually against an old stone fountain; a close-up of the spaces between rocks in the Wailing Wall reveals a handwritten note praying for peace. Attention to detail, even in photos that span a skyline, draw viewers into each scene.

Subtle narratives threading through the exhibit also link the photographs together. In "New Israelis," for example, young Ethiopian and Russian immigrants glance shyly at each other, and then around the land, as if to confirm their new nationality. In "Maimonides' Tomb," Hasidic students with black hats and long coats stare down dozens of steps at the uncommon sight of a secular woman. Other pictures tell their own stories, combining sight with insight to produce the most fascinating glimpses of Israel this side of an El Al flight.

Exhibit uncovers the ancient African tradition of Vodou

By LEAH ARINIELLO
Collegian Staff

Ever have one of those days when you wish you knew just a little black magic? How convenient it would be if you could put that tramp who stole your boyfriend into perpetual pain using pins and a lock of hair. This Hollywood inspired definition of Voodoo (or Vodou) is far from the African religion and art.

As an African beat drifts outside, its magical incantations draw you into the Wheeler gallery, home of "Vodou Initiation." A replica of an altar topped with blessed water, stones, candles and food offerings, greets you. Elaborate chalk drawings are sketched on rugs and painted in gold on the walls. Photographs of altars, initiations, possessions and pilgrimages surround the room.

One photo, of an altar consecrated to the Lord of the Dead shows three human skulls and one dog skull placed on a symbolic mini-coffin. An inscription reads, "The powders in the altar may be used to induce zombification, a carefully control sanction reserved for murderers, rapists, thieves and other criminals."

It all seems a bit creepy at first, but the creator of the exhibit, Kathy Sue Grey, assures "Vodou isn't satanic and doesn't involve devil worship or bloody orgies." Grey, who has a Masters degree from UMass, became a Vodou priestess while in Haiti. Grey says "many misconceptions about Vodou are shaped by the media and press."

Other photos portray life in Haiti. The shacks in one picture have ten people to a room. Grey also explains, two million people live without clean water, sewage removal or trash disposal. "You have to sleep with the boss," Grey says to get a job from an American company like Spalding, to earn a measly two dollars a day. "There is a terrible grinding struggle to simply keep flesh on the bones," she adds.

The peoples' faith in their religion is apparently what keeps them going. She describes initiation as being a social occasion, "with the level of sound as loud as a Reggae concert," as much as a time to serve the loa or divinities.

Several of the photographs depict Vodou followers being possessed by a "divinity." Grey explains once the body is taken over, the subject dances or sings and sometimes performs supernatural feats. Some people can actually dance on hot coals or in the fire and flesh remains unharmed. Grey herself became possessed during initiation and claims "it is not demonic but divine, it is expected and very desirable." Grey says all the festivities of Vodou, including initiation "are a time to remember traditional music and traditional dance."

Get a taste of Vodou tradition on exhibit until April 12.

THIRD WORLD AFFAIRS

From the 'quail shoot' to the 'turkey shoot'

The first battle [with the Filipinos] was so one-sided that [United States] troops jokingly referred to it as a "quail shoot." ("The Phillipines Reader." South End Press.)

There was almost no enemy fire. It was like a turkey shoot. (U.S. pilots after a raid on an Iraqi column.)

From the forcible acquisition of the Phillipines and Puerto Rico in 1898, to Iraq's catastrophic decimation, rule of the U.S. military juggernaut has been firmly established.

Having witnessed the United States' latest imperial onslaught, it would be instructive to step back and examine some of its initial overseas exploits.

In 1565, Spanish marauders had colonized the Phillipine archipelago. For three centuries, the Filipinos rose in armed uprisings and finally in revolution against their Spanish oppressors and domestic collaborators. In 1898, the Filipinos succeeded in driving the Spaniards off the islands, except for a small pocket in Manila. On June 12 that year, they declared themselves an independent republic and drafted their own constitution. But a cruel stroke of fate snatched victory from their hands.

Halfway around the world, the Spaniards had also colonized the island of Puerto Rico. The majority of the population was decimated by warfare and from smallpox epidemics brought by the Europeans.

Here, too, the people rose in rebellion. The Grito de Lares insurrection in 1868 proclaimed a Republic of Puerto Rico. But just as the independence movement gained momentum, a new development changed the scenario forever.

For both the Phillipines and Puerto Rico, a new colonial ruler appeared on the scene: the United States.

The United States was emerging as an industrial, commercial and economic giant. For three centuries, the Europeans had been greedily carving up the Third World into colonies for raw materials and new markets, while at the same time spreading European "civilization."

Eager to grab a portion of the colonial loot, the United States decided to seize the colonies of the declining Spanish empire. War was declared on Spain, and expeditions were sent to seize the Phillipines, Cuba and Puerto Rico. In the ensuing Treaty of Paris, Spain ceded these territories to the United States.

Modern U.S.-Phillipine relations began with the genocidal conquest and colonization of the Phillipines. From the very beginning, superior U.S. firepower ensured a one-sided "quail shoot." Five hundred pound shells were fired into the Filipino trenches at point blank range.

To counter the guerrilla warfare, the U.S. campaign then entered its second, chilling phase: the genocide of the Filipino people. As General Shafter said in 1899: "It may be necessary to kill half of the Filipinos in order that the remaining half may be advanced to a higher plane of life than their present semi-barbarous state affords."

Rao/Ledesma/Iranzo-Berrocal

A tight U.S. naval blockade drastically crippled their arms supply. Veterans of the Native American genocide were dispatched. For three and a half years, villages were burnt, crops destroyed, and whole populations of several islands were exterminated in concentration camps.

Press censorship ensured that few such reports trickled home. The war was declared to be over in 1902. Between 600,000 and one million Filipinos died at the hands of the U.S. occupation forces. "The warfare has been conducted with marked humanity and magnanimity on the part of the U.S.," the War Department boasted.

In Puerto Rico the United States met little resistance, but did not resort to draconic measures to crush it.

After the initial military occupation, the United States then sent in its second army of occupation — teachers. Education was used as a colonial tool to inculcate ideas of White superiority and the glory of "free trade."

The U.S. invaders were portrayed as benevolent allies, and the resistance fighters were depicted as brigands. For generations of Filipinos and Puerto Ricans, their vision of the future became distorted and their nationalism undermined.

In 1946 the United States granted the Phillipines nominal independence. Through bogus pacts and treaties, it ensured that economic and military control essentially remained in U.S. hands.

A string of puppet regimes followed — Roxas, Quirino, Magsaysay, Garcia, Macapagal, Marcos, and now Aquino. Lip service was paid to nationalism, but no one broke the colonial and feudal chains that bound the Filipino people.

Insurrections were brutally suppressed, by massacres at Culatingan, Corregidor, Capas, Mendiola, and Tarlac, to name but a few. As in other Third World countries, the United States deployed counter-revolutionary agencies like the CIA and propaganda agents like the U.S. Information Service and the Peace Corps.

While Puerto Rico was never granted independence, a strong nationalist movement did take root for about 30 years. Figures like Pedro Albizu Campos established major followings. But here too, political repression, executions and incarcerations broke the back of the movement. Counter-insurgency operations like the FBI's COINTELPRO have prevented the pro-independence movement from staging a significant comeback.

The economic infrastructure was also drastically altered to ensure complete dependence on the United States. Puerto Rico is now a captive nation. Political independence no longer seems to constitute a viable reality.

There was yet another reason another why the United States had to control the Phillipines and Puerto Rico — its military bases.

The Clark Air Base and Subic Naval Base in the Phillipines were used to project U.S. firepower to China (to put down the nationalist Boxer Rebellion in 1900), Korea (during the Korean War), Indonesia (to support the rightist rebellion in 1958), Vietnam (during the Vietnam War) and, most recently, Iraq.

The U.S. naval base in Puerto Rico was used against the Dominican Republic, Granada, Haiti, Guatemala and Cuba, to name but a few instances. It also has strategic importance with respect to the Panama Canal.

But the nationalist and democratic aspirations of the Filipinos have not been crushed. This past February, a massive rally was staged to protest moves towards a new military bases agreement. Undoubtedly, the United States and its clients will respond as they always have — with force. The same pattern continues. . .

And so it is that from the "quail shoot" to the "turkey shoot," U.S. intervention to further its economic and military interests in the Third World, under the benevolent pretext of upholding democracy, continues.

North and South

It is unfortunate that many do not understand the United States' interests in the South (so-called "Third World"). U.S. interest implies that the overall policies of the United States should benefit its people. Otherwise, the government would indeed be worthy of contempt.

There are, of course, limits to power. If a magic wand could turn capital-scarce China with a fifth of the world's population sovereign, then U.S. corporations could live happily ever after.

However, in the absence of a magic wand, accomplishment of the above goal risks nuclear confrontation. This is unacceptable for self-preservation. Cost-effective intervention for furthering national interest is prudent. It is hypocritical to enjoy the benefits and then feel moral qualms about intervention.

Rabi Dutta

The above example in a somewhat roundabout way implies that the relationship between North and South lies in economics and the mechanics of power. Some, like the Brandt Commission, assume a perfect world and conclude that a symbiotic and reciprocally altruistic relationship is possible through trade.

Unfortunately, in an imperfect world trade is intimately connected with national security. The North cannot trade its advanced technology to the South for grass and peanuts. If they did so before they developed new technologies, the South would catch up and give them a hard time economically and possibly militarily. On the other hand, the North cannot sell things which the South already produces.

One solution is to control intellectual property rights. Monopolization of profits from medicine, record albums and books can go a long way. Some recalcitrant countries like India might of course demand royalties for the concept of zero in mathematics. Multilateral forums like GATT could be used to curb such pernicious trends.

A parallel solution is to control capital investment. Unfortunately, most of the South realizes that foreign corporations want to buy up existing businesses and set up fast-food chains, toothpaste plants and unsophisticated assembly stations. Nevertheless, the capital-starved South can be made to realize that half a loaf is better than no loaf — that is to say, some capital investment is better than none.

Strangely enough, even investing in low technology is full of pitfalls. When a country invests abroad it must have the necessary power to prevent expropriation of its investments. This can be achieved either through military power or through enormous economic clout in the world.

Expropriation can also be prevented to a certain extent by manufacturing the key components elsewhere. Nevertheless, even with restrictions, technology has a nasty habit of percolating relatively easily in the information age. This puts the onus very strongly on residuary military capacity.

One might counter that the South is irrelevant to the North because intra-North trade is monetarily worth a lot more than North-South trade. Monetary measurements are somewhat deceptive because the value of an item can be easily changed by the formation of cartels. Hence it is dangerous to allow such cartels or monopolies to emerge as an alternate source of power.

It must be stressed that a fundamental conflict exists between the North and South. It cannot be whitewashed by pious statements of well-meaning intellectuals. The North has roughly 15 percent of the world's population, and the South has 70 percent.

It is obvious that the North must maintain the existing gap either humanely through further technological development or through the exercise of power. In the context of national interest it is preposterous to think otherwise.

It is indeed possible to compromise on one's interests. However, once nations define them in terms of subjective moral principles, it becomes much harder to compromise. Unfortunately, for mankind (and mankind undoubtedly includes the North, although the tendency remains to form a brand of super-mankind) the North seems to be indulging in the dangerous game of offering moral arguments to justify actions in their national interest.

For the South, there is no panacea. In the context of the fundamental conflict of interest, the only solution that lies for the South is the long hard way of economic and military reconstruction to retain flexibility in all spheres of sovereign nationhood.

Reactions to collapse, future

By MADANMOHAN RAO
Collegian Staff

Last month, India's coalition government led by Prime Minister Chandra Shekhar collapsed.

S. Mayiladutarai, a UMass engineering junior who just returned from a visit to New Delhi, said, "During the recent Gulf War, the sentiments of the Indian people were with the people of Iraq, because they perceived the United States-led attack as an unfair and unjust show of imperial might against Iraq, a country which was India's closest Muslim ally.

"However, the Chandra Shekhar administration, for its own reasons, secretly allowed U.S. planes and ships to refuel in Indian territory. This created a tremendous outrage, especially since India has traditionally been a non-aligned country. This was exploited by rival parties for their own ends, and eventually led to the downfall of the government," Mayiladutarai continued.

"For the upcoming elections [in mid-May], each contending party is promising to solve one of the many problems racking the nation," he said. "The Congress party [led by former Prime Minister Rajiv Gandhi] has promised the Indian people stability.

"The Janata Dal [People's Party, led by former Prime Minister V.P. Singh] is promising more affirmative action for the lower castes. The Bharatiya Janata Party [Indian People's Party, led by L.K. Advani], says it will ensure that the interests of the country's Hindu majority are fulfilled.

Radharani Ray, a Mount Holyoke College economics sophomore from Calcutta, said, "U.S. interference in a Middle East issue was uncalled for, and India's support for the U.S. needed to be condemned.

"It would be desirable for a leftist government to come to power. It is also important for younger Indians in the U.S. to return to India, where their skills are most needed."

M. Subhash, a UMass student from Calcutta, said, "The decision to allow U.S. planes to refuel was motivated by a number of reasons: non-alignment in a unipolar, U.S.-dominated world is no longer useful, U.S. aid had to be facilitated, and an influential minister was on the payroll of a foreign intelligence agency."

Anuradha Iyengar, a Smith College economics and computer science senior from New Delhi, said, "It looks as if people will buy the Congress party's promises of stability. It is extremely disturbing and potentially disastrous that in secular India the BJP is exploiting Hindu fundamentalist sentiments."

Ahmad Ali Nawaz, a Hampshire College computer science student from Calcutta, said, "Even though the Congress party may win, it will collapse soon. The pursuit of religious fundamentalism, either Hindu or Muslim, by any party is pointless."

Avinash Varma, a Sunderland resident from Indore said, "It is unlikely that any one party will win a clear majority in the upcoming elections. It is also an alarming trend that the army is being increasingly called in to restore stability in political crises. Hopefully, an army strongman won't be tempted to seize power, although that is unlikely in the immediate future."

Varma was also disappointed at the lack of adequate local media coverage on developments in India, the world's largest democracy and second most populous nation.

Athena Kashyap, a Mount Holyoke College history senior from Bombay, said, "As far as political instability and internal strife are concerned, we are at the worst juncture in our history.

"Allowing foreign companies to move in and invest in India is not a good move in improving India's economy," Kashyap said. "It has been consistently observed that foreign companies mostly profit only the parent country, and not the host country."

D.K. Pradhan, an Amherst resident from Cuttack, however, said, "India should now pursue an aggressive policy for attracting foreign investment, and abandon the public sector economy as much as possible. To achieve this economic goal, India probably needs a pro-Western policy."

Barun Kar, a UMass electrical engineering student from Kharagpur, said, "India should build more ties with the West, while at the same time not indulging in total Westernization.

YOUR DAILY HOROSCOPE
By JEANE DIXON

ARIES (March 21-April 19) Home is where security generally can be found. Strangers who offer the most for the least often manage to take everything and give nothing in return. Do not be swayed by peer pressure.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) Your visionary ideas have considerable appeal today. Be outgoing and others will want to jump on your bandwagon. Tend to routine matters before beginning new projects. Romance looks mostly rosy.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20) Disquieting news may arrive today. If an old problem resurfaces, tackle it head-on. Solving a difficult situation once and for all will be worth the effort. Escape into an adventure film tonight.

CANCER (June 21-July 22) Business trips – short or long – may be taxing today. Concentrate on routine chores to clear the deck for a new project. Do not let an inconsiderate partner ruffle your feathers.

LEO (July 23-Aug 22) Keep your plans under wraps today. The less said or written, the better. Build bridge of friendship to your co-workers and neighbors. Curl up with a good book tonight.

VIRGO (Aug 23-Sept 22) Comparison shoppers should examine merchandise carefully; it may not be a bargain. Communications about your intentions are best avoided. Be discreet. Proceed slowly in a romantic situation.

LIBRA (Sept 23-Oct 22) Positive thinking will help you advance your business interests today. A change of employment, residence or partners may be necessary. Show more enthusiasm over a loved one's accomplishments.

SCORPIO (Oct 23-Nov 21) Your imagination could land you in hot water if you are unable to separate fact from fantasy. Old freinds are hoping to hear the latest news. Look forward to a lively evening.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov 22-Dec 21) Your co-workers are sensitive to your moods. Avoid taking advantage of their good nature if you have allowed yourself to fall behind at work; catch up.

CAPRICORN (Dec 22-Jan 19) A journey you had to postpone can now be undertaken with successful results. You profit from keeping certain plans under wraps. A loved one's special needs may require your making new concessions.

AQUARIUS (Jan 20-Feb 18) Your superior work skills are very much in evidence. Other people look to you for answers. Expect a raise or promotion in the near future. Higher ups are impressed with your [illegible] target juggernauts.

PISCES (Feb 19-March 20) What you say or do today can help set the stage for important family decisions and business developments. Speak candidly but avoid bickering. Your social life is on the upswing. Do some entertaining.

Dietel said she was greeted graciously by current NCAA Champion coach Roy Simmons.

"We looked sharp," Dietel said. "But to play them under the lights on their home turf — it was a real show of mental toughness."

The next match up is against the Naval Academy Prep school, in Newport, R.I., Saturday.

HoopContest V update

Thank you for your outstanding interest in HoopContest V, our annual NCAA tournament contest. We are still digging through the veritable mountain of entries, counting up points to find the lucky winners.

The big announcement will be made in Friday's Collegian as to just who those lucky winners are. We know you're curious, but please, refrain from calling the Collegian office to ask, "Did I win?" Your patience is appreciated.

Softball sweeps past Rhode Island with two shutouts

By FELICE COHEN
Collegian Correspondent

There may be a new show on television called 'The Flash,' but if you were down at Totman Field yesterday afternoon, you would have been witness to another flash, the University of Massachusetts softball team.

"UMass clocked us," said URI coach Sue Tougas. "They didn't make any mistakes."

Crushing Rhode Island 4-0, 9-0 in a double-header, the Minutewomen exhibited lightening bats accompanied by thunderous cheers as they increased their record to 8-7, while URI dropped to 1-13.

"I was very pleased with how the defense was holding up in the first game," said Umass coach Elaine Sortino. "They did a good job in all three areas; pitching, defense and hitting."

Taking the lead in the first game, UMass scored three runs in the first inning, forcing the URI pitching staff to adjust. URI's starting pitcher Kathleen Regan faced just six batters before being replaced by relief Jen Papanowicz in the first inning.

Junior Holly Aprile pitched for UMass, running her record to 4-4 on the season, striking out four on the way.

"Holly did a nice job," said Sortino. "She got herself out of some tough situations, no one got around on her." True. URI had only two hits in the first game, both by Rams' first baseman Barbara Arel, who went 2 for 3 with two singles.

Big hitters for UMass in the first game were shortstop Barbara Marean, who went 2 for 3 with two singles, first baseman Bonnie Schilling, who went 2 for 2 with two RBIs, outfielder Peggy Bush, who went 2 for 3 and Sherry Kuchinskas who went 1 for 2, with one double and two RBIs. In the second game UMass jumped out quickly again. By the middle of the third inning, UMass lead 6-0. Sealing the game in the fifth inning, the Minutewomen went on a hitting frenzy adding three more runs.

UMass batters were getting more connections than an AT&T telephone operator. Outfielder Cherie DellAnno went 3 for 5, had two singles, one double and one RBI; second baseman Jen Miller, went 3 for 3, with three singles; centerfielder Aprile, went 2 for 3, with two singles and one RBI; thirdbaseman Rachel Lawson went 2 for 4, with one single, one double and two RBIs; and Marean went 1 for 2, with a big triple that gave her two RBIs.

"We were hitting the ball pretty well," said Sortino who added she was very pleased with her team's all-around performance on the day.

On the mound, Darlene Claffey won the second game, pushing her record to 4-3. She had six strike outs and walked only one.

"Darlene played very well," Sortino said.

But for the Rams, their pitching was the only thing moving on the field. Junior hurler Megan O'Neill started on the mound for the Rams, but was replaced in the third inning by Papanowicz, after the Minutewomen started hitting everything in sight. Then in the fifth, as the Minutewomen continued to crank out hits, bringing the score to 9-0, Regan stepped back up to the mound for the second time that day.

"Our pitching was extremely inadaquate, and we didn't hit the ball at all," said Tougas. The Rams were hitless in the second game. Putting the situation in a new light Tougas added, "It was just a bad day at the office."

The Minutewomen be at Hartford for a double-header at 3 p.m. Thursday

UMass pitcher Holly Aprille won the first of two games yesterday, as the Minutewomen swept Rhode Island, 4-0, 9-0 at Totman field. The softball team improved to 8-7.

NHL playoffs: Blues, Bruins headed for '70 Cup rematch

By GREG SUKIENNIK
Collegian Staff

How do I know that spring is here?

Is it the abundance of mud on campus lawns? Frequent sightings of copulating ducks? Sunbathers at the Southwest Horseshoe?

No, no, no. I'm certain that spring has sprung when the National Hockey League play-offs have begun. You can have your ice cream and suntan lotion — give me a pair of skates, a Zamboni machine and an arena organist who plays "We Will Rock You" during face-offs.

If you think like me, then here is a quick look at the 1991 NHL play-off picture, along with a few predictions as to who will skate off with the cherished Stanley Cup.

Adams Division — Last year, the Hartford Whalers made Boston Bruins' fans squirm before succumbing in seven games (thank you, Ray Bourque). Gang Green won't be so lucky this time, thanks to Whaler management, who traded Ron Francis and Ulf Samuelson to Pittsburgh. Hell, what did they need their team leader and best defenseman for anyway? Take heart, Bruins fans; you won't be hearing much of that stupid Whaler fight song this spring.

The Bruins will then face the Montreal Canadiens, who should easily dispatch the underacheiving Buffalo Sabres (what a disappointment they were).

The Bruins have owned Montreal all season long, but if the inconsistancies that have dogged the Bruins pop up, there could be trouble. But I don't think so . . . Bruins in six.

Patrick Division — Take four teams, drop them in a hat and pick one. That's what happens every time the playoffs hit the Patrick, the NHL's version of The Twilight Zone. Pittsburgh looks like the class of the Patrick, even with top scorer Mark Recchi's season in doubt with an injured knee. The addition of Francis and Samuelson, along with The Magnificent One himself, Mario Lemieux, make the Pens prohibitive favorites to make the Wales Conference finals for the first time ever.

Commentary

But don't bet your lunch money on the Pens just yet. Either New Jersey or Washington could easily rise up and surprise everyone. The New York Rangers have enough firepower and goaltending to knock off Pittsburgh as well, if they can pull out of their recent nosedive.

However, the Capitals have been surging as of late — if the Penguins choke, look for Washington to "Capitalize" and return to the Wales finals.

Norris Division — St. Louis and Chicago, Chicago and St. Louis. All year these two rivals have been slugging it out for supremacy in the Norris. Unless Detriot can surprise the Blues, or Minnesota catches the Black Hawks napping, there will be at least four more grudge matches between these two teams.

A potential Blues-Black Hawks series should have hockey fans drooling. Do you like scorers? St. Louis' Brett Hull, Adam Oates and Paul Cavelinni and Chicago's Steve Larmer and Jeremy Roenick should provide plenty of fireworks.

If you admire great goaltending, check out Chicago's Eddie Belfour, who has been unstoppable all season long. How about intimidating, bone-crushing hockey? Chicago's Dave (Chucky) Manson is as scary as they come.

I must admit, though, that as much as I respect the Black Hawks, I dislike them. They're a bunch of goons who would rather beat you down than beat you. Meanwhile, the Blues are a more talented, skill-oriented team. If they can stay focused and disciplined in the face of Chicago's hit squad, they should prevail in seven awesome games.

Smythe Division — Three of four teams in the Smythe playoffs — Los Angeles, Calgary and Edmonton — have legitimate shots at making the Campbell Conference finals. Vancouver barely squeaked into the playoffs and poses little threat. Which leaves the Kings to face the Calgary, who should beat an Oiler team that has been inconsistant all year. Because Wayne Gretzky finally has a supporting cast in Tony Granato and Steve Duchesne, and because it's hard to root against any team with Jay Miller, the Kings will finally wear the Smythe crown.

Now for the conference finals. The Bruins have more playoff experience than the Penguins, better goaltending and home ice, so take the B's in six.

On the left coast, assuming that St. Louis will get past Chicago, Hull and Gretzky will get all the media attention while the Blues' supporting cast quietly steals the show with superior depth, beating the Kings in seven games.

And the Stanley Cup? In 1970, a defenseman named Bobby Orr carried Boston past St. Louis.

Twenty-one years later, a defenseman named Bourque will repeat the feat, giving the Black and Gold the Cup that evaded them in 1988 and 1990. Brett Hull may get his 100-point season, but the Bruins will get the parade.

See you in downtown Boston in May.

Lacrosse team dons some patriotism

Senior tri-captain Rick Senatore leads the 1-1 Gorillas into lacrosse action today against Brown on Boyden Hill. The game, UMass' first home game of the season, starts at 3 p.m.

Today you may notice that the lacrosse team is donning American flags on their helmets.

Jumping on the patriotism bandwagon, tri-captain Rick Mullins bought the stickers when the team was in Baltimore during spring break. The general consensus of the team was to support the American troops in the Persian Gulf by wearing the flags on their helmets.

Like most Americans who have been personally touched by the war, Mullins said he felt it especially important for the team to don the flag. His brother-in-law-to-be is still in Saudi Arabia, and when he returns, he and his sister will marry.

"I wanted to show my support for the troops and so did the guys on the team," he said. "It's not to show we support the war, but the troops' efforts there."

Coach Ted Garber said he noticed most college teams across the country had American flags somewhere on their uniforms and supported the team's effort.

"It's just a nice gesture," he said. "We're all touched by this thing somehow."

JV lax wins at Syracuse

By THOMAS A. GEORGE
Collegian Correspondent

Syracuse's B-Team got peeled, as the Orangemen lost to the University of Massachusetts JV-Club, 10-5.

Midfielders Paul Cronin and Sean Dacus snaggled hat tricks to lead the JV Gorilla squad to a 2-3 record.

The game was played on the Orangemen's Coyne Field under the lights. The temperature hovered around freezing, creating miserable conditions said head coach Judy Dietel.

"We came out revved, rocked and rolled, and put it away," she said.

UMass was up 1-0 at the end of the first, 2-1 at the half and 8-4 at the end of the third.

The man-down team went three for four, and freshman Chris Boorman captured 13 of the 15 faceoffs.

The rest of the scoring came from attack Mike White (2 goals, 1 assist); midfielder Bill Robinson (1 goal, 2 assists); attack Shane Carter (1 goal); and midfielder Reid Russel (1 assist).

MASSACHUSETTS V. BROWN

By ADRIEN MATT
Collegian Staff

Today promises to be sunny with highs in the upper 50s.

That's spring weather.

Today the University of Massachusetts lacrosse team hosts Brown at 3 p.m. on the Hill.

Now that's a spring afternoon at UMass.

UMass enters the game at a tentative 1-1. And although they faced the likes of Long Island, North Hempstead and Mt. Washington Lacrosse Clubs during spring break, head coach Ted Garber said he didn't witness the same caliber of play from the team until the second quarter of the St. John's game last Saturday.

The team returned from Long Island and Baltimore knowing they beat North Hempstead (14-8) and Mt. Washington (13-8), dropping only one of three tough games to Long Island (12-11).

They returned north to face a 5-0 Cornell squad. A squad which played all five of its games at home. A squad which had a signed contract to play at UMass this season, but reneged, claiming a road trip to Amherst was too tough on the demands of Ivy League student athletes.

The result was a less than desirable 17-9 loss.

St. John's took on UMass at their home, another AstroTurf field. They were in a 1-4 slump and they looked it on the field. UMass returned from Long Island 1-1.

Brown has played over five games suit side. Five of those games have counted and five of those results were wins.

The Bruins began their season two weeks before UMass and in the process beat Boston College (23-6), C.W. Post (18-8), Adelphi (15-10), Providence (18-8), and squeaked by Loyola (14-13).

Those are tough numbers to face up to at your first home game of the season.

"I'd rather play teams that have won games than lost," said Garber. "It means more when you beat them."

Garber, in his first year at the helm of the lacrosse program, coached lacrosse and soccer at New Hampshire prior to picking up where his father, Dick, left off. During the regular season match against Brown last year, Dick Garber clinched his 300th career win, the ninth college coach to do so — the only coach to do so with strictly collegiate wins.

For years, the older Garber had been referred to as "The Goose," and upon anticipating the win, the victorious team distributed and wore T-shirts reading "Happy 300th, Goose" on the front with "Brown Went Down" on the back.

The final result of the teams' second meeting that year was no cause for celebration. The team lost to Brown in the first round of the NCAA Division I Playoffs.

Which team faces off against Brown today remains to be seen.

The attack is lead by senior Jim McAleavey, who is a mere seven points away from breaking a UMass career assists record that has stood since 1977. The tri-captain is 55 points shy of breaking the career points mark.

The midfield consists of senior tri-captain Rick Senatore, senior Jim Kushner, senior Francis Pepe, senior Ed O'Callaghan and junior Matt Garber.

Junior transfer from Herkimer CC, Kevin O'Connor, will face off for the Gorillas, as senior Vin D'Angelo is out indefinately due to a ruptured disk in his lower back.

Junior midfielder John Schlipt is recovering from the only other reported injury on the team, a broken tarsal in his left hand.

Both senior Ted Kellerman and junior Ray Suris have seen time in goal thus far this season, against the lacrosse clubs, Cornell and St. John's.

"We've got to play with confidence," Garber said. "[Brown has] great sticks, they're good athletes."

Bruin junior Darren Lowe returns, with 15 goals and 21 assists tucked away. He also boasts 173 career points. Need I repeat: He is only a sophomore.

Classmate Andy Towers has traditionally been Lowe's main target, with 13 goals and 6 assists. Senior Jay McMahon and sophomore transfer (Vancouver College) Oliver Marti also have 13 goals with 3 and 2 assists, respectively. Towers has 109 career points while McMahon has 103.

Brown is headed by Dom Starsia, a past contender for the UMass coaching job. He is assisted by Paul Hooper and Peter Lasagna, a GM for the New England Blazers.

Trustees raise next semester's fees by $79

By TAMIR LIPTON
Collegian Staff

Undergraduates at the University of Massachusetts will pay $79 more in fees next semester, the Board of Trustees voted yesterday at a meeting in Boston.

"These fees were arrived at in an attempt to keep the increases as low as possible," said President-Chancellor Joseph Duffey, who will leave UMass after this semester to be president of American University in Washington D.C.

The increase breaks down as follows:

- $35 for building inspection
- $18 for health care
- $5 for fine arts
- $1 in student activities fee
- $20 athletic fee

"The difficult thing about the present time is that we don't know much about next year's budget," Duffey said. "I hope the Legislature will provide a more adequate budget for next year."

The housing fee will increase by $104 but that will be offset by the elimination of the $174 telecommunications fee, including the fee for voice mail, which will now be free. Students will now pay for phones through the housing fee at a rate of $15 per month.

"The housing fee going up is actually a bargain, when you look at what is being taken away," said Student Trustee Angus McQuilken, referring to the elimination.

"The University has to keep running itself," he said. "Students shouldn't be too upset about that increase."

A committee was selected to choose a new chancellor, said McQuilken. The committee will meet April 8 on campus with different groups. A formal recommendation for an interim chancellor will be made in Boston on April 22.

Also yesterday, the state Board of Regents, which oversees the state's 29 colleges and universities, said a Weld administration report calling for higher college tuitions and the merger of five campuses is the "first positive sign" on education from the governor.

But Paul Marks, the board's interim cahncellor, and Regents Chairman Paul Tsongas said even after education reorganization, the state still needs the board of citizens, which Weld has recommended abolishing.

NOW seeks equal benefits for non-traditional families

By DAVID RIVERA
Collegian Correspondent

NORTHAMPTON — The Northampton chapter of the National Organization for Women held an open forum Tuesday night to discuss creating an ordinace that would assure benefits and rights for non-traditional families.

Twenty percent of Americans live in traditional families, a married heterosexual couple with children, according to statistics provided by NOW representatives.

A domestic partnership ordinance would assure that the other 80 percent, which includes homosexual, bisexual and unmarried heterosexual couples, would receive the rights and benefits denied to them because of marriage laws, said Catherine French, chairperson of Boston NOW's lesbian rights task force.

"Gay and lesbian couples have been denied visitation rights in an emergency trauma situation because they are not immediate family; such an ordinance would guarantee that wouldn't happen," said Linda Osten, co-coordinator for the Northampton NOW chapter.

French spoke to about 25 people from Northampton. The Boston NOW chapter has introduced a domestic partnership ordinance which has been titled, "Family Protection Act."

"We had a hard time with the actual wording of our ordinance because we had to redefine the word family, and just when we thought we had the perfect definition, someone would bring up an other family situation and we would have to re-write the whole thing," French said.

Osten said Northampton NOW is in the begining stages of such an ordinance and that they are trying to gather a coalition of groups to meet the needs of the Northampton area.

"Right now we're creating a base, we don't have any real time schedule, but we have all the ordinances that have passed around the country, and we're going over strategies," Osten said.

One of the 25 people who attended one person said she doubted that the Northampton city council would pass such an ordinance because of possible negative reaction during the election year.

Insurance companies might also be an obstacle for the ordinance because they have the power to set the guidelines for benefits, French said.

"Even if you get support for an ordinace, some insurance companies will not want to provide benefits," French said. "In that case you might have to think about self insurance."

If the Boston ordinance passes it would not only protect gay and lesbian couples, but also family members who have lived together, such as brothers and sisters, Osten said.

"This ordinance would benefit all non-traditional families, heterosexual, homosexual, and bisexual," she said. "I don't know what people will feel. We see it as a civil rights issue and I hope that it's seen as that."

Secrecy shrouds rape charge at Kennedy home

By SANDRA WALEWSKI
The Associated Press

PALM BEACH, Fla. — Palm Beach is abuzz over a woman's allegations that she was raped at the Kennedy family compound.

"I think it's kind of unfair, all of this innuendo, without any facts as to what happened," George Preston, who lives down the street from the walled Kennedy estate, said Tuesday. "We don't even know that this is true."

Police have filed no charges and have refused to say whether anyone associated with the Kennedy family is a suspect in the alleged rape Saturday.

"It's deja vu for the family. I'm enthralled with them and everything that happens to them," said Ruth Kane, visiting from nearby Boca Raton. "I find them fascinating...not always admirable."

A spokesman for U.S. Sen. Edward Kennedy issued a statement Monday saying the Massachusetts Democrat spent the Easter weekend with his family at the Palm Beach estate, but was not involved in the incident.

"We haven't made public any particular name as ruled out or in," said police spokesman Craig Gunkel. "It's a delicate case when you talk about sexual battery — you don't want to release something that could hinder your investigation."

Gunkel said alcohol was involved, but he would not elaborate.

Local newspapers quoted Stuart Lichenstein, manager of the Palm Beach Lounge Au Bar, as saying Kennedy, son Patrick and nephew William Kennedy Smith were at the nightspot Friday night.

Patrick Kennedy, a 24-year-old Rhode Island state representative, said he knew nothing about the incident and was asleep at the time of the alleged rape.

"The girl is not someone I know. She was not a guest of mine. I assume she was a guest of one of my cousins," he said.

Smith, 30, a student at Georgetown University School of Medicine, could not immediately be reached for comment. He stayed with friends Tuesday night, the landlord at his Washington D.C. carriage house told the Palm Beach Post.

Smith is the son of Ted Kennedy's older sister Jean Kennedy Smith and the late Stephen Smith.

Police Chief Joe Terlizzese said he was not satisfied that investigators have been able to question all members of the Kennedy family who might have information on the case.

The woman, identified as a 30-year-old resident of Palm Beach County, said she was raped about 4 a.m. Saturday. She contacted police about 2 p.m.

Investigators sent to the estate that afternoon found that the man accused had left town, Terlizzese said.

Terlizzese said the woman told investigators she met the senator and his party for drinks and later went to have 'a couple of cocktails' at the estate.

Brown relishes sudden death, 13-12

By ADRIEN MATT
Collegian Staff

In just over one minute Andy Towers and Oliver Marti decided the sudden death situation in the University of Massachusetts-Brown lacrosse game, and the 13-12 decision wasn't a popular one for the home team.

Along with other rule changes, sudden death was implemented this year to settle ties at the collegiate level. It consists of two four-minute halves.

"UMass could've beat us today," said midfielder Towers. "We're fortunate we pulled it out."

The game was capped by two of Brown's most contributory players, Towers and Vacouver College transfer, attackman Marti. Towers dominated UMass' midi Kevin O'Connor in faceoffs, winning 21 of 28, and contributed one goal in regulation. Marti finished the game with a team-high five goals and one assist.

"It was a complete team effort," said the humble Canadian. Gorilla Jim Kushner boasted a game-high six goals — all of which were unassisted — and one assist. He and Mark Millon set the pace for a quick, offensive game by scoring three goals in the first quarter, the only shots netted in that quarter.

"They were very smart with the ball, very patient," said Brown coach Dom Starsia. "After beating Loyola (14-13), it would have been easy for us to be complacent, but we always expect a good game when it's Brown-UMass."

"We can play well," said UMass coach Ted Garber. "I think we proved that today."

The UMass offense was completely shut off in the second quarter, as the defense allowed six Brown goals. Jay McMahon scored twice in the second but wasn't heard from for the remainder of the game. The half ended at 6-3, in Brown's favor.

"Today we were patient," Starsia said. "Towers was the key to a string of six [goals] in a row. But then we knew they were gonna make a run for it in the second half."

And try they did. Tri-captain Rick Senatore netted the first goal of the second half within one minute of the whistle. Kushner follwed his lead 30 seconds later. Brown responded with a Marti-Gutheil combination, answered by two consecutive Mike Caine goals, both unassisted.

With under four minutes remaining in the quarter, Kushner netted another to pull UMass ahead for the first time since the first quarter at 8-7. Brown immediately reacted as Marti and Jim Strub each scored unassisted and ended the third quarter at an 9-8 Brown clip.

A Marti-Lowe combination was answered by a Kushner goal, then a Jim McAleavey-Kushner combo which tied it up to 10. Sam Jackson scored unassisted and Lowe

Bush shunning questions on Iraq

The Associated Press

BOSTON — Soon after President Bush arrived for his Florida Keys vacation, he was plunged into total darkness. The power failure seemed to mirror the murkiness cloaking his postwar intentions in the Persian Gulf.

When the lights went out, Secret Service agents grabbed for flashlights and held them aloft long enough for the presidential party to find candles and matches, according to White House aides. The power was restored in about an hour and the Bushes in the meantime enjoyed a candlelit dinner.

Yet administration officials have shed little light in recent days on U.S. policy now that Iraqi President Saddam Hussein's government is ruthlessly putting down civil rebellions. And Bush, the one-time head of the CIA, seems to have no qualms about keeping the nation in the dark.

"I feel no reason to answer anybody, relaxing here," Bush shot back at reporters who, as he golfed Tuesday, asked if he wanted an opportunity to comment on a suggestion by Senate Majority Leader George Mitchell (D-Maine) that U.S. forces be allowed to shoot down Iraqi helicopters.

It was the third day in a row that Bush had rebuffed questions on Iraq.

The president and his advisers have been vague and even sometimes mysterious on the subject of what's next in that rebellion-torn nation.

For instance, the administration did not announce, nor would officials at first discuss, national security adviser Brent Scowcroft's trip last week to the Middle East. A British newspaper reported he had met with Iranian officials to discuss, among other things, U.S. hostages being held in Lebanon.

Later, administration officials confirmed the trip but suggested it was a mission to Saudi Arabia to confer with Saudi officials on the U.S. position of neutrality.

Bush on Tuesday refused to say whether Scowcroft had visited other countries. Still, he said the general's Tuesday-Thursday trip had been "very tiring."

It was not the first time Scowcroft had been dispatched on a secret mission. In 1989 he made two secret and controversial trips to China despite a ban imposed by Bush on top-level U.S.-Chinese contacts.

The administration's apparent lack of clear focus on Iraq may reflect the fact that, while the administration had elaborate plans for getting into the Gulf War, there wasn't much advance planning on getting out of it.

Recycling program grows on campus

By DAVID MASSEY
Collegian Staff

It appears that students at the University of Massachusetts are beginning to put their newspapers where they belong — in the blue recycling boxes on each floor of every residence hall.

As of March 9, students in Field Residence Hall in the Orchard Hill Residential Area were winning the Blue Box Brigade recycling competition. Residents recycled an average of 4.39 pounds per person, according to the results.

Webster, also in Orchard Hill, came in second with 3.541 pounds per person, and Chadbourne, in Central, clinched the third spot with 3.4 pounds per person.

Overall, Orchard Hill leads the way, followed by Northeast, Central, Southwest North, Sylvan, and in last place, Southwest South, organizers said.

This competition, sponsored by the UMass Housing Services Residential Recycling Program, is designed to determine which residence hall on campus can recycle the greatest amount of newsprint.

Organizers said the low number of recyclers in Southwest may be due to the higher concentration of freshmen there who may not be as aware of environmental issues as their cross-campus peers. The exception has been Prince, a residence hall for older students. Residents there have collected about 2.74 pounds per person, organizers said.

"Please prove us wrong, we know that Southwest residents care," said Rochelle Chambless, promotions coordinator for the recycling project.

Sylvan held second place consistently last year, and Larry Boyer, recycling coordinator for the Northeast and Sylvan residence areas, the drop is "unexplained."

The recycling rate is computed by

ANONYMOUS EXHIBIT — This photograph, depicting a struggle inside Israel, was one of several photos placed by an unknown person beside a more positive exhibit on Israel. Contaminated water in Belchertown schools

The Associated Press

BELCHERTOWN — Environmental officials ordered a state institution for the retarded and two elementary schools to keep people away from drinking water yesterday after it was contaminated by an overdose of treatment chemicals.

John Higgins, regional director for the state Department of Environmental Protection, issued the ban on drinking and washing in the water after finding it had been contaminated with an overdose of potassium permanganate. The bleaching agent, which can cause burns in high concentrations, is used in low concentrations to remove iron and manganese from the water system, he said.

"Right now, we don't know how high the concentrations are or the possible hazard," Higgins said. But, he said, the concentration was enough to turn the water pink and alert officials at the Belchertown State School, who called his office yesterday morning. "We haven't had any reports of injuries," he said.

Affected were the state school, which has about 200 retarded residents, the 700-student Chestnut Hill Elementary School, across the street, which shares the same water supply, a smaller elementary school on the state school property and a day nursery, he said.

Collins gets endorsement

Bromery praises the 'strident' UMass grad

By JEFF CLEARY
Collegian Correspondent

The former chancellor of public higher education, Dr. Randolph Bromery, endorsed James G. Collins yesterday for Congress in a speech to about 100 people on the Student Union steps.

Collins, a 1968 UMass graduate, is running for the 1st Congressional District seat formerly held by the late Silvio O. Conte.

From 1972 to 1986, Collins represented the 3rd Hampshire District in the state House of Representatives. He resigned to serve as chancellor of higher education but was ousted by the state Board of Regents two months later after former Gov. Michael Dukakis criticized the search process.

Bromery, who served as chancellor from April 1990 to March 31, 1991, described Collins as "strident" during his tenure in the House and said that Collins' desire to fight for higher education is needed at the federal level. He said Collins also would serve as a much-needed advocate for minority students.

"We need a lot more vocal representation of minorities who are misconstrued in Boston," he said. Bromery also served as chancellor of the Amherst campus from 1971 to 1979 and continues to serve as Commonwealth professor of geophysics.

Collins opposes current federal legislation that would repeal affirmative action scholarships and cut back on a number of other federal funds which he said will prevent 1.1 million students from returning to school next fall.

He also opposes the state's tuition retention policy and Weld's job furlough plan.

"I'm happy to rock the boat," Collins said. "When I go into a battle, I go in to win."

EDITORIAL/OPINION

The opinions on this page are those of the individual writer or cartoonist and do not necessarily reflect the views of the Collegian or the University unless otherwise noted.

Don't use The New Africa House to advertise Israel

Some people would have others believe that the photographs of 'Glimpses of Israel' are harmless and non-political. It is true that the exhibit is similar to the type of pictures presented in brochures and travel sections of a newspaper, intended to increase visits to these countries. To achieve this purpose, such photos are necessarily selected to depict only harmony, beauty, and peace. Indeed 'Glimpses' would succeed in such a purpose, at least for certain unthinking individuals at whom it is targeted. This is evidenced by these remarks made concerning the exhibit –

Asha Mehrling-Alexander

"Your work is a potpourri of all the beautiful places, and faces of the Middle East;" "Unbelievable pictures, I can't wait to go!" These comments indicate that we should indeed hop on the next El Al flight.

Okay, so the country is beautiful. So is South Africa. But not for everyone there. People would be up in arms if an exhibit "Glimpses of South Africa" was shown, particularly in the New Africa House, depicting only the gorgeous countryside and prosperous children, entirely ignoring the turmoil of the country, and the brutalization of the people.

The point is that, if indeed this is an entirely nonpolitical exhibit, it does not belong in New Africa House. The New Africa House was obtained for Third World Students politically in order to provide a place to dialogue about Third World issues, to convene with other Third World students; a place, as one student puts it, 'to breathe.' An exhibit in The New Africa House is inherently political. It portrays views/art which have not been and should be seen. Hence the scenes in this exhibit's photos are perceived as those which should be seen. These are the scenes which are important enough to be shown – by extension, the others are not. And, all of us in this country know how effectively issues can be controlled by simply not allowing them to be seen.

One cannot divorce the exhibit from reality. Today when one hears 'Israel,' one thinks instantly of the Israeli-Palestinian conflict which is being continued by the state. The advertisement for this exhibit mistakenly indicated that it was sponsored by Hillel and The New Africa House. Intentional or not, this gives the Five College community the impression that Third World students support the policies of the state of Israel.

While the Third World community is by no means unified in its views or in its stand on Israel – as evidenced in the media – the community would be foolish to allow their apparent endorsement of the state of Israel, through the use of The New Africa House, to go unchallenged.

The stated goal of 'Glimpses of Israel' is to 'reach students' emotions as well as their intellect.' Again, the goal, for those who look at the exhibit with a critical mind, has been achieved. the exhibit not only reaches, but offends our emotional, and intellectual sensibilities.

Asha Mehrling-Alexander is a UMass student

We have it good. And bad.

Last week the UMass gay community was rocked by the news that Jason McDonald, a gay freshman, was outed to his father by other gay rights activists.

It was not a political "outing" like those we've read about concerning closeted Hollywood stars and homophobic politicians. Rather, it was a malicious act perpetuated by three people who had a grudge against McDonald and wanted to hit him where it hurt.

Trystan Skeigh

The news has had a humbling effect on us all. As a community, gays on this campus have been forced to re-group and re-examine our priorities and our goals. It is evident that there are internal problems that must not be ignored.

And frankly, I believe that this is the best thing that could ever happen to the GLB community on this campus.

For gays, unlike other groups, it is crucial that we support each other. For many of us, our friends have become our family, because we've been disowned at home. As one LBGA member expressed so eloquently, "I was born with my biological family, but I chose the members of my gay family."

The internalized homophobia that manifested itself in this outing is just another aspect of the oppression gays struggle with in this society. It is a simple case of gays absorbing social judgments from outside and allowing them to attack us from within.

Guys live in a world that tells us we are wrong, that we're sick, sinful, evil, akin to "child-molesters" as Ted Maravelias put it in The Minuteman.

These words, which many on this campus believe individuals have a First Amendment right to utter with impunity, can wreak havoc on the emotional and psychological well-being of gay people.

These words, which many of us have heard all of our lives, often leave negative imprints deep within us that cause a great deal of anguish when we discover that we are homosexual. In my home state of Kansas, the buckle of the midwestern Bible Belt, self-hatred was painfully evident within my college gay community six years ago.

Most of the gay students I knew came from Christian families, and most believed they were going to hell because they were gay. And most had attempted suicide at least once because they couldn't shake the guilt that had been imposed on them by their upbringing and the judgmental society in which they lived. Imagine – these folks lived in a world filled with Ted Maraveliases, a world with no administrative support for gay students, no LBGA, no university non-discrimination code.

In that world, if a Jason McDonald had been outed, he would have been expelled from campus by the administration, as well as disowned.

The fact that here at UMass the LBGA has rallied in support of Jason McDonald, and that he has received offers of financial, and emotional support from many within this university, including staff, faculty, and students, has reminded me once again how lucky gays are to have a strong GLB community at UMass, and how important it is that we work to protect and strengthen it.

I hope that the GLB community is willing to work on issues of internalized homophobia within the community, and I also hope the GLB community can use the lesson provided by the betrayal of Jason McDonald to help us renew and deepen our commitment to each other as out gay students. If we support each other, with tolerance, love, and forgiveness, we can withstand anything this homophobic society throws our way.

Trystan Skeigh is a Collegian columnist

The following types of people should be found and killed

Recently, a friend told me that my columns contained too many suggestions and not enough opinion. I pointed out that the Collegian published columns on what I hate and what I like. I received ridicule from friends for simply writing about myself. I switched to trying to solve problems instead of venting anger. However, I am temporarily out of good ideas for my Thursday collumn and so I scraped this piece together.

Frankly, boys and girls, pals and gals, society is definitely sliding downhill. As American morality disintegrates at an alarming rate, crime has taken on a bizarre new twist. My subscription to the Times has exposed me to a most intriguing facet of the wide world of crime. Instead of reading about simple muggings and indecent exposure, I discovered the story of a man who tried to steal a car. It was a police car and the cop was still inside (The thief was caught). Last week I read about a teen mother who abandoned her child in a trash compacter. That's sick.

Above and beyond this general trend of degrading evil that pervades our society, it seems that some folks want to reinstate the death penalty. To them I responded: Oy vey, like that would solve anything? Murdering murderers is still murder.

"Oh no, sir," replied the petitioners. "We don't want to execute murderers, per se. We have other societal criminals in mind." As these loonies continued their discourse and their plans unfolded, I was drawn to their group. A partial list of capital offenders is listed below:

Mark B. Adler

The prime offenders are the bicyclists who ride their bikes on the sidewalk and zip past you from behind, missing you by an inch. As you walk past Herter Hall, you suddenly hear that noise coming from behind. If you turn to look you may get in their way so all you can do is pray. These dudes are nasty and they enjoy watching the hair on the back of you neck stand up. Their kind is the reason for the death penalty. In their case, electrocution.

Speaking of sidewalks, those UMass delivery trucks that drive on the walkways frighten me. They creep up behind me and follow me until I get out of their way. Pedestrians are expected to move for trucks on the sidewalk. Great big boulders have been wisely placed by the side of the sidewalks to prevent trucks from driving on the lawn. Damn good idea. Those drivers should be shot.

I hate people who devalue good causes. An imbalance in the ratio of women to men in any given situation is not coterminus with sexism. If you don't like rap, that doesn't make you racist. If you gag on gefilte fish, you're not necessarily anti-Semitic. These wacked-out charges are not only slanderous, but they also degrade real charges of racism, sexism and the like.

Hypocritical dorm residents would be the next to go when the revolution comes. So many students gripe that they are not treated like adults; and yet, before they finish speaking, they behave like children. Nobody would notice if we poisoned their food ...

The litter on campus has become more visible during Spring: gum wrappers, dead pens, beer bottles, old condoms, and especially cigarette butts. Every day is Earth Day. Burying litterers alive would serve justice.

Okay, I hear you. The death penalty is a bit drastic, and I'm as guilty as everybody else. I have had a bad week. Eight grad schools have rejected me so far, and I'm down to my to safety schools. Off with their collective heads.

Mark B. Adler is a Collegian columnist

What if state workers made ends meet the way Governor Weld does?

An open letter to Governor Weld, State Senators, and State Representatives

We have collected questions from several state employees who are experiencing problems. Because you and your staff of experts have experienced similar problems and arrived at solutions, we would like to utilize your expertise in solving their problems. We would appreciate your responses to the following questions at your earliest convenience.

- I'm having financial problems. Which laws do you recommend that I override to balance my personal budget?
- I have contractual obligations about which I've changed my mind. In what way can I alter my existing contract to implement changes beneficial to myself?
- Because I have mismanaged my affairs I find myself in an economic crisis. Which minority group do you recommend that I force to compensate for my situation?
- I have an employee for who I have implemented a private pension fund. What would be the most effective way to borrow from this fund without her permission?
- I am a member of a group responsible for making major decisions based upon the needs of many people. How can I effectively hide my bad decisions and avoid dealing with controversial issues?
- For the past several years things have not been going my way. How can I best implement a policy which allows me to do whatever I please (present laws notwithstanding) without regard to any consequences?

Thank you for your consideration?

Walt Smolenski Jr. and Jim Hill

Supporting education takes more than taxes

"No more pencils, no more books, no more teacher's dirty looks!"

This may be the chant of UMass students this spring as non-vital state employees are required to take a two-week furlough.

Apparently, the government feels that educators are non-vital. What an outrageous idea! "How can the government do this," I thought when I heard the news.

Then I got to wondering. This is America, where government follows the lead of the people. Can it be that people in general feel that education is non-vital? Now, before you all jump up and down shouting "Of course we think it's vital! What do you think we've been rallying for all this time?" I want to you to ask yourself these simple questions.

- How much respect do you think educators deserve?
- How much do you give them?
- Have you ever considered becoming an educator? Why or why not?
- What are your attitudes towards people who take their education seriously?
- How do you react to the phrase "love of learning?"
- How many classes do you skip and why?
- Do you encourage others to stay in or go to school?
- Would you volunteer time and/or money to your town's school system whether or not you have children in the system?

I ask these questions because supporting education is more than just paying your taxes and voting for the right candidates. It also includes your attitudes towards education itself and your willingness to give a little back to the system you probably grew up under. If enough people support education in these ways, then no government should be able to do what ours is doing. The leaders would be forced to recognize that we the people believe that education is vital and should be strengthened for the sake of future generations of students.

Views on Public Higher Education...

"It sucks. We are the future leaders of this country, and you would think that some people would want us to be educated. Without funding from the state we won't be able to get the education we so desperately need."

Catherine A. Kirchman (student)

I think that education will be for the rich and wealthy and the ones that can't afford it will aid the rest. I might as well have gone to American University.

Damion (student)

HEY, WHERE ELSE CAN WE GO BUT UP NOW!?

BRYAN RUSCH STUDENT.

The state government has truly SHIT on higher education and it stinks. These people are the future of America & deserve better treatment.

M. P.

Employee.

My response to higher education is that it really screws my educational life. Since I don't have money to afford increases & neither does my mother and of course my father being a member of the neo conservative society who does not care to help my working class. It's all really

The lack of commitment towards Public Higher Ed. causes one to pause and question the state's overall commitment to its Residents. By continuously trashing and slashing away at our Public colleges and universities, the cliché of "Elitism" is not only perpetuated but reinforced. If the cuts to Higher Ed. and financial aid are continued, people such as myself will be denied of the only access we have towards education and betterment as a whole. I find the states attitude disheartening and quite depressing.

Student worker - March Marika Rallis

The State Govt is backing under pressure from Private Colleges (MIT, Harvard, Tufts, Mt. Holyoke, Wellesley, Smith, Amherst, Boston University, Boston College etc. etc.) to Sabotage the competition from Public higher ed. They're afraid of Quality Public Education from what used to be Basically Free Education. I think the Future is very Grim and I'm leaving the U.S.A. for Scandinavia as soon as I graduate

I feel that the State has crucified Higher Ed. by almost totally eliminating scholarship and financial aid and continually raising fees. F/MCH - Employee dividing the total number of pounds collected by the total number of students in each residence building. This method accounts for differences in student occupancy rates in the buildings.

In other recycling news, the University-wide recycling pilot project has collected more than one ton of paper, bottles, cans, cardboard, and plastic milk jugs from eleven residence halls since the beginning of the semester.

Mary Lyon, in Northeast, has recycled the most bottles and cans per person.

Chambless said she hopes to collect two tons of recyclable materials by the end of the semster. That amount is almost twice the 1.2 tons collected last semester.

■ Bromery endorses Collins

"Boston and Washington have tried to bring this school to its knees," Collins said. "I will not allow Bush to get away with cutting the money that puts students in school."

Part of Collins' plan to raise funds for education include shifting some of the resources available in Congress and making the rich "pay their share" in taxes.

"I think it is just abhorrent that Congress can vote to raise their own pay by $35,000 while making cuts to higher education," Collins said.

Collins now practices law in Amherst.

While at UMass, he served as president of the Student Government Association. After graduating, he spent three years in the Upward Bound program, which helps underprivileged students from Pittsfield and Holyoke attend college.

Senate fails to reach quorum

The Undergraduate Student Senate did not meet as scheduled last night because there were not enough senators in attendance to hold a meeting.

The Student Government Association's constitution demands that at least one more than half of all existing senators be present for the senate to hold a meeting. To hold a meeting, at least 32 senators are required to be present because there are 62 senators on the roll.

Several speculated that senators instead attended the Amherst Town Meeting, to which several were elected last week.

MULTICULTURAL AFFAIRS

Symposiums to examine images of Asians

By ALEXANDER NGUYEN
Collegian Staff

In addition to their current production of "Letters to a Student Revolutionary", the University of Massachusetts' New WORLD Theater is scheduled to present three symposiums concerning issues raised from Letters.

Letters, which begins its last weekend tonight at UMass' Hampden Theater, explores the issues within Chinese and Chinese American cultures and societies with the 1989 Tiananmen Square demonstrations as its backdrop.

According to New WORLD director Roberta Uno, the play itself raises issues of images of Asian and Asian American women, the power and influence of the media in setting cultural stereotypes and the events of Tiananmen Square.

The first symposium, tonight at 6 in Hampden Theater, will address the negative powers of the arts in portraying images of people of color.

This subject will be discussed following a screening of Slaying the Dragon, a film about the media images of Asian women. The discussion will be presented by Letters playwright Elizabeth Wong, Letters director Nefertiti Burton and Uno.

The second symposium, at 1 p.m. Saturday, April 6, in Hampden Theater, will be presented by three UMass graduate students from China. They will discuss the events of Tiananmen Square from the 1989 as well as contemporary perspectives and provide a peer dialogue between students which was not available from the media.

The final symposium, to follow at 3 p.m., will address the changing images of Asian American women.

UMass student Sharon Park will discuss the colloquium which she developed and taught about Asian American Women's Experiences. Some of the topics from her course include the history of Asian women immigrants, the origins of Asian women's stereotypes and issues of sexual violence.

Hampshire College student El Chan will screen her film Chink Chicks, which she wrote directed and produced, about the images and stereotypes of Asian women.

And Hampshire College student Leilani Chan, who is a founding member of the Multicultural Theater Collective, will perform "The Epic Poem" about Asian women coming into consciousness with their cultural and gender identity.

Uno said that these last two symposiums will be presented to students by students. "We have students in the Five-college community who are doing exemplary work on these issues." Uno encourages the Five College community to attend these symposiums and see students who take active roles in their academic work.

"They have achieved work of tremendous quality in redefining the images of Asian Women which are thoughtful, critical and affirming," she said.

Uno said that the New WORLD Theater does work which serves as a catalyst for discussion on larger issues. These symposiums, she said, are intended to both disseminate information and bring people together into dialogue.

Takaki confronts issues behind recent Japan bashings

By STONE HAN
Collegian Correspondent

On March 6, Ronald Takaki spoke at Hampshire College on the subject of Japan bashing. Takaki, an ethnic studies professor at the University of California at Berkeley, began the lecture by telling the audience that he had a theory about why the phenomenon of Japan bashing is taking place in the United States. However, this theory is unpublished.

Thus, instead of giving a lecture, Takaki proposed that the audience would pretend that they were in a classroom, that he is the teacher and they the students, and that he would present his theory of Japan bashing to the class. After the presentation, the class would evaluate his theory and tell him what they thought about it. The class enthusiastically agreed.

Takaki began his presentation by citing incidents of Japan bashing. Among several things, he noted that Japanese were still called "the Japs" by politicians, and he recounted the killing of Vincent Chin in Detroit by two automobile industry workers who thought Chin was Japanese and beat him to death as they shouted racial slurs.

He noted the recent article titled "Containing the Japanese" by Phallis that made reference to the article written forty-four years ago titled "Containing Communism" by Kennan. The implication by Phallis is clear: Forty years ago the threat is Soviet Communism.

Today it's Japanese economic imperialism. Japan bashing also took place in the entertainment industry. The example Takaki gave was the recent movie 'Black Rain' starring Michael Douglas. The movie appealed to the fear of the American citizens by having Douglas roaming all over Japan and killing 'bad guys.' The reason for the 'badness' of the Japanese was given in the film: The Japanese are taking on economic revenge against the Americans for the dropping of the atomic bomb.

Takaki then asked the question: In view of Japan bashing by the United States, the basis for this bashing being the economic warfare waged on the United States by the Japanese, we have to ask, "Does Japan in reality represent an economic threat to the United States?" In answer to this question, Takaki stated that it was a myth that Japanese does not buy American goods and that Japanese is responsible for the U.S. trade deficit. In fact, Japan buys more goods from the U.S. than any other foreign country except Canada, and in fact, even if the U.S. trade deficit resulting from trading with Japan is zero, the U.S. would still have an enormous deficit. So it seemed that Japan is not the problem.

UC Berkeley professor Ronald Takaki

The factors that in reality, Takaki contended, contributed to the decline of the U.S. economy which led to a backlash against Japan were rampant stock market speculation, lack of long-term goals by CEOs, and a third factor which Takaki refused to reveal until the fourth lecture that was to be given at Smith the following day. However, the point made by Takaki was that the decline of the US economy was not caused by the so-called 'Japanese warfare' against the US. If the problem is not Japan, then why the bashing of Japan?

Takaki then stated that in looking at the basis of Japan thrashing, we have to not only look at the economic substructure of the United States, but also the cultural superstructure. In this superstructure, he explained, we found memories, memories of Japan bashing again and again. These memories consisted of WWII and Pearl Harbor. The term 'economic war' is referring to the war between Japan and the US. Takaki pointed out further, however, that these memories went beyond WWII. It went all the back when the Japanese first came to the United States in the late 1800s, when anti-Japanese movement took place across the country. In this superstructure were found memories of racism.

In view of this American history of Japan bashing, Takaki asked, "Why now? Why now the bashing of Japan? Why are the Japanese singled out?" This was where Takaki's own theory came in. Takaki held that the factor that brought Japan bashing into society today had very little to do with the economic substructure or with Japan itself. That factor lies in the cultural superstructure. That factor is race.

Takaki noticed that today there was growing anti-Asian sentiment. This was evident in increasing anti-Asian violence and discrimination. He noticed that there is a growing fear of the Asian American population in the United States. This fear is supported by the statistics that came in from the U.S. Census of 1990. Asian Americans are the fastest growing 'minorities' in the United States. And Asian Americans are not only growing in numbers, but also spreading out. However, it is not simply the growth of the Asian American population that is causing this fear that leads to Japan bashing. It is the growth of the minority population in general.

This is the thesis of Takaki's presentation: Japan bashing has its basis in the fear of the white Americans that very soon in the future they won't be the majority. The increasing visibility of minorities- Asian American, African Americans, Latin Americans, Indian Americans, etc. — generates nervousness among the white population that translated into Japan bashing. Takaki held that white America today is facing a cultural identity crisis which is forcing white Americans to realize that the American society is a diverse society and forcing them to ask, "Who are Americans?"

ANC leader Hani to visit

When African National Congress leader Nelson Mandela made his triumphant tour of the United States last summer, millions came out to see and cheer him, inspired by his courage, determination and decency, as well as the ANC's universal message of racial equality, human rights and democracy.

Today, as the struggle to end apartheid and racism continues, ever closer to victory, we at the University of Massachusetts are extraordinarily fortunate to have the opportunity to welcome Chris Hani to campus on May 1.

Hani is a central figure in the leadership of the ANC. He is Chief of Staff of Umkhonto we Sizwe, the ANC's military wing, and a member of the ANC National Executive Committee since 1973. One of the most popular leaders in South Africa, he is seen by many as a future successor to Mandela.

Hani will be touring the U.S. in celebration of the one-year anniversary of the ANC, and its fraternal organization, the South African Communist Party, of which he is also a leader. Hani's tour is sponsored by the People's Weekly World newspaper, and has been endorsed by a broad committee of leading progressive activists.

A UMass Chris Hani Coalition has been formed to organize his visit and will hold their next scheduled meeting this Monday night, April 8, at 7:00 p.m. in the Central American Student Association office of the Student Union Building, Room 423A. All campus groups and interested students are urged to attend.

Hani's visit to UMass is particularly significant coming on May Day, the international workers' holiday, and a day on which campus workers and students will be celebrating labor history with a whole series of events. The ANC's contributions to the struggles of South African labor are well known, as are the contributions of the U.S. labor movement to the international struggle to end apartheid. This creates the potential for perhaps the most memorable and successful May Day celebration ever seen on this campus.

It is also significant that Hani will be visiting a campus with a history of racist incidents, and student anti-racist struggle. His visit here, as Mandela's did nationally, can help raise anti-racist consciousness, inspire and unite students to take on campus racism, as well as other important and related issues, like the budget cuts and tuition hikes.

Bringing a speaker of Chris Hani's stature to campus on such short notice will take quite a bit of effort. Needed will be a great amount of publicity and fund-raising to make the event a success. Every campus group is therefore needed to get involved by coming to the Monday night meeting!

YOUR DAILY HOROSCOPE
By JEANE DIXON

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Your visionary ideas have great appeal today. Influential people will make a money offer. Your social life may be too hectic. Be honest with other people and they will follow your lead.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Someone's facts and figures could be in disarray. Avoid taking anything at face value. By acting independently, you will score a major victory. Do not crow or you could lose admirers.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Keep a low profile until you see how th eland lies. Communicating your longterm plans is not a good idea. A shopping trip could prove timely if you can afford to buy in bulk.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Make sure you show team spirit today. Success is assured if you do your share. A candid chat with your colleagues leads to new rapport. Loved ones will share their secrets. Be supportive.

LEO (July 23-Aug 22): You have a flair for decorating. Use your artist's eye to choose lively colors to brighten your living quarters. Forge ahead with party plans. Your friends are eager to see you.

VIRGO (Aug 23-Sept 22): Go ahead and shop but avoid running up credit card bills. Timely correspondence is the key to improved profits. Visits will put you where you want to be. Romance blossoms anew.

LIBRA (Sept 23-Oct 22): A private conversation with an influential person gives you an entirely different perspective. Financial support is available for a pet project. Loved one makes things happen. Show your gratitude!

SCORPIO (Oct 23-Nov. 21): Be alert to unusual financial offers and shopping values today. Your versatility lets you accomplish great things at work. A voice from the past reminds you of a lost love. Get in touch!

SAGITTARIUS (Nov 22-Dec 21): Any service you provide today could bring startling results. Be conscientious. Seniors can find new personal fulfillment through community work. A teenager will make you proud.

CAPRICORN (Dec 22-Jan 19): Keep your emotions in check when conducting business and negotiations. Work the phone lines and write letters. A friendship provides a healing balm if your ego has been wounded.

AQUARIUS (Jan 20-Feb 18): Self-reliance is essential now; do not count on receiving assistance. Your colleagues could offer valuable tips, however. Reflect carefully before making a romantic commitment.

PISCES (Feb 19-March 20): You can be a mover and shaker today. Phone calls and face-to-face meetings help you negotiate a better deal. Ask for top dollar and you will get it! Attend group functions.

assisted Gutheil to the net.

At 8:02 there was confusion at the Brown net when a Millon shot was termed a 'no goal.' Millon shot at the goal, the ball went through the net and rolled down the back of the cage. A player picked up the ball, moved around the cage and put the ball in again, but the officials called the ball dead when it hit the ground behind the cage.

The officials said one of them blew the whistle after the ball went through the net but the players on the field said they did not hear it and shot again. Initially, the refs called for a UMass possession at the endline but, after conferring, asked for a faceoff at the left side of the box.

Kushner and Towers matched up and Kushner won the faceoff. He scored 2:30 later, followed by a Senatore feed to John Schlipf which tied the score at 12 with 1:17 to play.

UMass' Ted Kellerman and Brown's Pat Flynn were in goal for the entire game and each finished with 14 saves. UMass got off 30 shots on goal, compared to Brown's 46.

Garber said he was pleased with the play he saw and, although a loss, views the Brown game as a step forward.

"We really wanted to win this game," Kushner said. "The whole team played good. I hate to see us lose a game so close."

Hartford storms back, beats UMass

By MICHAEL MORRISSEY
Collegian Correspondent

Like an eager young racehorse, the University of Massachusetts baseball team burst out of the gate yesterday against Hartford, only to let a gigantic lead slip away at the wire.

UMass led by a score of 7-1 at the end of three innings, but defensive errors and a disappointing relief performance let Hartford right back into the game. The Hawks took full advantage, winning 10-9 in an eight-inning, darkness-shortened game at Earl Lorden field.

Left-hander Ron Villone entered with one out in the seventh inning in relief of starter Jeff Toothaker, who put the first two Hartford men aboard. Villone proceeded to load the bases, and then walked in three men to tie the score at eight.

The Minutemen took the lead back in the bottom of the seventh when pinch-hitter John Carelli ignited a one-man rally. Carelli singled, took second on a stolen base, moved to third on the Hartford catcher's throwing error, and scored on a wild pitch.

Villone, after blowing the save opportunity in the seventh, took the mound in the eighth with a chance to pick up a win.

Hartford second baseman Mike Desjardins singled off Villone and scored on a sacrifice fly. With two outs, Paul Francesconi drove in Joe Bellino to give Hartford back the lead.

The Minutemen mounted another threat when second baseman Steve Corradi stroked a one out ground-rule double in the eighth, but went down quietly to Hartford freshman right-hander Scott LaRock, and the game was called due to darkness after eight innings.

"Ron had trouble finding the plate, but sometimes that happens," offered UMass coach Mike Stone. "You can't give them more outs than they should have, and that's what we did."

UMass led 2-1, and began the bottom of the third with three hits by third baseman Ian Torres, right fielder Brian Bright and Corradi. After leftfielder Justin Howard's RBI single, Lou Olivieri cracked another single, driving in two runs. When first baseman Jay Dodig and center fielder Mike Tobin drove in the sixth and seventh runs, UMass had a comfortable cushion to work with.

UMass starter Toothaker pitched a strong game, although he had little help from his defense. After Bright misplayed a fly ball in RF to start the fourth inning, Toothaker's wild pitch and SS Glenn DiSarcina's throwing error let in two runs and shrunk the lead to 7-3.

Toothaker's control left him momentarily in the fifth inning as he walked the first two batters. He then let in two more runs, one from an RBI double by UH catcher Mike Lane.

Toothaker pitched a strong sixth inning, and only got into trouble after recording one out in the seventh.

"Jeff did a great job. It was just what we needed", said Stone of Toothaker's effort.

Game notes: Last Tuesday against Holy Cross, the Minutemen tried to fight back from early deficits of 2-1 and 5-2, but the dam burst in the sixth and seventh innings and the team lost in Worcester by a score of 10-4. The loss lowered UMass' record to 6-10-1, and broke a three-game winning streak.

The Minutemen (6-11-1) will take on perennial northern power University of Maine in a double-header Friday. The first game will start at 12 noon. Stone said he plans to start sophomore lefthander Scott Meaney and sophomore righty Jim Telgheder.

Track to host meet Saturday

By KEITH BENNETT
Collegian Correspondent

The University of Massachusetts men's track team opens its spring campaign Saturday in a quad-meet against teams from Springfield College, the University of Vermont and Williams College.

The Minutemen host the meet, which begins at noon at the Derby Track adjacent to the UMass baseball fields.

This being the first meet of the spring, head coach Ken O'Brien said that he was unsure of the strengths of the other teams in the meet. The Minutemen defeated Springfield indoors this season but did not face Vermont or Williams.

"We beat Springfield indoors, but there are five or six events outdoors which are completely different," O'Brien said. "Any team can turn itself around with those new events.

"Vermont had an outstanding outdoor team last year. They finished fifth in the Eastern Conference Championships (UMass finished third). We have not faced Williams College in a number of years."

Of his own team, O'Brien says that its major strength is depth.

"We're solid in all of the events," he said. "We're not spectacular in any one event, but to not have a gaping weakness is a strength in itself."

In the field events O'Brien will look for strong performances from Luke Simpson in the hammer and discus, Nelson Simao in the shot put and Jeff Peterson and Joe Kourafas in the javelin. Kourafas will then

Softball looks to clip Hawks' wings

By CHRIS MIRACLE
Collegian Staff

Birds of prey.

That is what the University of Massachusetts women's softball team will be trying to be as they travel to the University of Hartford today to take on the Lady Hawks.

Game one of the doubleheader starts at 3 p.m.

Hartford will only be playing its' second game of the year when they meet up with UMass today. The Hawks were to open their season against Yale University this past Saturday, but the game was postponed due to rain.

After finishing 10-22 last year, Hartford coach Irene Mach hopes to see her team break the .500 mark this year, a feat only accomplished twice in the program's history. The Lady Hawks will blend experience and youth in this 1991 line-up as Hartford returns seven starters in addition to five freshmen.

'We have the talent to be very successful this year,' Mach said. 'This is the best team we've fielded in the four years that I've been associated with the program.'

Senior captain Michele Gigante and junior outfielder Kirsten Donovan will provide the leadership for this year's Hartford team. Gigante, who led her team with 10 RBIs last season will see most of the action behind the plate, but may also spend some limited time at first base. Leading the team with a .315 batting average and also with five stolen bases for the year, Donovan notched herself a starting spot in right field.

Sophomore third baseman Michele Juliano is also someone to watch out for. Juliano led the Hawks in five offensive categories last year including hits, extra base hits, and on-base percentage. Racking up a .313 BA and a .448 slugging percentage last spring, Juliano will play third base most of the time, but might have to take on some catching duty.

Rounding out the line-up for the Hawks will be senior Amy Wisner and freshman Jen Martin. Wisner, who will be playing center field again this year, led the Hawks in at bats and runs scored last season while making only four errors in the outfield. Martin's speed and smart base running skills helped her earn the lead-off hitting spot as well as some time at second or third base or in the outfield.

For pitching, the Hawks have three hurlers up their sleeve: freshman Kathy Baughn, senior Tracy Ciosek, and sophomore Tricia Slocum. Ciosek, adding to the experience part of the Hawk's formula, has plenty of it as she completed 11 out of 13 games she started last year. Ciosek also led the Hawk staff with 30 strikeouts.

Slocum, coming off an impressive freshman year, will not have to carry her team as much as last year when she compiled almost 130 innings of work. She also led the team in ERA (2.18).

Right now an independent, Hartford will not join the North-Atalntic Conference until next year. The Minutewomen owned the Hawks last year, defeating them in a doubleheader 9-1, 3-1 at UMass.

'We've had to struggle in other years against them,' UMass coach Elaine Sortino said. 'We have to come out shooting and not wait until the third or fourth inning.'

Still nursing some injuries, the Minutewomen have been trying to create some position moves in order to gain some depth. Happy with the pitching and hitting, Sortino feels that the Minutewomen need to work harder on defense.

'Our pitching hangs with other teams in the country, but sometimes we didn't hold our poise,' Sortino said referring to UMass' California trip.

Slugger's Update: The Minutewomen have currently fallen out of the top twenty in national rankings which will not be updated until next Tuesday. Not including their games against the University of Rhode Island, the Minutewomen lead their opponents in error percentage (.933-.953) shortstop Barbara Marean has UMass' only homerun so far this season.

Crew set to open season

By LYNN FRANKEL
Collegian Correspondent

A long winter of training will finally pay off for the University of Massachusetts' crew teams this weekend. The women will open their season against traditional rival Wesleyan. While the men will attempt to rebound from last weeks loss to top ranked Harvard by hosting both Wesleyan and New Hampshire.

For the womens' team the varsity boat consists of four experienced seniors, Jennifer Geary, Susanne Maloney, and co-captains Jen Blum (Coxswain) and Rachel White.

Junior Kerry Clarkin and sophomores Courtney Harold, Deanna Cook, Jen Lambert and Allison Hurtwitch round out the squad. The varsity eight will be looking for a strong, controlled row in their first sprint race of the season.

The UMass women will also send out a junior varsity and a novice team.

As for the men's team head coach Dave Trond is looking to the experience of senior rowers to lead the team.

Dave Ring, Rich Scannell, Chris Marino, Nat Delmanzo, Mike Rademacher, and Jeff Vohr are all expected to perform flawlessly, according to Trond.

A junior varsity and a novice team will also compete for the Minutemen.

Novice coach Sean Talbot is anticipating a strong finish for his crew on Saturday. Talbot said his team rocked Amherst College during spring break training at Hadley beach, but lost big to Harvard last weekend.

The men's team will also compete against Dartmouth on Sunday in Hanover, New Hampshire.

The University of Massachusetts Rugby "A" side lost what coach Francis Buttle described as a "messy" match at Amherst College yesterday, 7-4. Greg Champau scored a try for UMass.

This Weekend

By DANIELLE DOWLING
Collegian Staff

Fire swept through a wood-frame house on North Pleasant Street in the early morning hours of February 17. The blaze took the lives of one UMass student, Joseph Pirog, and one former UMass student, Matt Peterson. Ten others were left homeless.

But it always seems that tragedies like these beget something wonderful and positive. And so it holds true in this case for on Sunday night at Pearl Street, The Equalites, Who's Kidding Who, Ed Vadas and the Fabulous Heavyweights, Rippopotamus, Borderland and The Sighs will play a benefit concert in which all proceeds will go to the Matt Peterson-Joseph Pirog Scholarship fund.

WRNX 100.9 FM and disc-jockey Geoff Payson are hosting the benefit. Payson knew the two people who were not home at the time of the blaze and lived right down the road from the house. Payson is a disc-jockey at WRNX on Saturday and Sundays in the afternoons and plays what he calls "renaissance rock."

Local businesses have contributed their help to the event. Kinkos Copies of Amherst helped with the flyers and Radical Solution designed the tickets and posters. Originally, it had been planned that some of the proceeds would go to help the 10 people left homeless, but they requested that the money be given to the scholarship fund.

The show will offer a veritable potpourri of music. The Equalites, who have just released an album, will caress the ears with the mellow sounds of reggae. Who's Kidding Who, winner of the Pearl Street Battle of the Bands, have more of a world beat flavor in their music and The Sighs appeal to a mainstream rock appetite.

Ed Vadas and the Heavyweights, an East Coast blues trio who travel from Key West to Nova Scotia to Detriot all in a little truck, will lend a couple of riffs for a good cause. Vadas gave these words of encouragement for potential concert-goers, "If people go with an open mind and open pocketbook, they'll get their money's worth and a Valley sampler of bands."

Also appearing will be Rippopotamus, a funk/rap/hip-hop group with a four-piece horn section and a four-piece rhythm section. Rippopotamus member Rich Gordon, familiar with both of the two men who died in the fire, said of the upcoming concert, "It's always good when something positive can come out of something as tragic."

The members of Borderland, a local seven-piece blues rock group, were also familiar with both victims and look forward to the benefit as a way to expose their music to a new and larger audience for a good cause. The group passed up a chance to play in Brockton, Massachusetts, which would have paid $300, to take part in the benefit, but as drummer Corey Smaller explained, "Sometimes money isn't the issue."

Payson said to expect some surprises at the show. There will be a raffle held and some local comedians are expected to make appearances.

He expressed hope that this would become an annual event, adding that there are plans in the works for an outdoor concert in the summer.

"When it happened," Payson said, "I really wanted to do something and this seemed like the best thing to do."

The Flirtations mix a blend of music acapella style

By LISA CARREIA
Collegian Correspondent

They call themselves "New York's hottest and most unusual a cappella singing group."

Indeed The Flirtations, made up of five musically gifted, multi-talented gay men, are a hot group with a 1990 tour hitting gigs like AIDSWalk New York, Baltimore AIDSWalk, and New York's Pride '89 Dance on the Pier.

Their popularity in the gay community is explained by group member Aurelio Font, "It's such an interesting group-five guys who are extremely musical, extremely political and extremely nice guys. We're gay role models." Font comes to the group with experience from a number of gay choruses and from his native Puerto Rican "cuatro," a group in which he sang as a child.

Group member Michael Callen somehow finds time to sing, write songs and be politically active. Callan is the founder of the People with AIDS Coalition in New York and is a nationally known AIDS activist. He also penned the song "Love Don't Need a Reason" with famous songwriter Peter Allen. All these accomplishments may seem small to those who hear his incredible vocal accomplishment, an incredible four-octave range.

The other three members, Jon Arterton, T.J. Myers and Cliff Townsend make this group a musical great with their rich backgrounds of experience with choruses and choirs across the country.

Audiences at Flirtations concerts hear a wide variety of songs. Their repertoire includes soft rock, jazz, fifties

New WORLD makes a powerful statement with Letters

By DANIEL JOKELSON
Collegian Correspondent

Letters to a Student Revolutionary
Hampden Theatre
Saturday, March 30

The New World Theater's newest piece of provocative drama is here. Elizabeth Wong's Letters to a Student Revolutionary is a powerful statement on the potential people have to change their lives, and how much this opportunity is squandered by Americans, who feel powerless with too much choice. It is also an in depth look at the horrible oppression of the Chinese government, culminating in the traumatic Tianenmen Square massacre. And it is the touching portrayal of two Chinese women in different spheres of freedom, who reach out to each other during the crisis.

The play focuses on the correspondence between Bibi, a Chinese American from Los Angeles, California, and Karen, from Beijing, from 1979 to 1989. When Karen and Bibi meet for a couple of minutes in Beijing at the beginning of the play, and are watched by everyone else in the vicinity, the tone is set for what becomes a painful glimpse at a country so thoroughly dominated by the government, that the individual is discounted, repressed and ultimately tortured and killed.

At the same time Karen is wondering what it would be like to be free, Bibi is struggling to find her identity in America. Karen, through Bibi's letters and care packages, sees and reads what the rest of the "free" world is like and becomes a revolutionary leader. Bibi envies Karen's oppressed life because it has purpose that she is lacking. She feels no unity with anyone, she wanders through the country and through many careers an unhappy and lonely woman, despite her many accomplishments. It's a tragic story on all sides, but it is also humorous with witty and spicy dialogue.

The six actors in the cast played a plethora of roles and some were executed wonderfully. Mona Chiang's portrayal of Bibi's tired immigrant mother who has a hard time adjusting to Bibi's "crazy" ambitions to travel and become an actress was moving, as was her cameo of a Mexican immigrant lost in the beaurocracy of America. Ken Chu played Karen's intelligent and sweet cat, "Debbie" with wonderful characterization and sincerity, and his Chinese soldier was compelling as well, a man torn between his duty and his sympathies towards the revolutionaries. Fred Rowley had some nice moments, first as

Blades to bring some salsa to the Fine Arts Center

By JOHANN-HANZ VON KESSEL
Collegian Correspondent

All the aspects of his ever increasing endeavors have shaped an intangible persona out of the preconcieved notions of what a "Salsa" performer should be. Even for the Hispanic American auditorium, who have been so used to his name and his lyrics, he always emerges messianic and multi-formed. As a person who possesses all these charismatic intrigueal energies, Ruben Blades seems as hard to grasp and to configure as David Bowie.

He began his career in 1966 with the Pete Rodriguez Mr. Boogaloo Orchestra at the age of 16 years old. He wrote the song "Juan Gonzalez" during that stretch of the Boogaloo enlightened stint. This song was about a martyr of the Mesa-American struggles, who became a holy ghost of the fights (ruchas). As it has always been throughout his pilgrimage for acceptance and recognition, these types of songs were never received with comprehensive ears during the development of the New York/Afro-Carribean sound, responsible for the sheltering name of Salsa.

Therefore, he found himself confined to enhancing chorus harmonies. Blessed with a three-and-one-half octave voice, that was the only area in which band leaders felt safe about his approach to the genre. All band leaders enforced the criterion that, since the music was polyrhythmic, it was appropriate to circumscribe merely to the description of the rhythms in the lyrics, and the effects on the people through the polyphonic. That was the extension of the message in the lyrics. Also the fact that band leaders were percussionists was an obstacle for his social conscious psyche.

In 1976, all of the adverse circumstances changed, when Larry Harlow, co-owner of the Fania Label with Johnny Pacheco and Jerry Masucci, needed to find a replacement for his lead singer (sonero), Ismael Miranda, then the reigning pretty boy of Fania. He was also doing a Salsa suite about the history and development of the genre, and the record was behind schedule. Sensing that an anthology of the genre didn't quite require catchy tunes to make it commercial and a known figure to sing them, he agreed to make a deal with Ruben Blades. The deal was an attractive one, offering exposure by a "big" band leader with connections. Larry Harlow suddenly fell in love with Ruben's voice during the recordings and offered him a chance to sing (guarachar) for his orchestra as a "good standing" member. The rumor spread around everybody, including Willie Colon, wanted him for their orchestras.

It resulted in Ruben agreeing to sonear sing for Willie's orchestra, and when they recorded "Metiendo Mano," Ruben was thrust into the spotlight.

He wrote a whole album based on the same old martyr's stories people had denied him to tell and plasmid. Now he is not just the ever greatest songwriter, but also a lawyer with a degree from Harvard University as well as a busy Hollywood movie histrionic.

He has been in the following movies: The Milagro Beanfield War, Crossover Dreams, Dead Man Out, The Two Jakes, Josephine Baker and Predator II. He also appeared on a record released on Elektra entitled Buscando a America (Searching for America). It was considered by Audiophile Magazine as the only perfect assembly of pop culture songs in the last 20 years.

Ruben Blades will perform on Sunday at 8 p.m. at UMass in the Fine Arts Center. Tickets are $15, $12 to Five College students.

standards, women's music, original music, and gay activism songs. They are best known for their doo-wop rendition of "My Boy Friend's Back."

For the B-52's song "Housework," these men are armed with aprons, dust rags, vacuum cleaners, irons and mops. The lyric "I need a man to help me do the dishes," seems to say it all when rendered acappella by this flirtatious five.

The Flirtations have created a show that is a "must hear" for anyone who enjoys great music, good humor and an array of musical tastes.

The Flirtations will play Saturday at 8:00 p.m. at UMass in the Student Union Ballroom. Tickets are $5 for UMass students and $7 General Admission. Tickets are available at The Program for GLB Concerns, Food for Thought Books, For the Record, and Party-Party in Thorne's Market.

Bibi's surfer boyfriend Charnie, and then as Karen's revolutionary husband Luvan, and Peter Tamaribuchi showed the audience what the Chinese government does to its citizens, playing Karen's brainwashed, compliant brother. The most intriguing portrayal was Soomi Kim's Bibi.

Bibi is a woman who is capable of and makes choices, but many of her choices lead her away from the happiness and love that she's looking for. Kin managed to play out that personal battle in a way that brought out the issues of freedom, alienation, and other problems that Americans have.

Theresa Wong's Karen was an interesting depiction as well, because Karen didn't have the choice to struggle with her inner demons — she either complied with the government and remained a simple member of the state, or she had to fight with all her might to be guaranteed rights that we've taken for granted. It was a hard role to play, because she was more of a symbol of the billion Chinese people than she was an individual, but Wong played that symbol well.

There were problems as well. I felt the concentration level dipped at times, and I could feel the actors' nervousness more than their portrayals when that happened. I think that everyone held back a little — I wanted to be gripped completely by what was happening, but many impulses were stifled and the actors sometimes didn't take enough time to let us see how these climactic events were affecting them.

In general, though, I enjoyed the production, and the message that the playwright, the actors and the director were trying to convey came through: that pursuit of freedom, be it from governments or from other constraints, is a tremendously difficult goal to pursue, and we need to remember the Tiananmen Square massacre as a lesson of what can happen when we don't even have the option to be free.

Letters to a Student Revolutionary will be performed at UMass in Hampden Theatre Thursday through Saturday at 8 p.m.

Postwar situation on the Mid East updated

ARBIL, NORTHERN IRAQ — A Kurdish mother carries an AK-47 rifle while her husband pushes their young child in a wheelbarrow recently as they flee the fighting in Northern Iraq.

The Associated Press

These are the latest developments in the aftermath of the Persian Gulf War:

— Iraq yesterday claimed the Kurdish rebellion has been crushed.

— International concern is rising for the Kurds who have been trying to cross into Turkey and Iran. Many are suffering from starvation and exposure.

— Iran is asking for help from the United Nations and Red Cross to handle tens of thousands of Iraqi refugees. Baghdad radio urged the refugees to come back: "We call on those who left their houses . . . to come back safely to their cities and villages with pride, to enjoy the victory and the security which is everyone's."

— Iraq's ambassador to the United Nations, Abdul Amir al-Anbari, calls the cease-fire resolution adopted by the U.N. Security Council on Wednesday "outrageous" and a violation of international law. Iraq did not reject it, however. The ambassador said the government of Saddam Hussein will have its formal response in several days.

— President Bush said again Wednesday that the United States will not come to the aid of the rebels who have been trying to topple Saddam Hussein from power. He said, "I do not want to see us get sucked into the internal struggle in Iraq.

— Sen. Albert Gore Jr. joined others in Congress criticizing the administration for not backing the opponents of Saddam in Iraq.

"I don't think it's right for us to stand by and do nothing while the Kurds and others who oppose Saddam Hussein are being slaughtered," the Tennessee Democrat said.

— Intelligence sources in Washington say that three months ago President Bush gave the CIA authority to aid the rebels. But the White House has refused to supply the insurgents with military aid, despite widespread reports of Iraqi army atrocities against Kurds and Shiites.

At the United Nations, France has proposed a U.N. resolution; condemn Iraqi military attacks on Kurdish rebels, demand an end to repression and insist on immediate political dialogue with the Kurds and other Iraqi minorities. That would be in addition to the resolution adopted Wednesday, 12-1. That one is intended to force Iraq to destroy its chemical and germ weapons, nuclear capability and most of its ballistic weapons. Cuba voted against it and Ecuador and Yemen abstained.

The U.S. Army is turning control of the postwar reconstruction in Kuwait over to local authorities.

Gay Republican breaks stereotype

Wants people to realize that not all gays are Democrats

By MEREDITH O'BRIEN
Collegian Staff

On this campus, the words "gay" and "Republican" do not seem to go together.

In the wake of last month's Republican Club "Straight Pride" rally, where hundreds of people protested what they perceived to be homophobia running rampant on campus, Republicans and the gay, lesbian and bisexual community have appeared to be at odds.

But Michael Duffy, the openly gay Republican commissioner of the Massachusetts Commission Against Discrimination, said it does not have to be that way.

"I'm hoping to build bridges for the gay community [in the Republican party]," Duffy, who has been a Republican all his life said. "I want to be a role model for other gay people, especially young folks."

Last month, Gov. Weld appointed Duffy, the 27-year-old Boston resident, to a three-year appointment as the head of the MCAD.

While saying it is a common perception that Republicans are inherently homophobic, Duffy said there are homophobes in every party, not just the Republican party. By being both gay and Republican, he said, "I hope to shatter Republican stereotypes."

Duffy said the gay community cannot limit itself by only participating in the Democratic party, the party which traditionally draws gay, lesbian and bisexual support.

"The 1990 Democratic candidate for governor [John Silber] was the worst . . . candidate, while the Republican candidates were great on gay issues," Duffy said.

Compared to former Democratic Gov. Dukakis, Duffy said Weld, a Republican, is very supportive of gay rights legislation.

"Bill Weld is the most pro-gay governor in the country."

Bush's most recent veto strategy questioned

WASHINGTON (AP) — Item by item, President Bush has been opening a second front in his veto strategy, unchecked by a Democratic Congress that hasn't yet been able to override him on bills he has blocked.

Along with those outright vetoes, the president has rejected some specific items in bills he signed, saying he will not heed congressional directions that he believes intrude on his constitutional authority.

That isn't quite the line-item veto power he and his predecessors have sought, but it comes close. The president is claiming selective authority to reject sections of bills without the direct vetoes that would send them back to Congress.

Those spurned provisions involve the kind of defense and diplomatic mandates Bush denounced as "micro-management" in his Persian Gulf victory speech to Congress.

"It's time to turn away from the temptation to protect unneeded weapons systems and obsolete bases," he said in that joint session address a month ago. "It's time to put an end to micro-management of foreign and security assistance programs, micro-management that humiliates our friends and allies and hamstrings our diplomacy."

Without making an issue of it, Bush said in bill-signing statements after the last session of Congress that he would not necessarily comply with some provisions of measures he was otherwise accepting, among them:

- A foreign operations appropriation bill that sought to limit or set terms for some negotiations abroad. Bush said he would consider that only advisory, not mandatory.
- A requirement that the administration tell Congress 30 days in advance of any military exercises involving construction expenses of $100,000 or more; Bush said he would go along when he found it feasible and consistent with his power as commander in chief.

Military construction appropriations he said "would purport to require" projects that will not be needed because of planned defense cuts.

- An education bill provision requiring reports directly to Congress from the Department of Education, rejected by Bush as unconstitutional because "it purports to preclude me from exercising my constitutional duty to supervise the executive branch."

Analyzing those moves in the journal The American Enterprise, two Washington lawyers forecast an eventual court test that could redefine the scope of presidential veto power.

J. Gregory Sidak and Thomas A. Smith said Bush has become increasingly aggressive in claiming a power of "constitutional excision" to reject allegedly unconstitutional provisions in bills he signs into law.

Regents react to Weld's state education plan

BOSTON (AP) — The State Board of Regents for Higher Education says it backs most of a Weld adviser's recommendations for reorganizing the state's education system.

Board Chairperson Paul Tsongas called the document "the first positive sign" on education from the governor.

"We've been critical of the administration and we felt that they were going in the wrong direction," Tsongas said Wednesday. "The Harrington report is really the first sign that there's education going on."

The report, released Tuesday by James Harrington, Weld's education adviser, also called for the creation of a cabinet-level seat for an education official and preschool education for all 3- and 4-year-olds.

Referred to as the "CEO structure," the approach would create a state secretary of education who reports directly to the governor. Tsongas joked that Wednesday was the "first time I've ever commended a Republican CEO."

Tsongas said the Harrington report could have saved Weld some Beacon Hill frustration about his education policies.

"It was clear that Democrats were going to draw the line in the sand on this issue," said Tsongas. "It's in everybody's best interest not to have that happen."

A Weld spokeswoman said Tuesday the governor supported the proposals for an education secretariat and combining state colleges, but had no other public comment on the report.

The report advocates several changes in the ways state colleges are funded. Harrington endorsed proposals for tuition retention, which allows individual campuses to control their own revenues. Saying Massachusetts has the most generous tuition waiver plan in the country, Harrington calls for scaling back a program that he contends enables children of all state workers to attend state schools for free.

But Dominic Slowey, spokesperson for the state Administration and Finance department, said yesterday morning Harrington was incorrect. He said only children of some higher education workers are eligible for tuition waivers. Some state employees are also eligible for tuition discounts.

Regarding elementary and secondary education, Harrington's report called for statewide graduation standards, a special commission to review all education regulations, minority recruiting in the schools and extended school days and academic years.

Tsongas is expected to formally announce next week his candidacy for the Democratic presidential nomination in 1992.

he said. "He supports the [Massachusetts] Gay Rights Law, is supportive of gay foster parents and has made my appointment and that of other gays. [Former Democratic Gov.] Dukakis did not give gays much access."

Duffy said despite the perceptions that all Republicans are homophobic, he suffered relatively little backlash from Republican party members about being gay.

"I'm open and out and nothing bad has happened to me," he said.

Duffy said he has been openly gay since college and for all of his political career. Last year Duffy made a failed bid for the 9th Suffolk District House seat. From the onset of the campaign, Duffy said he matter-of-factly announced he was gay, but did not make a major issue of it.

While older sectors of the gay community were "really excited" about his candidacy, Duffy said the younger and more active members of the community were upset he was running as a Republican. "They couldn't relate to me being a Republican," he said.

Duffy urged other gay people, who identify with the Republican party and have an urge to enter the political field, to be strong and make sure there is a solid network of friends behind them for support.

"There is the illusion that the gay community is all one big, happy family," he said. "Don't be surprised if you get criticism from other gay people."

He said a bulk of the criticism openly gay politicians, in both parties have received, is from the gay community itself — much of it centering on the emphasis, or lack of emphasis, they placed on their sexual orientation.

Duffy is scheduled to speak at Northampton's Gay Pride rally May 4.

"On Nov. 5, 1990, President Bush threw down the gauntlet, signing nine bills in which he identified numerous provisions, 31 by our count, that he regarded as unconstitutional," Sidak and Smith write. "Some of these provisions he declared to be 'without legal force' and severable; others he construed as 'advisory' . . . rather than 'mandatory' to avoid a constitutional confrontation."

He had started the practice a year earlier when he signed an appropriation bill. He declared then that he wouldn't comply with the provision that barred the administration from requiring federal employees to promise in signed statements that they would not disclose classified information.

Later, Bush signed a State Department money bill while rejecting provisions that would have required notice to Congress of sensitive diplomatic missions, and of U.S. contacts with members of the Palestinian Liberation Organization who might be involved in terrorism.

It all has been done quietly, in writing and on record, but without the kind of announcements that would invite a confrontation with Congress. That has kept it a lawyers' argument instead of stirring a political dispute.

The political argument has been over the direct vetoes, 16 without an override, five more after the last Congress adjourned, two threatened since the new Congress convened. One involves appropriations procedures, the other, a bill to ban the hiring of permanent replacements for striking workers.

There will be more as the Democrats press their domestic agenda and the lines are drawn for the 1992 presidential campaign.

Panel discusses 'new world order'

By JASON GEORGE
Collegian Staff

President Bush's frequent use of the term "new world order" during the Persian Gulf War left many observers — as well as students and professors in this area — wondering exactly what this term meant.

At a panel titled "New World Order: Economic and Military Perspectives" Wednesday night, Five-College professors Samuel Bowles, James Crotty and Michael Klare tried to provide answers. Crotty, an economics professor at the University of Massachusetts, said the term has several meanings.

"[The new world order] was seen as an alliance of nations working through the United Nations, presumably to impose the rule of law on the world," Crotty said. "It's real purpose is as a strategy for the United States to retain, or regain, economic dominance in the world, which it had been losing to Japan."

Iraq's invasion of Kuwait last Aug. 2 occurred at a point at which the United States was faced with two options for restoring its post-World War II dominance.

"There was the 'geo-economic' strategy, that we ought to learn from Germany, Japan, and Scandanavia and get our economic house in order," Crotty said. "We had a peace dividend of perhaps $150 to $200 million to take advantage of.

"Or, since the U.S.S.R. had collapsed, the U.S. could take advantage of its position as the world's only military superpower," continued Crotty.

According to Crotty, the U.S. has clearly chosen to exercise its military power to influence world events.

"The U.S.S.R. is gone as a player, so the U.S. can do whatever we want to use the Third World's economic resources," Crotty said. "The message [from the Persian Gulf War] is clear:
nobody dare oppose us, and the question becomes 'Who's Next?'"

Bowles, who also teaches economics at UMass, placed Bush's attempts to formulate a new world order in a context in which both the United States and the Soviet Union are in economic decline.

"What we're really seeing is the effect of the decline of the U.S.," Bowles said. "There was a way of seeing things when the U.S. was on top, called 'global liberalism.'

"This system involved competition between nations and the goods with the limited use of military force," Bowles said. "As long as the U.S. was on top, it was a workable ideology.

"What we are seeing today is a dramatic shift," Bowles continued. "It has a lot to do with order."

Bowles was referring to a world system in which the United States, as the dominant military power in the world, would exert control over other nations through its military strength. Bowles, however, sees this as a short-sighted approach.

"There are other things to give a society its justification besides economic development," Bowles said. "The wealth of a nation depends very centrally on the way it uses its human resources.

"We can't be the country which can make smart bombs but can't make VCRs," Bowles said. "The money locked up in the Pentagon is holding back our economy."

Klare, a political science professor at Hampshire college, who specializes in defense analysis, offered a warning to those who think the apparent ease with which the United States defeated Iraq will provide a blueprint for a successful foreign policy in the future.

"A consensus developed in early 1990 that we had to create a national security threat on the scale of the Cold War," Klare said. "The threat [the U.S. military] developed was not in the East, but in rising Third World powers."

Klare said the Iraqi invasion of Kuwait has caused many in this country to see the mission of the U.S. military as redirected toward Third World powers, which are a perceived threat to U.S. economic interests.

"The war has confirmed to many members of Congress, the military apparatus, and the mainstream media that this strategy of fighting Third World powers is what we should have," Klare said.

"The Pentagon can expect Congress to vote for a military strategy of this type for a generation to come."

It would be a mistake to expect similar results than those of the Persian Gulf war, Klare said.

Bowles offered perhaps the most cryptic warning for a United States which is attempting to create a new world order based on military strength alone.

"Powerful militaries, which don't have economic underpinnings will be eventually brushed aside," Bowles said.

Three candidates to run in April 9 student elections

By ALEX DERING
Collegian Staff

Elections for the positions of Student Trustee and Student President will be held on April 9, from 11 a.m. to 7 p.m., at four of the dining commons, the Newman Center and the Hatch.

The division of Student Affairs' refusal to recognize the April 9 elections has resulted in a severely narrowed field: only three people are running for the two offices.

Two of those candidates, Kevin Newnan and Ken Parker, are running for the position of Student Trustee.

Newnan is a junior. He has been a student senator for three years and was recently appointed to serve on the University Commission on Undergraduate Student Governance established to restructure the student government.

David Gagne

Newnan said he is running for the office of Student Trustee, despite the SAO's refusal to recognize the elections, because he believes the division of Student Affairs should not control student government.

"The Student Senate set April 9 as the date for student elections and it is totally irrelevant whether Student Affairs recognizes the elections or not."

If elected, Newnan said he would focus on binding the student body into a cohesive unit.

"It's time for students to start working together on student issues, like the proposed $1,000 tuition increase, instead of fighting against each other," he said. "We've all seen the damage that a conflict of egos can cause. Students have to pull together and set aside personal differences or one day we'll discover that all our rights have been taken away while we were fighting."

Newnan also said students must work with the administration.

"There must be a dialogue, with students on one end, and administrators on the other, with both sides working on a mutually acceptable solution," he said.

Parker is a second-semester junior and has been a member of the Student Senate for two years. He is the SGA's State House Action Project Coordinator and was an intern on Capitol Hill.

Ken Parker

If elected, Parker will focus on the budget crisis and ensuring there is a student input in decision making processes on campus.

"Strong public education is an investment for a strong economic future," said Parker. "Students are paying too much and getting too little. I want to fight to hold the line on tuition and fees, and try to maintain the state allocation for higher education. We're already last in the nation [for state allocations to public higher education], let's not get any lower."

Parker also wants to give students more of a voice in the decision making processes occurring on the campus.

Gagne explained the other people who were running for the office of president, "... probably decided not to run because SAO declared that the [April 9] elections would not be recognized."

Gagne views the office of president as one concerned with issues which have a daily affect on students.

"The president is supposed to be closely linked to all aspects of student government, especially the area governments," said Gagne. "But once the president gets elected, he or she usually leaves the area governments dangling."

Gagne said this is a mistake, as the area

Gay activists at work in South Africa

As governmental bans lift South African gays come out

BY JASON MCDONALD and LISA VESHECCO
Collegian Correspondents

South Africa, a country struggling with racist apartheid, has in the last two years developed a movement to fight for gay and lesbian civil rights as well, according to an author who lectured Wednesday night at Hampshire College.

Neil Miller, author of In Search of a Gay America, gave a talk titled the "Emergence of the Lesbian and Gay Civil Rights Movement in South Africa."

For many years a small, mainly White gay and lesbian community existed, but was forced to remain hidden due to the atmosphere of intolerance within the country, he said.

However, within eight months of the government's lifting of the prohibition against marches and public demonstrations, the gays and lesbians decided to join in with this era of reform — many already involved with the anti-apartheid movement — and held the first annual Lesbian and Gay Pride March on Oct. 13, 1990.

The march, which included Blacks and Whites, attracted over 800 gays and lesbians. Some marchers wore paper bags over their heads, and chants varied from "Out of the closets, into the streets" to "We're here, we're queer, we're everywhere!"

Miller said organizers received a permit from the government allowing the march to take place.

Miller discussed the increasing racial diversity within South African gay communities and organizations. One gay organization, GROW, currently has 400 members, 60 precent of which are Black.

"The emergence of a non-racial lesbian and gay group is significant," says Miller, who has returned to Boston temporarily before continuing his worldwide tour for his upcoming book.

GROW is a significant organization, Miller said, because its members were the major political block fighting for the phrase "sexual orientation" to be included in the Bill of Rights within the African National Congress.

According to Miller, prior to GROW's efforts many members of the African National Congress considered homosexuality to be merely a "Western thing." Miller said he heard one female ANC member say, "Once we have a normal society people will be normal so we won't have the problems of gays."

The philosophical recognition of lesbianism has been recent in South Africa due to the lasting influence of former British colonialism, according to Miller.

He said that, historically, Queen Victoria did not believe women would commit such acts, thus lesbianism was never socially recognized or legally criminalized in the colonies.

Miller plans to visit South America, Africa, and the Middle East to give them gay perspectives from other countries.

governments are the "closest link" between students in general and the president.

"In the past, there has been a situation where the student leaders have had the mind set that they were there to serve the administration and work with students, when it should be the other way around. Student leaders serve the students and work with the administration," Gagne said.

"We've seen a total lack of student leadership recently," he concluded. "They take the title and the honors, but not the responsibilities. I want the responsibilities as well."

Stephen McAfee, a student elections coordinator responsible for ensuring that no violations of the electoral process occur, said all polling places will be open from 11 a.m. to 7 p.m.

Students from Orchard Hill or Central may vote at the Franklin Dining Commons.

EDITORIAL/OPINION

The opinions on this page are those of the individual writer or cartoonist and do not necessarily reflect the views of the Collegian or the University unless otherwise noted.

Photog. defends her work

Maybe it's easier to explain what "Glimpses of Israel: A Visual Travelogue," my photography exhibit at the Augusta Savage Gallery, isn't.

It isn't political.

And maybe I should explain how the exhibit got to the New Africa House Gallery, which some consider an inappropriate venue, in the first place.

It was invited.

I'm probably not the best person to write about this "controversy," simply because I'm not sure how it came about.

If detractors anxious to resume the Israel-bashing absent from UMass most of this semester have a new cause, however misplaced, that's fine with me. But, they undercut their own legitimacy by focusing on an artistic event — a legitimate if it is balanced and fair. Political criticism against an artistic exhibit, however, is inappropriate — especially if it is as unbalanced and factually incorrect as in this case. Those who have a problem with Israel, and those who are dissatisfied with the internal workings of The New Africa House, have misplaced their anger. Instead of setting up their own exhibit to challenge mine, they are using Glimpses of Israel as a vehicle to flaunt their political correctness.

Other opposition stems from those who believe space in The New Africa House should be reserved solely for African-American and Third World artists and issues. For the last 20 years, the Augusta Savage Gallery has served as a forum for African-American artists whose works were unwelcome at other galleries. But the "Gallery History, Philosophy and Attendance" pamphlet also states that its goal is "to further teach a better understanding of the historical context of minority cultures . . . generating a multi-cultural approach to artforms" and "to present traditional and contemporary artforms and their significance in the context of their own cultures and society."

I did not intend to intrude on gallery space. As I stated before, the exhibit was invited. The Augusta Savage Gallery was constructed to exhibit art, and lost money last semester because it was empty. Where were the counter-exhibits then?

Glimpses of Israel has been in planning since last semester. Anyone opposing the pictures or their placement in The New Africa House had months to state their case. At one point, the exhibit could have been moved, but all were silent. The exhibit is now in place. The time to protest, to write letters, to demand equal space, is past.

And yet, some in opposition still claim "solidarity with the plight of the Jewish people." The best way to be an ally, however, is to allow each individual to define his or her culture and heritage on his or her own terms. In Glimpses of Israel, I have fulfilled this definition.

Alisa Berkowitz is a UMass student celebration of a culture — and pressuring those in charge of the exhibit to renege on a contract.

The primary charge against Glimpses of Israel is that it neglects to include the Palestinian struggle. I agree: the exhibit ignores many aspects of Israel (hence the title Glimpses). I neglected to include, for example, pictures of war memorials commemorating thousands of Israeli dead in the wars of 1948, 1956, 1967, and 1973, when Arab neighbors attacked the State. I purposely did not include pictures of civilian Israelis stabbed in their yards by Palestinians. I don't show Palestinians dancing on rooftops after Israelis died in SCUD attacks. And yes, I am "guilty" of not representing the West Bank and Gaza's refugee camps.

Why? Because this exhibit is apolitical. Those who have seen it know this. To those who claim (as indeed they have) that merely calling the land "Israel" is a bigoted act, I have nothing to say. Israel is its name.

But if I was truly hell-bent on ignoring Israeli Arabs, why have I included pictures of a Muslim Mosque? Why didn't I tear up the negatives of the Gulf of Aqaba? Why is the Dome of the Rock the most prominent structure evident in my shots of the Old City?

Political criticism of any country is

The SGA elections must wait

A historical time has begun at UMass. For many years here at this school, too many years for any student to recall, the student government has been totally ineffective. How this occurred is irrelevent. What it means is totally relevant to every fee-paying student. The student government has the incredible responsibility of allocating $2.5 million to student organizations and events. The Student Government Association has the even more important responsibility of representing the undergraduate students' views to the administration.

Every Wednesday the best comic entertainment is available in Room 163 of the Campus Center. Your elected representatives play 'politician.' These people try to pretend they are in Washington, acting like a Republican should act. They act like a Democrat should act. However, there is no need for this. These people need to face up to the responsibility that they have been entrusted with by the student body. This responsibility includes stopping the incredible, consistent infighting that has occurred in the SGA's past. This includes stopping people from trying to meet their personal goals instead of bettering student programming.

The Senate leadership (the infamous 'gang of five') asked the administration to step in and force the Senate to 'grow up' and get on with meeting their responsibilities. The administration forced us to set up a commission which would restructure the student government. There has been some controversy over including administrators on the commission. Well, I have news. The administration has the authority to control everything the SGA does. They always have. And for the foreseeable future, they will. The administration allows us the right to administer the Student Activities Trust Fund basically because the students imposed this fee upon themselves, and we are cheep labor. Thus, by including administrators in the commission we are solving the problem of having to go back to the administration with a proposed new government, which they could conceivably reject.

On April 9 there will be an election for a new SGA president and student trustee. These are important positions in the world of student government. However, only three people are running for these two positions when, historically, many people have sought these seats. Why? Well, basically because the Commission to Restructure Student Governmnet will not have a finished product until May 1. We ask people to boycott the April 9 election.

By boycotting this April 9 illegitimate election you are sending a message to the administration and student government that you want an end to this playing around. You are demanding that your student government grow up. You are saying that you want the SGA to spend your money in a responsible way. You are demanding a legitimate, viable, efficient student government.

Notes from the Campus Center basement

A tribute: The folks who work in restaurants, bars and nightclubs deserve a hand. Actually, they deserve a lot more. They feed us, bring us cocktails and clean up after us. They get wet and greasy, pushed and prodded and yet they still have enough energy to get us that extra slab of pickle.

As a rule, they don't get paid enough. Virtual slavery should at least pay well. Over the past year, I've seen at least four or five waitpeople crying after being chewed out by the boss. The boss can usually be found at the bar, surveying his or her kingdom.

Tip well. Most of a person's paycheck depends on you. Don't order food. Request it. In short, remember that you haven't bought a human being; that a waitperson/cook/bartender doesn't forfeit the right to dumb mistakes, occasional lethargy or just a bad day.

When you go out, have fun. Treat well the people who serve you, and a good time will be had by all. Beer tastes better when served up by someone not dreading their job. And, besides if we are decadent enough to have someone feeding us and cleaning up after us — I know I am — we ought to be grateful.

Baba Yaga inspired this column by turning Twisters Tavern into a zoo Wednesday night. Zillions of folks came to jam with the rockin'-est ska band this side of the Partridge Family. B.Y. packed their sets with covers of Jimi Hendrix and the Police as well as a lot of originals. These four musicians took their name from a witch in a Russian folktale.

She cast her spell — loudly and with vigor. Twisters was packed wall-to-wall with a truly diverse crowd. Everyone from the lacrosse team to a herd of deadheads got The Spirit of Baba Yaga that night.

Folks skipped the Light Fandango. Drinking, dancing, drinking, singing, drinking — merrymaking, you know. I have never seen bartenders move so fast for so long. And, if it took a big, brawny type like myself 15 minutes to cross the bar, imagine the hell waitresses went through with a tray of drinks.

Getting out of hand is good for us. Provided of course that we still treat each other well. For the most part, that's what happened. Of course some of us should have stopped drinking before we did. And, some of us could stand to learn that a pleasant, but loud, "Excuse me," will get one through a crowd as fast as a forceful shoulder does. But, what the hell. No one died, right?

Blame it on the band. Or the moon, or a bad piece of chicken. If we had The Spirit, we got it from the band and their music. And, Latrobe, PA. Fine. Let your hair down. Escape for a few hours and revel in the loud, sweaty mob that is us. Look out for each other. Treat the people who serve us with gratitude and respect and, in the end, everyone will be happier. And, they won't spit in your food.

The damage done, now is the time to 'fess up

To those who violated Jason McDonald's privacy:

I draw no conclusions concerning your identities. I don't know who you are, but I do know what you've done and what I think of it. I shall be fascinated to hear what answer you have to make for your actions, in whatever form you deem appropriate.

What could have been going through your heads? Not only have you committed a shocking act of cruelty for the most base personal reasons, you have created an atmosphere of paranoia and distrust that is likely to set back the gay/lesbian/bisexual community's political and personal development more effectively than all the conservative venom on this campus.

It is said that this was intended to punish Jason McDonald for some unspecified slight which he may or may not have committed. I find this unspeakably arrogant. No insult could justify the cold-blooded destruction of a young person's chances for an education, family relations, and a positive coming out experience. It was against all right and conscience that you appointed yourselves Jason McDonald's judge, jury, and executioner.

Now that the damage is done, however, honor demands that you come forward and give your side of the story in an honest fashion. Democracy depends on individuals' willingness to take responsibility for the ways in which they use their freedom.

The character of the LBGA has been affected. What shy, insecure, gay freshperson will find the courage to live openly on this campus and explore groups like the LBGA, if this kind of cutthroat betrayal is what awaits them? And how can we present a united front against homophobia from the straight world if we insist on being each other's worst enemies? Must history call us not a strong, compassionate community, but a pack of bloodthirsty jackals?

Congratulations, whoever you are. You've succeeded in doing Ted Marvelias' work for him.

BOG passes voluntary prayer motion

By RUA KELLY
Collegian Staff

The Board of Governors, despite the administration's refusal to recognize their authority at this time, met last night in the Campus Center.

The BOG is currently reviewing its constitution in committee, and a motion was passed to bring the proposals of their constitutional committee before the executive board next week. The Board also discussed the upcoming April 9 elections.

According to Board Chairperson Susan Gordon, every office appearing on the ballot will have a candidate.

A motion proposed by Gov. Ted Maravelias was passed, which calls for a "voluntary Christian prayer" before each meeting; an amendment to remove the word Christian from the motion was rejected.

Gov. William Hewitt decried the motion, calling it "a David and Goliath battle against the Supreme Court," however, Maravelius cited the need to "challenge the status quo of [the University] as a secular institution."

Several governors were upset over the passage of the motion.

Gov. Chris Thomas said, "I think [this vote] is just going to bring more bad press to the Board . . . and I'm very disappointed in this body."

The Board voted unanimously to pursue legal action against the persons responsible for creating the commission reviewing student government at the University.

The motion charges that the commission, empowered by interim Vice Chancellor for Student Affairs Jo-Anne Vanin, is "acting out of bounds with the SGA Constitution as well as the agreement formalized April 4, 1985 regarding the Board of Governors."

Gordon spoke of possible legal violations to investigate, such as a "breach of contract or civil rights issues."

In other business:

- Steve Curry, Mary Noone, and Michael Levy were nominated to run for chaiperson and Rich Brown was nominated for vice chairperson. The Board will vote on the candidates next week.
- Gov. Maravelias made a failed attempt to suspend the rules to discuss his motion concerning the removal of the Union Video Center from its space in the Campus Center due to what he alleged was "political discrimination."
- Also, a motion to reinstitute the two seats allocated to the LBGA was ruled out of order by the chairperson.

The Tragically Hip to take their unhipness to Katina's

Anti-trend.

It's a good credo for a band to go by, especially in these times where most groups seem more like ideas manufactured by major label executives than real people who just want to play music.

The Tragically Hip, a group from Canada that mixes influences ranging from the Rolling Stones to the Sex Pistols, go by such a credo. They took their name from Michael Nesmith's Elephant Parts video as an indictment of their unhipness.

The group began in late 1983 when Gordon Downie (vocals), Bobby Baker (guitar), Gord Sinclair (bass) and Johnny Fay (drums) got together, and decided that they were destined to make some noise. A couple of years later they added rhythm guitarist Paul Langlois to complete the line-up.

Through extensive touring they became very popular in their native country and after one particularly impressive live show in Toronto they were signed to MCA Records. Their first release on MCA, Up to Here, which was followed up by their most recent album, Road Apples, made a little headway in the United States but absolutely exploded in Canada, selling 200,000 copies which is considered double platinum there. They were awarded "Most Promising Group of the Year" at the 1990 Juno awards, Canada's answer to the Grammys.

The Tragically Hip will play at Katina's in Hadley on Saturday. The 18-and-over show will start at 8 p.m.

John Carter is gone, Threadgill is coming

By BILL ROSENBLATT
Collegian Staff

Yet another jazz master has left us, though this one is not likely to get the tacky necrophilia treatment the industry bestows on the likes of Dexter Gordon and Sarah Vaughan. Composer and reed player John Carter passed away on Wednesday at the age of 61.

Valley Jazz

Carter was a key member of the 70s Los Angeles musical underground. Along with his one-time side-kick, trumpeter Bobby Bradford, he hung out and recorded with Ornette Coleman.

Luckily, he died after completing his masterwork: a five-album series called Roots and Folklore: Episodes in the Development of American Folk Music. Each LP explored a particular period in the history of African-Americans, starting with pre-slavery Africa, working through the slave trade and Emancipation to the turn of the 20th century.

The music on these phenomenal albums (the first on the Italian Black Saint label, the rest on domestic indie Gramavision) incorporates elements from the periods represented into a post-modernist framework, and the medium-sized ensembles include Carter's cohorts from L.A. as well as adventurous players from the current New York avant-garde.

In happier news, another exciting, eclectic composer and reed player is still very much with us and is coming to the area next Tuesday night: Henry Threadgill and his new band Very Very Circus will be at the Iron Horse in Northampton at 7 p.m.

Threadgill came up in the early 70s as a member of the Chicago-based Association for the Advancement of Creative Musicians (AACM), the most successful of the various artists' collectives that sprung up during the 60s. The original intent of these organizations was to take the "means of production" (recording, rehearsal and performance space) into the musicians' own hands and away from the constrictions of the recording industry. Their musical output shows that they took full advantage of their new-found freedom; it was the most experimental music ever recorded under the rubric of "jazz."

The trio Air, an AACM group, was Threadgill's first vehicle. The band was a marvel: three virtuoso musicians (Threadgill on reeds, bassist Fred Hopkins and drummer Steve McCall) communicating telepathically with each other on-stage, the spiritual fathers of Boston's The Fringe.

Air was also among the first "free" groups to explicitly state the linkage between that music and the rest of the Black tradition; their 1976 album Air Lore was a collection of Scott Joplin and Jelly Roll Morton tunes that Boston Phoenix critic Bob Blumenthal called "unsurpassed as a statement of historical homage from the perspective of the frontiers."

Although Air was a collective, Threadgill was its principal composer and clearly its leader. So it wasn't surprising when Air broke up in the mid-80s and Threadgill pursued more challenging compositional opportunities. He joined the freewheeling David Murray Octet, whose sound Amiri Baraka termed "avant gut bucket," and then formed his own seven-piece band, the Sextett [sic].

The Sextett released five wonderful albums with evolving personnel. With this group, Threadgill showed himself to be the most interesting writer for medium-sized ensembles since Charles Mingus; he won a Down Beat critics' poll for composition a few years ago. Like Mingus and Ellington, he has a knack for writing material especially tailored to the particular musicians in his bands, and his music contains references to styles from throughout the Black music continuum.

Threadgill's music is easiest to describe in terms of the ambiguities that make it consistently fascinating. Most importantly, his writing has a "classical" complexity and harmonic density, but this never gets in the way of the blues feel and swinging rhythms. It always straddles a line between composition and improvisation. Threadgill is fond of mournful, dirge-like tunes (in the tradition of New Orleans funeral marches); each of his albums seems to contain one such, and he even manages to inject this mood into some of his most exuberant, up-tempo compositions.

The Sextett's instrumentation included traditional jazz instruments, but added the occasional unusual one, such as cello and bass trombone. In contrast, Threadgill's new group Very Very Circus goes completely off the deep end: french horn, two guitars, two tubas (another nod to turn-of-the-century New Orleans) and drums in addition to Threadgill's saxes and flutes. The group made its debut in December 1989 at one of those typical zillion-dollar-admission New Year's gigs in New York.

History can correct our collective amnesia

Hope and History: Why We Must Share the Story of the Movement
Vincent Harding
Orbis Books

For many of us, the Civil Rights movement is a vague episode in United States history. Often it is crowded out by the unrelenting angst and excitement that the fabled Sixties spawned — from the trauma of the Kennedy assassination in 1963 to the provocative revolts against the Vietnam War and even normalcy itself, later in the decade. Yet by failing to recall the meaning of the Civil Rights movement, we not only fail to grasp its impact on subsequent events, but its significance for today. Although George Orwell warned us in Nineteen Eighty-Four of the penchant for ruling cliques to "rewrite history" to serve their own purposes, few of us face the risks involved in forgetting the movement that changed race relations in this country forever.

Book Review

As such, Hope and History is a vital corrective to our collective amnesia. Blending superbly the skills of the historian and the change agent, Vincent Harding not only re-invokes a people's passion for social justice, but insists that it is a movement that we ignore at our own peril.

Reminding us of Dr. Martin Luther King Jr.'s call for a movement "to redeem the soul of America," Harding asks: "What greater gift could a nation receive? And what struggles lie ahead if the nation does not know its soul?" Even the most cursory glance at present-day America, with its multiple scourges of racism, violence and social neglect, make these very important questions indeed.

Dr. Harding, a historian by training, continues to offer seminars on the implications of the 60s' African-American struggle and served as senior advisor to "Eyes on the Prize." Unlike many historians, however, the author refuses to remain detached from the past or force it into neat categories to fill history textbooks. Instead, like some impassioned shaman from the groves of academia, Harding reveals that history can be both informed and inspired. Including the writing technique of the rhetorical question and masterful use of parentheses, Hope and History becomes less a review of the past than an encounter with the present.

Occasionally the two literary devices coincide, as when the author asks: "What empowers a Black man in 1965 to stand in front of a group of white law officers (with all the terrible history of such encounters written in his bones) and lecture them on the meaning of the Nuremberg tribunals and on personal accountability for their consciences?"

In a chapter entitled "God's Appeal to This Age," Harding personalizes his subject matter by using simple language to describe a revolting event: "He was only five years old . . . now a security guard (is) assigned to his elementary school because he brought a loaded handgun to school." Later in the chapter the author verbalizes an unasked question felt by many: "Is it too late?" Yet he confronts hard questions like these without succumbing to despair — or retreating into mere platitudes (although his religious foundations are evident, as they were for much of the Civil Rights movement.) Frequently he challenges the cool resignation and consumerism so rampant today with directness and concern: ". . . there are times in our experience when we are living lives which contradict and deny the best truths that we claim for ourselves." Dr. Harding strives mightily to revive those truths from within us by sharing with us the diverse voices that moved a nation — voices as varied as Malcolm X, the poet Langston Hughes and writer Margaret Walker. At other times, a simple observation suggests the feeling of that era, as when Mrs. Polly Heidelberg, a black woman from Mississippi, recalls when Rita Schwerner left the roots she had formed in the South. Leaving the very soil that had taken the life of her husband, Mickey, and returning to New York City, Mrs. Heidelberg comments: "You never saw a lady weep like Rita Schwerner when it was time for her to leave."

Although Hope and History was especially written for educators who seek to introduce a new generation of students to the Civil Rights movement, its appeal should hardly be confined to academics. Like the movement he so obviously admires, this work is also a gift. Into the wounds of divisiveness, Dr. Harding casts a bridge; into the depths of our silence, he speaks. As an African writer once explained, "I am a citizen of a country that does not yet exist." Like a Biblical prophet, Vincent Harding points us to that promised land. Only we can take the next steps.

Body's initial attack on AIDS virus may lead to vaccine

BOSTON (AP) — The discovery that the body mounts a furious but ultimately futile attack on the AIDS virus in the first weeks of the infection may help scientists develop vaccines against the disease, doctors reported yesterday.

In two studies in the New England Journal of Medicine, researchers found that during the first weeks after it gets into the body, the AIDS virus multiplies rampantly. But then the body's natural defense system goes to work and kills the virus by the billions, knocking it back to barely noticeable levels.

"If that effective immune response is already in place before virus replication can take off, then it's quite likely that there will be a complete halt of virus growth," said Dr. David D. Ho, one of the researchers.

However, another prominent AIDS scientist cautioned that because this immune reaction, no matter how powerful, fails to destroy the virus completely, it is unlikely to provide the absolute protection necessary for a vaccine.

"We have to prevent the virus from getting into people in the first place, and if it does, we have to learn how to make immune responses that are different from those that naturally occur," said Dr. William Haseltine of the Dana Farber Cancer Institute.

The studies were conducted by Ho, director of the Aaron Diamond AIDS Research Center in New York, and Dr. Stephen J. Clark of the University of Alabama.

Together, they documented the initially overwhelming growth of the virus and then the body's vigorous response in seven people who were newly infected with the AIDS, or HIV, virus.

"We found that very early on during the illness, there is a tremendous burst of virus replication that occurs in the patient," said Ho. "It was quite revealing to see it grow so quickly. That has never been formally documented for HIV.

"Then things turn around a week or two later," he said. "The virus replication returns to barely detectable levels. It suggests that there is something very effective in the host that can quickly control the spread of the virus."

Ho added, "It is very important to study that. We will be spending a lot of time and energy to pursue that effective immune response."

All of the men studied had gone to the hospital for treatment of sickness resulting from the initial infection. Their symptoms included rashes, fever, sore throats and aches. All got better without treatment.

"They are sickest when their virus levels are highest," said Clark. "They have not had time yet to develop an immune response. As it emerges, the virus declines, and their symptoms disappear."

YOUR DAILY HOROSCOPE
By JEANE DIXON

ARIES (March 21-April 19): You can pursue your plans more forcefully now without jeopardizing a professional relationship. Making a definite commitment to a team effort will both brighten your day and fatten your pocketbook.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Keep a low profile today. An old grievance at work is finally resolved. Do not let a financial disappointment get you down. A loved one's attitude cheers you up. Stay at home tonight.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Strong allies and a feeling of freedom boost your spirits. Be patient with an inexperienced person. Let other people follow their own paths. Romance must be allowed to develop at its own pace.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): An injustice will outrage you. Take action. An artistic project you complete on your own helps dispel the blues. You reap new psychological rewards. Trust your instincts in romance.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Someone may try to pull a fast one. Postpone signing a long-term agreement until more facts are available. Get better organized so you can participate more fully in collaborative financial ventures.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Make a special effort to complete old projects before initiating new ones. Take an indirect approach with a difficult customer. Far-off friends will appreciate a newsy letter.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Lay the groundwork for a promotion or a raise by showing more initiative at work. You can get an important project off the ground with minimal interference. Call your loved ones regularly.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): The financial picture shows decided improvement. You can overcome a roadblock and forge ahead with a special professional or personal project. Travel may be part of your day's plan.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Do not throw away recent gains for vague possibilities. Finish old business before launching new ventures. Examine your beliefs and values. You must not compromise your principles.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Maintain a low profile and keep an eye on long-term investments. It may be time to jump off the romantic merry-go-round for some fresh air. Widen your circle of friends.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Your ability to concentrate is enhanced by someone's absence. Talks concerning joint investments, bills and businesses are likely to go well today. A romantic partner's decision could surprise you.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): An upsurge in energy is indicated. You should be able to acquire some valuable financial assistance. Keep a closer watch on everyday spending. Not a good day to sign long-term agreements.

Gay artist speaks of need to fund socially diverse art

By SHAWN COTTER
Collegian Correspondent

Tim Miller, a controversial performance artist whose grant from the National Endowment of the Arts was cut, performed Wednesday night at the Northampton Center for the Arts.

The performance was sponsored by Real Art Ways, an arts organization which supports the "NEA Four," a term that refers to four artists, including Miller, who lost their NEA funding.

Miller, Karen Finley, Holly Hughes, and John Fleck were artists who received NEA grants. The grants were unanimously approved by the NEA board, but were then vetoed by the chairperson, John Froheymer, due to his belief that the works were of "objectionable content."

Miller said as a result of last year's controversy over the Mapplethorpe exhibit, which included homoerotic images, the NEA has received pressure from Jesse Helms and other members of Congress to limit funding support to "mainstream" artists or lose funding. He believes this pressure caused Froheymer to pull the grants from the four.

Miller, Hughes, and Fleck are gay or lesbian, whereas Karen Finley is a feminist performance artist.

"It is vital to fight for cultural space because if we don't we will lose a generation of artists," said Miller. He cited the need for all marginalized artists, gays, lesbians, women, and people of color, to fight for their right to speak, vent, and express their anger at their situations in the world.

He also said gay and lesbian artists need visibility. "Keep pushing and keep creating culture," said Miller, "so that the future will be better for the next generations."

Miller said in response to the denial of the NEA grants, he worked with Hughes to create the National Fund for Lesbian and Gay Artists. Once it is finalized, the fund will provide money for those emerging artists who are being kept "in the closet" by existing agencies. "There are many gay and lesbian artists who are being inhibited by all the right-wing bullshit," Miller said.

Miller added he would never encourage any artist to stay in the closet in order to get more grant money. He suggests there is a need for greater support from within the GLB community for artists who want to be "out" in their work.

Miller's next performance of Sex/Love/Stories will be at Bronson and Hutensky Theatre, 233 Pearl Street, Hartford, at 7:30 p.m.

Iota Beta has 50th birthday

The Iota Beta Chapter of Chi Omega, the largest and oldest national sorority on campus, will begin celebrating its 50th anniversary today.

Chi Omega, founded April 5, 1895 at the University of Arkansas, has 175 chapters and 190,000 initiated sisters across the country. The University of Massachusetts chapter was formed June 5, 1941.

The festivities are scheduled to begin tomorrow morning at 10 a.m. with an open house at the sorority until 4 p.m. for all Chi Omegas, their families, and friends. A campus tour for all alumni will be leaving from the Campus Center at 11 a.m.

Rosely Dabbs, the National President of Chi Omega, will present the 50th year certificates to the recognized charter members at 2 p.m. in the chapter house.

Jackie Leonard, president of Chi Omega, said, "It's a big honor for us to have her. She has never been in our chapter before."

Dabbs and Nancy Torrey, financial director, will present the dedication of the Chi Omega bench to the University at 3 p.m. near the Campus Pond, as a gift to commemorate the anniversary. Dabbs will be the honorary guest speaker at a candle light dinner for alumni and active members, at 6 p.m. in the Campus Center. An alumni ceremony for graduating seniors will also take place during the dinner.

The celebration will end Sunday with a continental breakfast at the chapter house.

■ Yankee Conference realignment

"William & Mary would add to the league, but they have far better resources than anyone else," Reid said. "They have financial resources that we can not compete with and that makes it tough."

"These three institutions are outstanding additions to the Yankee Conference," said Conference Commisioner David Nelson. "Each of these colleges have storied football traditions, and have been strong non-league rivals to many of our existing colleges. We feel the additions of James Madison, Northeastern and William & Mary will enhance our league for years to come."

"We have a number of concerns about expansion," Reid said.

The conference will be divided into two divisions: the New England Division — Boston University, Connecticut, Maine, Massachusetts, New Hampshire and Rhode Island; and the Mid-Atlantic Division — Delaware, James Madison, Northeastern, University of Richmond, Villanova University and William & Mary.

Under the new alignment a school will play all the teams in their division and 4 of the 6 from the other division. This leaves two open dates for a school to schedule non-league play.

"This conference is going to be extremely tough, probably the toughest in the country," said Yankee Conference Information Officer Eric McDowell. "William & Mary has a wonderful, quality program, a long home winning streak and is a perennial tournament team. James Madison only started football in 1974 but they are a very good football team. Northeastern is a program on the rise and they were a natural choice since they play most of the conference already."

League officials are correct when they state that the prestige of the league will improve with the expansion. The additions of these schools, especially William & Mary and James Madison, make the Yankee Conference arguably the strongest 1-AA conference in the nation.

Yankee Conference officials said they are hoping to receive a second automatic bid to the 1-AA playoffs. Coaches expressed concern over how an automatic bid to the NCAA playoffs would be decided. A championship game between the two divisions would not be acceptable to the coaches, according to a memorandum circulated among them.

"We will have to ask the NCAA," Nelson said in reference to a tournament bid. "The champion of each division might be able to get an automatic bid."

"That is our hope down the road," McDowell said of the bid. "We have the potential for five ranked teams. In a conference as strong as this, a team that goes 7-4 will have to get a look by the tournament committee."

The memo, dated March 15, states the best plan of action is a 10-team conference, adding only William & Mary.

Obviously, the coaches' recommendations were not fully heeded but league officials say they were taken into consideration by the Presidents.

"The decision to extend the invitations were made by the Presidents, and they were well aware of the coaches proposals and concerns," McDowell said. "Obviously, it appears that the Presidents felt the pluses outweighed the minuses, but I can't speak for them."

For the Yankee Conference, bigger might or might not be better. The quality of play might be better, but the headaches might also be bigger. Only time will tell.

at meetings with the adminstrators.

"I think they should be unhappy and express their dissatisfaction," said Hewelt, who was unaware of the player-administration meetings. "When you're 0-27, you can't sit back on your heels and say 'I'm perfectly satisfied and happy with the situation."

"I think the situation here can be fixed," Hewelt said of thé women's basketball program. "When the elements are available to get that done, I think you will see it turn around."

Sortino said she isn't the one to make the decision about the future of the program, but did add, "We're certainly not going to throw in the towel."

Hewelt's career coaching record now stands at 133-128. She said she has yet to make any definite plans for the future, but did say she and her staff want to continue coaching.

"We're gonna move on and look for a situation where we can run the kind of program we're comfortable with running," she said.

Softball clips Hawks' wings, 7-1, 9-0

The softball team soundly defeated a traditionally tough Hartford, in a 7-1, 9-0 doubleheader in Connecticut yesterday.

By CHRIS MIRACLE
Collegian Staff

Hawks may be considered an endangered species the next time the University of Massachusetts women's softball team travels to Connecticut.

Improving their overall record to 10-7 (7-0 in the North), the Minutewomen thrashed the University of Hartford in a 7-1, 9-0 doubleheader yesterday.

In the second game Darlene Claffey threw a no-hitter enroute to her fifth shutout of the season. She gave up only one walk while fanning seven Hawk hitters. Her record now stands at 5-3.

"Darlene pitched a great game," said UMass coach Elaine Sortino.

In the nightcap for UMass, catcher Cherie DellAnno went 3-3 knocking in one RBI. She also had three stolen bases.

Shortstop Barbara Marean chalked up 3 RBIs while batting 3-4.

Third baseman Tiffany Hoidson had her first double of the year in her 1-1 performance as the Minutewomen combined for 24 hits in the two games.

"We hit three balls to the fence and the wind was blowing in," Sortino said. "Anytime we have 24 hits, that makes me smile a lot."

Defensively, Sortino said the Minutewomen were not tested.

The most trouble they had was staying warm later in the evening as the temperature dropped from 65 degress to 40.

Twelve of 24 UMass hits came in the first game. Infielder Jen Miller had one home run and 4 RBIs, as she went 3-3.

Making contact twice for a single and a double, outfielder Heather Dorsey had one RBI.

Third baseman Chris Collins clubbed in another run as she went 1-2.

The only Hawks run of the day resulted from Holly Aprile walking one Hawk. That was the only blemish in Aprile's 2-4 day as she struck out eight.

The Minutewomen will have one day off to rest before venturing to Rutgers for another doubleheader tomorrow. Game one begins at noon.

"We have a big one coming up this weekend," Sortino said. "Sparks will fly as usual. No motivational factor is necessary for either club."

Hewelt not to return for 1991-92 season

By BRETT MORRIS
Collegian Staff

As is the case with all highly visible sports programs, when the team is not doing well, the decision-makers look at the staff.

That's exactly what the athletic administration did when they announced on March 21 that the University of Massachusetts' head women's basketball coach, Kathy Hewelt, would not return for the 1991-92 season.

Hewelt was told of that decision March 15, after the conclusion of an 0-27 season. Her three-year contract will expire in September and the administration did not extend her contract. Because of administrative policies, Hewelt had to be told by March 16.

When asked about the basis of the decision, both Athletic Director Frank McInerney and Associate Athletic Director Elaine Sortino did not wish to comment.

"I don't think it's very appropriate," Sortino said. "It's been a very difficult situation on the coach and the kids."

Hewelt inherited a tumultuous program from former UMass coach Ethel Allman in 1988 and leaves with a "frustrating" 16-69 mark at the University.

"We came in and were able to stabilize the program," Hewelt said. "But, rebuilding takes a long time.

"The program is not necessarily going to come out of a hole without a strong financial commitment and the length of time it takes to turn it around," she said. "If those things aren't available, then it's time for us to move on and it's time for the administration to find someone else that can come in and make the situation go."

However, the decision may not have been based solely on the administration's beliefs. The players had their say.

The team got together and met with McInerney and Sortino a few days before the decision was made, according to players who wished not to be identified.

They said they expressed their "discontent" and raised questions about the future of the program and staff

Reid adverse to YanCon shuffle

By DAN WETZEL
Collegian Staff

The current trend in college athletics is for universities to huddle together into super-conferences. The Big East is growing, the Southeastern Conference has expanded and the Yankee Conference, home of the University of Massachusetts football team, has followed suit and bolstered its' ranks.

Although many around the league see this as a positive move, UMass' Jim Reid sees many negative aspects.

"I don't like [the expansion]," Reid said. "I would like the conference to go back to just the land grant [universities], Delaware and BU."

On March 22, the Presidents of the Yankee Conference extended invitations to James Madison University, Northeastern University and the College of William & Mary to join the league in football play in 1993.

James Madison and Northeastern have already accepted the bids, according to each schools' head coach.

"This is a tremendous boost for our football program," said James Madison's head coach Rip Scherer. "We match up well with the other schools both academically and athletically. This will help all phases of our program."

"James Madison is a very difficult place to get to," Reid said. "You have to fly to Washington and then take a bus for two hours just to play."

"This automatically adds credibility and respect to our football team," said Northeastern head coach Barry Gallup. "We are very excited to be associated with a football conference of this caliber."

"Northeastern is a good game and we play them anyway but their facilities are terrible," Reid said. "The field there is dangerous. The AstroTurf is thin and the locker room is a disgrace. However they promised that they would upgrade, so we will have to see."

William & Mary must have the bid ratified by their Board of Visitors which will meet on April 11 and 12.

William & Mary Athletic Director John Randolph said the College is "pleased with the decision of the Yankee Conference Presidents," but he was unable to comment on the likelihood of William & Mary accepting the bid. Head coach Jimmye Laycock had no comment.

Baseball to host Maine

By GREG SUKIENNIK
Collegian Staff

When you think of collegiate baseball in New England, "Maine" invariably comes to mind.

The Black Bears have gained respect in recent years as one of the best baseball programs in the East. They made it as far as the NCAA Eastern Regionals last season, and established themselves as a nationally-recognized program in 1986 when they made the College World Series.

The University of Massachusetts baseball team will face both the Black Bears' talent and reputation at noon today in a doubleheader at Earl Lorden Field.

"Maine is always tough," said UMass coach Mike Stone. "They're well balanced: They have good pitching, good defense and they swing the bats well."

The Minutemen, 6-11-1 overall and 3-1 in the Atlantic 10 Conference, have lost two straight coming into today's twin bill. Their last game was a 10-9 loss to Hartford, in which they let a 7-1 lead slip away.

"Hopefully we'll bounce back," said Stone of the team's reaction to that loss. "It was another game we should've won but let slip away . . . once we get on track, we'll be alright."

The Black Bears (13-13) are mired in a mini-slump of their own, having recently lost three straight to Providence College.

Maine's Assistant Sports Information director, Joe Roberts, said the Black Bears started off hot, then cooled down and are still in the process of climbing out of that slump.

"We started out 9-2," Roberts explained. "On our spring trip, we won the first three games we played outdoors in the South Florida Invitational and started out 9-2 but, by the time we got back, we were 10-9.

"We lost four in a row to Miami and played five teams that were ranked in the Top 20," he continued. "We haven't played up to that level since."

Stone will start Jim Telgheder and Scott Meaney on the mound for the Minutemen. Maine coach John Wilken will counter with number four and five starters Ed Therrian and Jason Dryswak.

As a team, the Black Bears are batting .276. Outfielder Mark Sweeney (.356, 32 hits, 7 HR, 24 RBIs) and third baseman Shannan Knox (.344, 31 hits, 5 HR) lead the team in hits, and Gary Taylor shares the runs lead with Sweeney at 25.

"If we can play like we're capable of playing, we can stay with and beat anyone, but I'm not sure we've done that yet," said Stone. "We've seen good pitching, hitting and defense, but not at the same time. We've got to get all three from our team at once."

Garber's Gorillas face undefeated Wildcats at UNH

By ADRIEN MATT
Collegian Staff

You couldn't know your opponent any better, even if you tried.

For the University of Massachusetts lacrosse coach, Ted Garber, New Hampshire's lineup poses no questions, only answers.

Garber recruited the class he and UMass will face at 1 p.m. Saturday in Durham, N.H.

Also in his first year at the helm of a lacrosse program, UNH coach Jim Urquart said whatever the outcome of the game, he can't lose.

"He recruited them," Urquart said jokingly of the former UNH coach. "If we win, it'll look good on me and if we lose, I can blame it on him."

The Wildcats host UMass with a 3-0 record, whereas UMass posts a 1-2 record after a sudden death overtime against Brown Wednesday. Even on paper, it looks like UNH may have the psychological advantage.

"We had a great game," Garber said referring to Brown. "We're not out of everything. There's no such thing as a good loss, but if you look at teams like Syracuse and Loyola, they haven't beat a nationally-ranked team yet."

UNH faced C.W. Post (14-13 OT), Lehigh (14-6) and Hartford (23-11) while on the road. They have 29 returning players, 13 of which are seniors.

"Their first 10 are as good as Brown," said Garber. All UNH starters are seniors. "This is a big game for them."

Stowe Milhous will start in goal for the Wildcats. He boasts 34 saves with a goals against average of 10.23.

Starting attackmen will be Mark Botnick, Jeff Mechura and Tim Vetrano. Botnick leads the team in points with 12 goals and 8 assists, while Mechura leads the team in goals with 14.

Tri-captain Bill Sullivan will marshall the midfield along with Dave Robinson and Scott Wonjnovich. Defense will be heralded by tri-captain Mark Henderson, Bruce MacDonald and Eugene Donepp.

"Our goal this year is to be nationally ranked," Urquart said. "If we can play well against a team like UMass, hopefully we'll move up."

Starting in goal for UMass will be Ted Kellerman, supported by tri-captain Rick Mullins, Corey Cronin and Gary Wood. Kevin O'Connor will face off and switch midfield duties with Matt Garber, Ed O'Callaghan and John Schlipf. Also at midfield are tri-captain Rick Senatore, Mario Lopez, Jim Kushner, Francis Pepe and Pete Cuda.

At attack, tri-captain Jim McAleavey, Mike Caine and Mario Guaglianone will start, subbed by Mark Millon, Bill Begien and Rob Falvey.

"It'll be a ball-control type of game," Urquart predicted. "I know [Garber] has a lot of talent."

The game will be broadcast on WMUA 91.9 FM.

Holocaust recalled this week at UMass

By ALISON BUCKHOLTZ
Collegian Staff

Holocaust Memorial Week — a rememberance of the millions of Jews and other Nazi prisoners slaughtered in World War II — begins this week at the University of Massachusetts with the theme of "Don't let the lights go out," said Hillel's program director.

"[Light] symbolizes acknowledgement, understanding. Burning candles are associated with commemoration and their light threads through sad occasions as well as simchas — happy times," said Hillel program director Yehudit Heller.

A mixture of commemoration and celebration distinguishes this year's Memorial Week events. Tonight, Jennifer Justice, who celebrates acts of heroism that led to Jewish survival in the Holocaust, relives the experiences of people who saved others' lives in her presentation, "Who Shall Be Exalted."

Justice bases her performance on a collection of true stories. She believes that by remembering the motives and techniques of those who enabled others to live, often risking their own survival in the process, future tragedies may be prevented. She presents her stories at 7 p.m. tonight in the Hillel House lounge.

"Lodz Ghetto," a documentary which chronicles the history of the Polish ghetto where over 200,000 Jews were forced into slave labor by the Nazis before being sent to death camps, will be screened at 7:30 p.m., Tuesday in the Hillel House Lounge. The film examines the humanistic aspects of the Holocaust through poetry and personal diaries.

Professor James Young, who specializes in representations of the Holocaust, focuses on remembrance in his 7:30 p.m. Wednesday night slide presentation and lecture, "The Changing Face of Memory: Holocaust Monuments in New Times and Places" at Memorial Hall.

A professor in the English and Judaic Studies departments, Young is scheduled to speak on the changing landscape of Holocaust memory in Europe, Israel and America, including recent developments in Poland and Germany. The forms that memory takes, he believes, are as significant as the memories themselves.

Memory is also the goal of Thursday's campus-wide commemoration service in the Cape Cod Lounge. Students, faculty and staff will light memorial candles, read selections from liturgy and discuss their own memories of lost relatives and friends. All university and community members are welcome. The week will end with a Shabbat service at 7 p.m. Friday night in the Hillel House.

Heller said one week's worth of events does not exempt Jews and others from the responsibility of remembering the millions killed in the Holocaust, but "for the generations after the Holocaust, as we get further and further away from the effects of its tragedy," we need to set a time apart from everyday events to remember.

"Without knowledge and education, the dark will return," she said.

HIV-infected counselor criticizes US health care system

By CHRIS MUTHER
Collegian Staff

The health care system in the United States is not doing enough to help drug addicts and alcoholics with recovery and AIDS prevention, according to a former substance abuser turned counselor who is infected with HIV.

Speaking Friday at the University of Massachusetts, Jonathan Heins, a substance abuse counselor and recovering heroine addict, said although the health care system is doing a "wonderful" job, the providers and researchers are more interested in data gathering than the individual.

"We're expecting the addict to come in for an appointment," he said. "Unless there's a drug attached, he's not going to keep an appointment."

He said the way the present system is set up, unless the HIV infected addict is doing poorly, they will not get help. When they finally do get help, Heins said it is only "maintenance" until the addict dies.

He said there needs to be preventive treatment as well. Help needs to be offered, he said, to those who do not want it as well as those who do.

"There are a lot of people who are in the process of dying out in the street, and they are infecting a lot of other people out there," he added.

He said programs need to be started for drug addicts that teach about safe sex practices and the dangers of needle sharing that include needle distribution and bleaching as well as giving out condoms.

He said in addition to addicts, another often over-looked group in the spread of AIDS is alcoholics.

"The behavior and lifestyle [of an alcoholic] is risky," he said. "Many alcoholics are promiscuous while drunk. Society needs to realize that alcohol is as dangerous as drugs. Someone can be a only be a little drunk, but they can be a little drunk and spreading HIV."

He said the new victims of AIDS include housewives and professions, people who are having sex or sharing needles with substance abusers.

"It's a very non-discriminating disease," he said. "It doesn't care who or what you are."

Of all types of substances used by drug addicts, injected cocaine is the most dangerous because the user must inject the drug at least ten times to get high, Heins said.

Another problem with the health care system in regard to helping addicts is the overlooking of special problems female substance abusers face, Heins said.

"Many women who are addicts were abused or raped and the health care system doesn't address their emotional needs that need to be looked at in addition to the physical ones," he said.

In addition to abuse, he said there are other needs that are ignored in treating women.

"You can't take a mother away from her children — and the health care system doesn't allow for women to have children in drug treatment programs," he said.

EWC funding 'stabilized,' director says

By AMY HENRY
Collegian Staff

After surviving the loss of six programs and thousands of dollars, funding for the Everywoman's Center has appeared to have stabilized, said the Center's director.

"My sense is that funding has stabilized I'm not anticipating any other cuts. We have absorbed enough," Carol Wallace said. She said that Vice Chancellor of Student Affairs Jo-Anne Vanin, who ultimately is responsible for providing funds for the center is very supportive of the EWC and hopes to not have to cut the center in the future.

Vanin was unavailable for comment.

The EWC has lost six out of nine programs in the past couple of years. The following programs still exist: the Rape Crisis services, Counseling and Educator/Advocate, Resource and Referral and the Graduate Women's.

The Counseling program was cut in October 1990 and reinstated this semester after an extensive fundraising campaign. Funds for the program will run out at the end of this fiscal year in June. The new fiscal year begins in July and Wallace said they are hoping funds will be raised by then to keep the program.

"We are expecting a little gap in services," she said.

Wallace and the EWC Advisory Board which is made up of faculty, staff and students are looking at all possible fundraising options.

"We are approaching the Five Colleges which gave $10,000 this spring," Wallace said. "In addition, we are working with the Development Office at UMass with sending 400 letters to alumni who worked at the EWC asking for donations.

"We have asked Student Affairs for more trust fund money which we have received very little of in the past. We're applying for grant money, soliciting private donations and encouraging the campus community to do fundraisers for us."

In other EWC news, Stacy Roth, the former coordinator of the Educator/Advocate program left last month after working at the EWC since September 1988.

Trustee, president elections to take place tomorrow

By ALEX DERING
Collegian Staff

Elections for Student President and Student Trustee will be held Tuesday from 11 a.m. to 7 p.m.

The University of Massachusetts administration's refusal to recognize these elections has decimated the field of potential office-seekers, resulting in only three candidates for the two positions. The administration will only recognize the Student Trustee election scheduled for May which will also include a referendum on a restructed student government.

David Gagne is running unopposed for the office of Student President.

Ken Parker and Kevin Newnan are the only two candidates for the office of Student Trustee.

Northeast or Sylvan residents may vote at the Worcester Dining Commons. Orchard Hill or Central residents may vote at the Franklin Dining Commons. Southwest-North residents may vote at the Hampshire Dining Commons. Southwest-South residents may vote at the Berkshire Dining Commons. Students living in Greek Housing may vote at the Newman Center. Commuter Students may vote at the Hatch.

Absentee ballots will be available at all voting places for students who cannot vote at the designated place.

Gays and Republicans meet

Log Cabin Club paves the way for homosexuals in the GOP

By JOANNE PAUL
Collegian Correspondent

Republicans and gays have been polarized at the University of Massachusetts at Amherst, according to Richard Tafel, the president of the Massachusetts chapter of the Log Cabin CLub.

The Log Cabin Club, a group made up of gay, lesbian and bisexual Republicans, is trying to make a gay voice heard in Republican politics. Tafel said homosexuals and Republicans do not have to be at odds.

"There isn't any common ground. People at UMass do not say what they feel as far as Blacks, gays, etc. go," he said. "They are afraid that they will be looked down upon. So, the only ones who dare to speak their minds are the Republicans and members of Queer Nation.

"People come to UMass with homophobia," Tafel said. "When it's raised in the classrooms, dorms, it's not being addressed. The minority community at UMass needs to come together and challenge this.

PROFILE

"But you need to do it through persuasion and not through name calling. Don't call people racist, sexist, homophobic, fascist, instead you need to ask people why do they believe what they do.

"People have hatred, it's a fact. You shouldn't tell them to shut-up. It's important for them to get it out on the table. If not, then four years later after this person graduates, they take their feelings with them," he said.

"People were shocked that a Black man was beaten in California by white police officers. Then people have a nerve to say that they thought racism doesn't exist anymore," he said.

'I was invited to the Straight Pride Rally that was held at UMass on March 7, 1991 by members of the gay community,' he said. "The gay community was able to persuade the Republicans to let me speak at the rally, but it was members of Queer Nation that prevented me from speaking. They drowned out my speech with with whistling and shouting. All I wanted to say is that there's no room for bigotry, homophobia or hatred in our party. But the gay community at the rally wouldn't let me speak."

"The Governor [Weld] of Massachusetts is a Republican,' Tafel said. 'He is very supportive of our community and wants to end homophobia during his four years in office. He is probably one of the only governors who's appointed an 'openly' gay person to a high post.

"Nationally, President Bush signed the Hate Crimes Bill," he continued. "It records any kind of hate violence and he included gays in that bill. He invited gays to watch him sign it. It's the first time that gays were ever invited to watch the signing of anything."

"He also passed the Disability Act, which he included AIDS as a handicap," Tafel said. "This means that you can't discriminate against hiring a person who has AIDS."

The Log Cabin Club was formed in 1977 by Frank Ricchiazzi in Los Angeles and San Francisco in opposition to the Briggs Initative, legislation that would have barred gay people from teaching in California's public schools.

Since then, chapters have been formed across the nation — Texas, Florida, Virginia, Maryland, Washington D.C, Chicago, New York and Boston. Presently, there are chapters being formed in Oregon and Washington State.

In February, gay Republicans in Boston announced the formation of the state's Log Cabin Club, an organization dedicated to raising money and endorsing GOP candidates who support gay and lesbian issues.

LBGA marks 'Appreciation Day'

Heterosexual allies honored by gay community for their support

By AMY HENRY
Collegian Staff

To show appreciation for heterosexual allies, those heterosexuals who support the gay community, the University of Massachusetts Lesbian, Bisexual and Gay Alliance reserved last Friday for the first "Heterosexual Appreciation Day."

LBGA members gave out pins with a pink triangle on top of a blue square with the words "ally" written at a table on the concourse. The blue square symbolizes being heterosexual and the pink triangle is a symbol of being Gay.

Kelly Hayes, a music major and an LBGA member said, "Allies have been supportive of the gay community. They rally, fight for our rights, and they've been beaten up because people thought they were gay. We just want to show that we recognize them."

The day was also held because some heterosexuals thought the "straight pride" rally held last month was a negative representation of them because the organizers of the rally said many homophobic things, Hayes said.

Barbara Greve, a communications major and an LBGA member defined an ally as someone who is willing to support the gay community and fight for equal rights.

Hayes added, "It is important for us to recognize there are heterosexuals who are comfortable enough in their sexuality to support us."

Amy Schrager, a UMass student and an ally said "I think its important that bisexuals and homosexuals be supported through this very heterosexist society. It's there personal preference and they shouldn't get harassed."

Schrager said that being gay or bisexual is more then just having a same sex interlude. "Gays and bisexuals have trusting and caring relationships."

She added people who are not allies need to ask questions to try and understand and become aware of what being gay is about.

"Asking questions is the first step in trying to understand what being gay is all about. Even if you are not gay you can try to accept people who are."

Sarah Olivier, an ally and a women's studies major said, "I support the LBGA and I think GLB issues are really important. Their are so many gay, lesbian and bisexual people. Their people you know and love."

Miriam Bloom, an Amherst resident and an LBGA member said, she would define an ally as someone who supports gay rights even though it doesn't effect them and their not afraid to speak out against homophobia."

Owen Broadhurst, a Social Though and Political Economy major and an LBGA member said, "It's important to show allies we appreciate their very pro-gay, bi-friendly attitudes."

Film: LODZ GHETTO
Tuesday, April 9, 7:30pm Hillel House Lounge
This powerful documentary chronicles the history of this Polish ghetto where more than 200,000 Jews were forced into slave labor by the Nazis before being sent to death camps. Text is taken from actual diaries of these people. It is, despite the horrific subject, a poetic and humane film.

Lecture: PROFESSOR JAMES YOUNG

A woman gets raped and what do they call news?

Reporters and photographers armed with high-power lenses have stationed themselves across the street from the alleged victim's house since her name leaked out to the press, despite the fact that Florida law prohibits law enforcement agencies from revealing it.

Pamela McCarthy

Among the news outlets stalking the woman are supermarket tabloids such as the Star, the Globe, and the National Enquirer, whose reporter and two photographers were involved in a high-speed auto chase with the woman, who finally eluded them by running numerous stop signs and traffic lights. — exerpt from a Boston Herald news story about the alleged Easter weekend rape of a Florida woman by the Kennedys.

A woman accuses men who are a part of one of the richest and most powerful in families in Massachusetts of rape. They escape to Massachusetts. She stays in Florida, where the alleged crime occurred. She is persecuted by reporters who are really nothing but frustrated FBI geeks.

What's wrong with this picture?

This woman was assaulted. Contrary to what most morons are calling the Easter weekend fiasco, it is not a "sex-scandal." Sex is something two consenting adults enjoy. There is no consent in rape, and the only one who gets any enjoyment out of it is the rapist, or rapists.

Rape, in case anyone has forgotten, is a crime.

A woman who survives rape has some serious adjusting to do. She has to work through physical, emotional, and mental pain. She has to deal with the fact that she was violated in a way that large segments of our society still condones.

Enter our semi-evolved tabloid writers.

These mental giants have yet to recognize the fact that rape is a crime. They must still think that it was nothing but a harmless weekend romp. But that's no excuse.

This woman says she was raped. What right does anyone have to invade her privacy? She's been through enough. Kennedy-worshipping aside, she is not a side-show attraction. Surviving a rape doesn't make someone a celebrity; it doesn't make her public property, no matter who does it. She is not an object to be used for the titillation of the public.

Strange. Many of these are the attitudes that lead to rape.

Think about it. Women are seen as objects, as public property. Women are merely outlets for men's frustrations. Women are expendable. We don't feel — how can objects feel?

The fact is, she was assaulted. Why is there a stakeout across the street from her house? I don't care what cereal she eats in the morning. I don't care what toothpaste she uses. I don't care where she goes in her car. Since rape is rape no matter who commits it, I don't care that she says it is the Kennedys who did it to her. I just care that it she says it happened. I just care about justice being served.

Following her, taking pictures of her, badgering her, and chasing her in a car (I think these morons watch too many Miami Vice reruns) isn't going to serve justice. They only thing these hacks of America's finest scandal-sheets have accomplished is wreaking more damage on her life. They have raped her again.

Why is she being punished? Why is she being held prisoner in her own home? Why is she being chased and policed and scrutinized? She's been through hell. Show some sensitivity.

Some people, including the "reporters" who are guilty of harassing this woman, will say, "She should have expected this if she was going to accuse the Kennedys of rape."

Read: She was asking for it.

Sounds like an excuse for the second rape.

In this age of mass destruction, thank God for the Diaspora

I've often thought that Jewish guilt was rooted in aliyah. That if all the Jews went to Israel — not just to visit relatives, or to scale Massada as did our forebiood, or to merely caress the Wailing Wall, weep for the tragedies of the world, and then board that big metal bird back 'home' — but to actually exhume the exodus, that this burden would be relieved. It seemed that such a weight, the tsuras, that blatantly subtle, overwhelmingly inscrutable sense that we can do something more, imposed upon us by our relatives, friends and selves would evanesce peaceably to winds. Aliyah. Literally, to go up. Elegant colloquialism exalts aliyah as the spiritual leap married to the home-coming of the Jew to Palestine.

On Mar. 12, David Siegel, Special Assistant to the Israeli Ambassador to the United Nations and Director of Research for the Israeli Mission to the United Nations, spoke at Amherst college. The subject was "Zionism and the Politics of Jewish Nationalism."

To say that he spoke would be an understatement. I speak. Dan Rather speaks. My cat speaks. No, what flowed from the lips of this man would be better classified as an extemporaneous outpouring of history; a journal of the Semitic struggle.

Lynn Weissman

The orator aphorized as a land-based religion, astutely and by example, decrying anti-Zionism as the product of inter-Arab disputes. "Absolute power corrupts. Absolute powerlessness corrupts even more." Despotism and power struggles in the Arab world have mothered terrorist and fascist factions. David Siegel reminded us that in 1947 the Arabs rejected the partitioning of Palestine, and in 1948 all seven (now 21) Arab states attacked Israel. That it was the Zionist Jews of Israel, and not the Arabs, who were considered to be the 'Palestinians' until the mid-1960s. How the PLO (its central tenet: the destruction of Israel) was conceived in Egypt in 1964, but was later taken over by Yassir Arafat. And that it was Martin Luther King who denounced the slogan "Zionism is racism" as anti-Semitic.

In Wednesday's Boston Globe, writer, speaker, and holocaust survivor Elie Weisel is portrayed as "a target of criticism as well as acclaim. Some Israelis fault him for living in the Diaspora." (The Diaspora is the constellation of the Jewish people around the globe).

Such Israelis, living Zionism, want their people home. Zionist that I am, I thank God for the Diaspora these days, in the face of nuclear and chemical weapons, with the execution of mass genocide so facile, and when the sitting-duck potential of all those Jews in one place would be only too tempting for any Saddam Hussein wanna-bes.

Why the US sits and watches Iraq crumble

As reports filter out of Iraq of the damage carefully inflicted by U.S. Forces, the picture becomes increasingly grim, and not surprisingly, in conflict with earlier U.S. claims about civilian damage. Such pictures will speak volumes about the United State's conduct of the war and about the military and political censorship that accompanied it. The reports should also provide a meaningful backdrop for the ghoulish political commentary and general patriotic mood that will surround us in the foreseeable future.

No less striking will be the historical parallels that will arise as the United States attempts to secure a just and lasting peace from the rubble of Iraq.

However, little will it serve our ends to ponder the similarities between the American army as it helplessly watches the slaughter of Shi'ite rebels by the Republican Guards in southern Iraq, and the Soviet army on the banks of the Vistula in 1944, as it waited for the Nazis to exterminate the Jewish Resistance in Warsaw before liberating the city. The analogy is exact: Washington does not see the Shi'ite population as a "credible" player in a US dominated post-war Iraq. Clearly, it is in our best interests to watch the massacre — with the proper public objections and pronouncements of non-interference, of course.

The Kurdish resistance in the north will probably suffer the same fate, since Kurdish nationalism is not in the interests of our ally Turkey, which is in the process of being rewarded for its good behavior during the war.

In fact, Washington has stated in the most explicit terms that it desires a military coup in Iraq — because only the military can control the population and prevent the "Lebanonization" of Iraq. Also, the military has in the past proven its willingness to deal with the United States; i.e. the military is a "credible" player.

Finally, the rebellion in Iraq serves the United States' designs in another way; it just may provide a reasonable explanation for all those reports of destruction, disease and famine that will continue to filter out of Iraq.

Prof jumps to the defense of chemicals

The Collegian recently reported that a can of trichloroethane, described as a "highly flammable solvent," was placed in the SGA president's mailbox.

Far from being highly flammable, trichloroethane is almost completely non-flammable. It is a common choice as a cleaning solvent, in part because it is essentially impossible to set fire to it under normal conditions.

I've been trying to figure out how The Collegian could have concluded that trichloroethane was a fire hazard. My guess is that your staff realized that trichloroethane is (horror!) A CHEMICAL, and therefore assumed that, like other CHEMICALS such as water, cotton, oxygen and baking soda that it must naturally be a menace to life and civilization.

Bernard Miller
Professor of Chemistry

Furlough n: a leave of absence from duty granted especially to a soldier.
Budget n: a financial report containing estimates of income and expenses; also: a plan for coordinating income and expenses.

YOUR DAILY HOROSCOPE
By JEANE DIXON

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Follow your instincts and be more conservative where spending is concerned. An unexpected bonus will reduce financial pressures. A neighbor or older relative offers household help.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Fulfilling your commitments is a top priority. Children will require a gentle but firm hand. Do your homework before signing an agreement. Show your warmhearted side to family and friends.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Investigate all business propositions. Your imagination will work wonders. The financial picture shows decided improvement. Consult experts before making investments.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Business travel is best postponed. A loving relationship could take an exciting new turn. Trust your judgment even if someone challenges your decisions. Take a gamble in romance.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Members of the general public could prove erratic today. Keep your cool. Sticking to conventional, tried-and-true business methods will get the job done. Romance may have to wait.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Financial opportunities abound, thanks to your ability to make friends. A large meeting gives you a chance to shine. Your secret fantasies are close to realization!

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Look forward to a productive day when you keep important matters under your control. Avoid incurring new debts. Your energy mounts tonight; you feel ready for action. Examine your beliefs.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Settling a debt may be important to your good name. Be extra cautious with your credit cards. Close business talks will come in handy; do not underestimate their value. Accept help graciously.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Group interaction keeps you in good spirits. A pleasant social surprise is part of the picture. Even if work seems like a grind now, push ahead. Your perseverance will be richly rewarded.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Financial matters may still be a source of concern. Postpone purchasing major household items until they go on sale. Accept your appearance and personality. Attend more group functions.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Money spent on health-related activities is a sound investment. Your work colleagues are great company. You will make a big splash by playing to your audience. Dynamic action pays off.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Your instincts guide you in a profitable direction today. Working behind the scenes will prove beneficial. Others look to you for leadership. Strengthen family ties with regular visits.

UM Lax beats Wildcats

By ADRIEN MATT

DURHAM, N.H. — On the way to beating New Hampshire 15-12, Jim McAleavey broke a University of Massachusetts lacrosse team record for career assists.

The senior tri-captain finally hit stride against the Wildcats scoring 1 goal and contributing 7 assists, for a game-high 8 points. He finished the Cornell game with goose eggs and had 2 goals and 3 assists against St. John's.

Jeff Spooner ('77) had previously held the record at 141 assists, and McAleavey surpassed the mark with 144. He has 3 goals and 10 assists for the year.

UMass coach Ted Garber said he was pleased with the result of the game, but assistant coach Tom Carmean said he was displeased with the execution of that result.

"They didn't play well at all today," Carmean said. "They didn't execute plays right. They looked sloppy out there."

The team agreed the play was scrappy but was happy with the win.

This game was big for UNH but huge for UMass. UMass entered the game ranked 16th in the nation (the ranking did not include the sudden death loss to Brown on Wednesday). The Gorillas needed a win and will need to continue to rack up the Ws in order to make the first round of the NCAA playoffs.

UNH entered the match undefeated in three games but Saturday's result ended a seven-game winning streak dating back to last season. UMass still leads the series between the clubs at 27-14, and has won last seven straight games.

"They have a lot of depth and that wore us out in the second half," said UNH coach Jim Urquhart. "They were able to capitalize on opportunities we weren't. I was hoping they'd keep down their man-up percentage."

The Gorillas were able to capitalize on man-up situations for the first time this season. Prior to Saturday's game, UMass was 0-for-14 on man up and are now 2-for-22. In four opportunities, UNH took advantage twice.

The scoring was tight throughout the match and UMass never really blew the doors off the game. The first quarter ended at 4-all. A Francis Pepe goal was assisted by John Schlipf to pull UMass ahead for the first time (8-7) with five second remaining in the first half. A three-goal streak in the third quarter put UMass ahead for the remainder of the game.

UMass outshot UNH 46-39 and outhustled the Wildcats in groundballs 62-46.

Senior tri-captain Jim McAleavey (30) broke the Gorillas' career assists record this Saturday on the way to beating UNH 15-12. McAleavey contributed one goal and seven assists and set the career assists mark at 144.

Kevin O'Connor took 18 of 29 faceoffs for the Gorillas.

Mark Millon and Mario Guaglianone each netted 4 goals, Millon also had 1 assist. Mike Caine put away 2 goals and John Schlipf contributed 3 assists.

Ted Kellerman came up with 18 saves and stands at 2-2. UNH's Stowe Milhous injured his right quadricep early in the second quarter and finished the game with 8 saves. Milhous' status was not disclosed at the time of the injury nor after the game. Brian Vona replaced him in net finishing with 23 saves.

Wildcat Dave Robinson had a team-high 4 points with 2 goals and assists. Jeff Mechura, Bill Sullivan and Mark Botnick each finished the game with 3 points.

Softball continues winning streak at Rutgers, 11-2, 17-0

By FELICE COHEN

The University of Massachusetts softball team left Piscataway, N.J., with a whopping 42 hits and two more wins added to their season as they beheaded their Atlantic 10 foe, the Rutgers Red Knights, 11-2, 17-0. The Minutewomen stand at 12-7 (9-0 in the North) for the season.

The first game saw Minutewoman pitcher, junior Holly Aprile, take the mound. Aprile faced 25 batters, striking out five and walking two on the way to her sixth victory, bringing her record to 6-4 on the season.

But that's only half the story.

In that first game, UMass had 20 hits in their 35 at bats with everyone taking part in the festivities.

Leading the way for the Minutewomen were seniors Cherie DellAnno, 4-4, who had two doubles and two singles with one RBI and a stolen base; Jen Miller, 3-4, had three singles and one RBI; and Barbara Marean, 2-5, had two singles and two RBIs.

Aprile not only came through on the mound, but at the plate as well, going 4-5 with four singles, two RBIs and one stolen base.

Also cranking out hits for the Minutewomen were junior Peggy Bush, 3-4, and sophomore Amy Cockley, 2-3, with two RBIs.

Rutgers, who went into Saturday's A-10 game, 6-11, must have been more attuned to the beautiful weather than the game.

Sophomre Darlene Claffey, now 6-3, dominated the mound against the Rutgers, keeping them to only three hits at 17 at bats, en route to her sixth shut out of the season.

But again the power of the Minutewomen's offense struck and this time to the tune of 22 hits at 34 at bats.

Displaying their magic, UMass succeeded at their disappearing act, leaving when the game was called because of the league's fifth inning-10 run rule.

Now for the climax of the story.

But at least it wasn't a wasted day for the Minutewomen who managed to get in some batting practice before they headed back to Amherst.

Owning the plate in the second game, UMass proved to be too much for the Red Knights' pitching staff, who went through three pitchers.

Against 11 batters, Lori Besser struck out none and walked none, lasting 1⅓ innings. Nikki Ambruso struck out none and walked two within two innings and 11 sluggers. Nicky Warmkessel finished the game striking out two and walking two against 12 batters.

Paving the way for UMass, Miller, 1-1, hit a home run with two on base. Marean, 3-5, delivered the game's second home run and added on two more RBIs. That fifth inning series put away the team's third home run of the season.

Other heavy hitters for UMass were Aprile, 4-4 with two singles and two RBIs; Sherri Kuchinskas, 2-3 with one single and a double for two RBIs; and Bush, 3-4 with three singles and three RBIs.

Senior Chris Collins went to town going 3-3, with one single, one triple and three RBIs. Senior Bonnie Schilling went 2-3 with two singles and two RBIs and freshman Heather Dorsey, 1-1 with a single.

UM baseball: 2 for 3 in weekend double headers

By GREG SUKIENNIK

You could call it an up and down weekend.

The University of Massachusetts baseball team saw both victory and defeat this past weekend, going 2-3 as of press time in doubleheaders against Maine, Dartmouth and Harvard. After being swept by the Black Bears 9-4, 9-6, UMass rebounded to split with Dartmouth, losing the first 4-1 and taking the second 9-8.

The Minutemen, 8-14-1 [at press time], then came back to win the first of two from Harvard at Earl Lorden Field, 5-4.

In Sunday afternoon's opener, the Minutemen came back from a 4-3 deficit in the seventh inning to pull out the victory.

Glenn DiSarcina led off the seventh with a single up the middle. Both Justin Howard and Lou Oliveri followed with clutch bunts. Oliveri bunted with two strikes and pinch-hitter John Carelli walked on four pitches, setting up Mike Tobin for a potential game winner.

Tobin left no doubt about the outcome, smacking a homerun over the right centerfield fence to end the contest.

"My hit was the easy one," credited Tobin of his teammates. "Howard and Oliveri hit those two bunts, and Carelli — he had the hard at-bat, trying to tie it. There wasn't as much pressure on me because they came through."

Villone, who relieved starter Jeff Toothaker in the seventh, got credit for the win. Sean Johnston took the loss for Harvard.

In the first game against Maine on Friday, UMass pitcher Jim Telgheder ran into difficulty early on, as Maine's leading hitter, Mark Sweeney, spanked a two-run homer in the first. Shaun Tobin followed with a double, and Gary Taylor hit a two-run dinger of his own to give Maine a 4-0 lead before the Minutemen had touched their bats.

Maine struck again in the third for three more runs, prompting UMass coach Mike Stone to pull Telgheder and insert Greg Dowd. Dowd pitched well, allowing only two more runs, but the Minutemen were unable to score after the third.

Maine pitcher Ed Therrian struggled in the first three innings, letting up a run in the first and second innings and two in the third. Mike Tobin scored a run and knocked in another for the Minutemen in a 2-for-3 performance.

In the second game, Maine erased a 3-1 UMass lead with a five-run fourth inning against starting pitcher Scott Meaney. After loading the bases with nobody out, Maine benefitted from a misplayed Gabe Duross grounder, a Greg King double and a Chad White two-run single to take the lead, 6-3.

"We've got to start getting people out quicker," said Stone. "We have to get better performances."

The Minutemen stormed back in their half of the fourth, when Justin Howard, the Minutemen's designated hitter, had his single with runners on first and second. Sweeney misplayed and Howard scored two runs. Howard moved to third on the miscue, and scored on Olivieri's ground out.

"I thought we hit the ball fairly well today," Stone said. "We just hit some shots right at people."

Maine's offense answered right back with a two run fifth inning that broke a 6-6 tie, as King hit a two-out, two-run double. Meaney (0-4) was pulled for Ron Villone, who finished the inning.

UMass never recovered to mount a serious threat off of either starter Jason Dryswak or reliever Chuck Nadeau, while Maine added an insurance run off of Villone in the sixth.

Howard had a big at-bat in the second inning, when he hit a three-run homer over the leftfield fence, erasing a 1-0 Maine lead. Howard knocked in two more runs with a deep triple in the fourth.

Against Dartmouth on Saturday, UMass was shut down in the first game by a seven-hit, seven-strikeout performance from Bob Bennett.

"The first game they had a good pitcher who had pitched on the [Cape Cod League], he shut us down," said Stone. "We only let up three hits . . . usually you're going to win when you only let up three hits."

Stone noted that UMass pitcher Rich Graham had a strong outing, despite absorbing the loss.

In the second game, UMass got more run support, as the Minutemen exploded for eight runs in the fourth inning. Derek Dana and Oliveri teamed up to do most of the damage, as Oliveri cracked a grand slam and Dana smacked a two-run homer.

"We swung the bats in the second game," Stone said. "Daryle Corriveau pitched a strong game. He pitched himself out of some jams and hung in there."

Minuteman Greg Dowd pitched in yesterday's second game against Harvard. He also faced Maine on Friday giving up two runs.

Painting stolen from library; reward offered

By PRESTON P. FORMAN
Collegian Staff

Officials of the Tower Library are offering a $200 reward to anyone with information leading to the arrest and conviction of the people responsible for the theft of a student-produced painting from the library last month.

The 6-by-4 foot horizontal oil painting, depicting African tribal figures, was located on the second floor landing of the library, one flight above the telephone lobby.

The art work, titled "Rhapsody on an African Theme," was painted in 1986 by Martin Ward. Police said the painting was cut with a sharp knife from its frame and taken sometime between 8 p.m. March 14 and the 12:30 a.m. the following morning.

University officials said the painting had an estimated value of $500.

The University Press Office said Ward was a 1987 graduate but the University Alumni Office and the Transcript Office had no record of his graduation.

Richard MacDonald, business manager for the Library, said library employees were shocked by the theft of the painting which was created in 1986 as part of the Mass Transformation project. Because of the high-profile location of the art work, MacDonald believes that whoever sliced the painting from the frame was assisted by a "look-out."

The $200 reward will be paid out of a small library trust fund, MacDonald said.

History professor Louis Greenbaum said members of the Faculty Senate Library Subcommittee, which he chairs, were "aghast and shocked" by the theft of the painting. He called the theft a blow to the opportunity of students to study in an aesthically-pleasing atmosphere.

"There is a lot of vandalism committed on this campus everyday but what really shocked us is that this theft was committed against the students," he said. "That is the real indignity of it all."

Greenbaum said the painting and most of the other murals and painting scattered throughout the walls, corridors and stairways in the tower were put up in 1986 during a community-wide effort called Mass Transformation.

The project was aimed at restoring the Tower Library after a seven-year period of partial occupancy and deterioration caused by structural problems and vandalism.

Greenbaum said that Mass Transformation was an "amazing enterprise" of faculty, staff, students and alumni that not only cleaned up the then graffiti-shrewn library but has kept it largely free of graffiti since.

"Now a painting in a conspicuous spot is gone. Everyone is diminished," he said. "Ultimately, it is the students who have been victimized by this theft."

Lt. Michael Grabiec of the Department of Public Safety's Detective Bureau said that in the past five years there have only been a "handful" of art thefts on the UMass campus.

Anyone with information concerning the location of this painting or about the theft is asked to contact the Detective Bureau at 545-0893.

Burn victim identified as UM student

25-year-old woman commits suicide by self-immolation in Conn.

By PRESTON P. FORMAN
Collegian Staff

Police in New Canaan, Conn. tentatively identified yesterday the body of a woman who burned herself to death Friday in a wooded area of a park as a 25-year-old University of Massachusetts student.

New Canaan officials believe that Adrienne M. Frazier, of 308 North Pleasant St. and a former resident of New Canaan, committed suicide by dousing her body in paint thinner and igniting herself. An emptied can of paint thinner and a burned schoolbook bag were found near her body, according to a report in the Stamford (Conn.) Advocate.

Frazier was enrolled in the College of Arts and Sciences and was a member of the class of 1991, University spokesperson Karin Sherbin said yesterday.
